THE MILITARY POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 494).

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably with an amendment Senate resolution 76, submitted by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was, in line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "one," and after the word "thousand" to strike out the words "five hundred," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the publication The Military Policy of the United States, by Byt. Maj. Gen. Emory Upton, United States Army, be printed as a document.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

JAMES S. ALEXANDER.

Mr. THORNTON. By direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back adversely the bill (S. 2510) for the relief of former Paymaster's Clerk James S. Alexander, and I submit a report (No. 550) thereon. On behalf of the committee I request that the committee's report be published in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, action upon the bill will be indefinitely postponed, and the request for printing the report in the RECORD will be complied with.

The report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 550, Sixty-second Congress, second session.] JAMES S. ALEXANDER.

Mr. Thornton, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following adverse report to accompany S. 2510:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2510) for the relief of former Paymaster's Clerk James S. Alexander, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The views of the Navy Department are appended and made a part of this report, as follows:

this report, as follows:

Department of the Navy,
Washington, June 27, 1911.

My Dear Senator: Referring to your letter dated May 26, 1911, inclosing a bill (S. 2510) for the relief of former Paymaster's Clay
James S. Alexander, and requesting the department's opinion thereon, I have the honor to inform you that it appears that James S. Alexander was appointed January S. 1862, and served as pay steward on the Oneard to October 28, 1862, when he was discharged. His subsequent service, all of which was in the capacity of pay clerk, was as follows:

Place of duty.	Date of appointment.	Date of revo-
Wamsutta. Massasoit. Roanoke Albany. Congress. Monocacy. Franklin Swatara. New York, League Island Adams. New York, League Island. Naval Home, Philadephia	Sept. 10, 1865 Feb. 5, 1870 June 5, 1870 Dec. 16, 1876 July 19, 1877 Jan. 1, 1880 Oct. 23, 1885	Oct. 23,1863 Aug. 13,1864 Aug. 19,1865 Nov. 27,1860 Apr. 26,1870 Nov. 5,1873 May 1,1877 Dec. 15,1878 Mar. 23,1885 Apr. 19,1893 Apr. 9,1892 Nov. 30,1898

This record shows that Mr. Alexander has had in all about 31 years' service, of which about 30 years has been as a paymaster's clerk. He is not now in the Navy. Recent legislation has provided for the retirement of paymasters' clerks who, in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the retirement of officers of the Navy, have become eligible to the benefits thereof. The object of this bill is to give-Mr. Alexander, although out of the service, the same privilege of retirement as though he were not now separated therefrom.

Inasmuch as the enactment of special legislation of this character would furnish a most undesirable precedent in undoubtedly numerous other cases in which similar congressional favor would be sought, and, furthermore, as it is not believed to be consistent with good policy to increase the numbers on the retired list by the transfer of individuals thereto who do not come within the provisions of existing law, and as nothing appears on the record of Mr. Alexander sufficiently meritorious to make an exception in his favor, the department recommends that favorable action be not taken on this measure in his behalf.

Faithfully, yours,

BEEKMAN WINTHROP,

Acting Secretary of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS, United States Senate.

This is a special bill for the relief of former Paymaster's Clerk James S. Alexander, the object of the bill being to place him upon the retired list of the Navy with the retired pay of a paymaster's clerk of like length of service. By reference to the opinion of the department your committee finds that there has been recent legislation providing for the retirement of paymaster's clerks, who, in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the retirement of officers of the Navy, have been eligible to the benefits of said legislation.

The committee finds further that Mr. Alexander has not been in the service since 1898, and if this special legislation in his favor was passed it would be equivalent to allowing him, although long since out of the service, the privilege of retiring from it on the same allowance that he would have if he had not left the service vears ago, and in this way avail himself of legislation that is intended solely for the benefit of those who are now in the service and desire to retire from it in conformity with existing legislation.

In the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy the passage of this bill would create a precedent in numerous other cases in which congressional favor would be sought, which would not be desirable: nor is it thought good policy to increase the numbers on the retired list by the transfer thereto of individuals who would not come within the provisions of existing laws.

The report also states that nothing appears on the record in connection with any special meritorious service on the part of Mr. Alexander to justify an exception being made in his favor, and the department recommends adverse action on the bill. Under the facts as disclosed in the record and in view of the reasoning of the department, which seems to be eminently sound, your committee is compelled to report unfavorably on the bill.

EMPLOYEES OF COMMON CARRIERS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 553) thereon. I give notice that on Monday next, or as soon thereafter as the business of the Senate will permit, I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

I ask that 2,500 additional copies of the report be printed for the use of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to say that the report is not for the entire Committee on the Judiciary, and I ask leave on behalf of myself at some convenient time to make a minority report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will have leave to file minority views, without objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Utah if he will not be willing that a portion of the extra copies shall go to the document room, say 1,000, and that 1,500 be printed for the use of the committee.

Mr. SUTHERIAND. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. Fifteen hundred copies for the use of the committee and 1,000 for the document room.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order will be modified as indicated. The bill will be placed on the

The order as agreed to was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That 2,500 additional copies be printed of the report on the bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, of which 1,500 shall be for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary and 1,000 for the Senate document room.

MEMORIAL AMPHITHEATER AT ARLINGTON.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yesterday I reported favorably from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the bill (S. 4780) for the erection of a memorial amphitheater at Arlington Cemetery. The report contained certain illustrations, and I am informed it requires an order of the Senate before they can be printed. The plates for the illustrations are already in the hands of the Printing Office. I therefore ask that such authorization as may be precessary be given to have that such authorization as may be necessary be given to have those illustrations included in the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

The order as agreed to was reduced to writing, as follows: Ordered, That the Illustrations accompanying Senate Report No. 542, "For the erection of a memorial amphitheater at Arlington Cemetery," be printed in said report.

TROPHY FLAGS.

Mr. SWANSON. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15471) making appropriation for repair, preservation, and exhibition of the trophy flags now in store at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 549) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if this is a Senate or a House bill?

Mr. SWANSON. It is a bill that has passed the House, and it is reported favorably by the Committee on Naval Affairs of Mr. SMOOT. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. SWANSON. It is a unanimous report. The bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAX UPON WHITE PHOSPHORUS MATCHES.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20842) to provide for a tax upon white phosphorus matches, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to prescribe such regulations may be necessary to the united States and white phosphorus matches. Any person guilty of violation of this section shall be fined not less than $1,000 and not more than $5,000, and any white phosphorus matches x. Any person guilty of violation of this section shall be fined not less than $1,000 and not more than $5,000, and any white phosphorus matches copreted or attempted to be exported shall be confiscated to the United States and Treasury, who shall have power to issue such regulations to customs officers as are necessary to the enforcement of this section.

SEC. 12. That every manufacturer of matches shall mark, brand, affix, stamp, or print, in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, on every persons of white phosphorus matches manufactured, sold, or removed by him, the factory number required mark, brand, affix, stamp, or print such factor

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, neither the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] nor any other Senator in this body can make any defense of this measure, frankly avowing the purpose of it. The only defense of it that can be made is predicated, and the argument in favor of it is predicated, upon the false pretense that it is a revenue measure. The Senator from Massachusetts does not expect, and does not desire, to raise any revenue under its provisions. The whole purpose of it is, under the guise of a Federal tax, to invade the States and usurp their police powers. The Senator from Massachusetts thinks it wrong to permit people to work in match factories with this material; and, being unable to persuade the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to enact a law prohibiting it, he comes to the Federal Congress to procure a law taxing it to a full prohibition.

I have received several telegrams during the last few days in favor of this bill, but I have not a single one with any argument in it, or suggestion in it, except that it was inhuman to permit men and women to engage in the work of making matches with this substance. I am not an expert on that ques-tion. If I were a member of a State legislature and authorized to exercise a wise and judicious police power, I would strive to inform myself, and if I believed it was a dangerous or unwholesome employment, I would, without the slightest hesitation, vote directly to prohibit it; but, sir, the Government of the United States possesses no police power, certainly possesses no general police power, and every time it seeks to exercise such a power under the guise of taxation it practices a miserable and a false pretense.

I invite my friends from the South especially to remember that it was on precisely this kind of a false pretense that our cottonseed-oil products were discriminated against in favor of the dairies. I think an experience of 9 or 10 years has about convinced those who advocated that legislation that they have not only done cottonseed-oil products a grave injury, but they have done perhaps a still graver injury to the millions of industrious poor who are compelled to pay a higher price for poor butter than they then were compelled to pay for wholesome oleomargarine. If we can tax this industry out of existence, then we can select for destruction and destroy any industry which a majority of the two Houses of Congress may condemn. I think the Senator from Massachusetts will not say that the match, after it is made, is not a fit subject for interstate commerce. It is the process of making it against which these people inveigh, and they simply seek to prohibit that industry under the pre-

Mr. President, I have no doubt that if the Federal Government possessed the power to regulate the manufacture of matches, or if it possessed the power to prohibit the manufacture of matches, then it could enforce its regulation or its prohibition by a tax as well as by any other method.

Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to undertake to controvert the Senator's constitutional argument, but I want to suggest to the Senator that the contention is not only against the manufacture of these matches, but against their poisonous nature after they are manufactured.

Mr. BAILEY. I have seen no suggestion of that kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yesterday I received a letter from a good woman whom I have known for many years

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, yes, Mr. President, when the labor organizations and the women get through running this Congress, there will not be a shred of the Constitution left. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me to conclude my sentence-

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I received a letter from a very good woman, whom I have known for many years, who stated to me, "My dear little girl, aged 9 years, has just died from eating phosphorus from a certain kind of matches."

Mr. BAILEY. If she had found a bottle of poison and drank that she would have died.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, if the Senator will permit me further, there are innumerable such cases recorded. this substance is a very great menace to child life. I do not know that that ought to have any potency in this argument, but it goes a little further than the manufacture of these matches.

Mr. BAILEY. Upon that theory we ought to tax pins out of existence, for children have swallowed them and died.

Mr. GALLINGER. Hardly that.
Mr. BAILEY. And a child may take, with disastrous results, medicine useful in cases of sickness. The doctor is giving me medicine now which I do think would not be very safe for a child to take, and I would have been in bed this moment if I had not felt it to be my duty to come here this morning to offer some amendments to the river and harbor bill, and I was just leaving the Chamber to go back home and to go to bed when the Senator from Massachusetts called up this monstrosity, and, although I have no hope of defeating it, I was not willing to see it passed without recording my protest and denouncing it for what it is—a false pretense.

Mr. President, if this particular match is not a merchantable commodity, then I will grant you that you have the power to prohibit its introduction into interstate commerce. But that is not the purpose; the purpose is to prevent a peculiar disease, which physicians tell us originates from working in factories where this particular substance is used in the manufacture of matches. I have always found the Senator from Massachusetts frank, and I am going to ask him if it is not the purpose of this bill to prevent the use of that substance in the manufacture of matches?

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly it is supposed that the effect of the tax will be to prevent the use of white phosphorus in the manufacture of matches.

Mr. BAILEY. And that is the very purpose of the bill, is it

Mr. LODGE. The purpose of the bill is to levy a tax upon them.

Mr. BAILEY. That is not the purpose of the bill; that is merely the means of accomplishing its purpose,

Mr. LODGE. No-

Mr. BAILEY. Let me put it to the Senator in this way— Mr. LODGE. The real purpose of the bill—of course I am not going to-

Mr. BAILEY. I knew the Senator would not conceal the real purpose.

Mr. LODGE. I have no idea of trying to equivocate or anything of that kind.

Mr. BAILEY. I knew the Senator would not, and that is the reason I asked him.

Mr. LODGE. The real purpose of the bill is to destroy an industry that ought to be destroyed.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. President, who is to judge of that—the Government of the United States or the States in which these industries are conducted? Mr. LODGE. I think that we must be the judge of it, because it is utterly and hopelessly impracticable to get 46 States to put an end to this industry.

Mr. BAILEY. That sounds like an echo of an ex-President of the United States, who has told us that whenever the States would not do their duty the Federal Government ought to do it

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me to complete my sentence

Mr. BAILEY. I will. Mr. LODGE. I was going to say that I think nothing worse to the Constitution could be done than to have it said that neither through the States nor through the United States can we put a stop to an abuse. It is just that sort of thing that is bringing on the agitation against the Constitution of the United States, which I, in common with the Senator from Texas, deplore.

Mr. BAILEY. But the trouble is that the "agitators" all adopt the Senator's view of it. I am glad to hear him designate them as "agitators," although that includes his warm, personal, and sometime political friend, the ex-President of the United States, who, in my opinion, is about the most pernicious of these agitators at this time [laughter], and there is not one of those whom he so aptly describes as "agitators" who does not contend for this same doctrine.

Mr. President, human life is precious, and the right to live is sacred. But suppose a State of this Union were to repeal its laws against homicide and leave every man to defend himself in the good old way. Suppose it were to repeal all of its laws against theft and remit us to the good old way-

* * The simple plan.
That they should take who have the power,
And they should keep who can—would the Senator from Massachusetts come here and say: "The State of Massachusetts, having repealed its laws against homicide and its laws against theft, I invoke the power of the Federal Congress to lay a tax on killing men and on theft"?

Yet that is precisely a parallel case with this. Here is something which analytic facilities with the control of the power of thing which ought to be forbidden.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, it is not proposed to export the murderer or the thief. But the State that allows the making of these poisonous matches, and permits the industry to go on, exports them into every other State in the Union.
Mr. BAILEY. The Senator has just said that the purpose is not to prevent their exportation in interstate commerce, but it is to prevent their manufacture.

Mr. LODGE. To prevent their manufacture; and if they are not manufactured they can not enter into interstate commerce.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course, if they are not manufactured they can not be introduced into interstate commerce.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely. Mr. BAILEY. But the States are entitled to determine whether or not they shall be manufactured and the Federal Government can determine whether or not they are fit subjects for interstate and foreign commerce. If the Senator will say they are not fit subjects for interstate and foreign commerce, let him write that in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think so.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator think they are not fit subjects, or does he think he ought not to write it in the bill?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think we can do it under that power. Mr. BAILEY. Then the Senator is evading, he is cheating, the Constitution.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think so. Mr. BAILEY. Of course the Senator does not think so, or he would not do it.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but this matter has all been passed on in the oleomargarine case.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, yes; and I stood here for two days and tried to defeat that bill. I have been spending my life trying to defeat measures of this kind, but I have never defeated any of them yet, and that is one of the reasons I am glad to retire from the Senate. I am sick almost to death of having men stand here and vote one way, and then tell me in the cloakroom that I was really right on the principle, but the practical good was so-and-so, and it overruled the principle. I utterly reject that philosophy. I do not believe that any real or permanent good was ever accomplished in this world by violating a sound principle of government or morals.

If the Federal Government has a right to prevent the manufacture of matches by this process, it has a right to prevent the manufacture of any other commodity by any process which falls under the condemnation of its judgment or its caprice.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this bill comes from the House and has been favorably reported from the Committee on Finance. It has been reported without amendment and without change.

Mr. BAILEY. As I am a member of that committee, I will ask the Senator's permission to say that I was not at the meeting of the committee when the bill was reported.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator was not present. I did not say it was a unanimous report.

Mr. BAILEY. No.

Mr. LODGE. The injury caused by the manufacture of the white phosphorus match, the hideous disease that it brings on in the persons of those employed, who are chiefly women and girls, is a matter that needs no enlargement from me. It is well known and is accepted as a fact. The disease which it causes is a most horrible one. Every other civilized nation, so far as I have been able to learn, has prohibited the manufac-ture of these matches. Great Britain tried for some 10 years to deal with their manufacture by regulation, found that impossible, and finally prohibited it. These matches are also extremely poisonous, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] has pointed out, and lead to many cases of poisoning among children and others. These are the reasons for the action of the House.

The disease, I may say, is caused by the fumes of the phosphorus, which is very volatile. The fumes get into the mouths of the people engaged at this work and gradually decay the jawbone, so that they lose all of the jawbone. The disease causes great suffering and is of the most hideous and awful character.

I think we may say that this is something that ought to be stopped, as all other nations have stopped it. It is utterly impracticable, as the House report states, and as everyone must know, to suppose-

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to make an inquiry there?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. Mr. BAILEY. Can the Senator tell us what percentage of the people who engage in this labor have this peculiar and horrible disease?

Mr. LODGE. I read from the House report, which contains some facts in regard to it:

An investigation conducted in 1909 by the Bureau of Labor as to necrosis in 3 typical factories yielded some $2 serious cases. Of these 23 occurred between 1900 and 1905 and 26 since 1905. The records of all these cases are on file in the United States Bureau of Labor. At present there are 21 match factories in operation in the United States, located in 10 different States. Of some 3,400 employees in 15 of these match factories about 1,400 were found to be women; 95 per cent of the women were working under conditions exposing them to the poisonous fumes of phosphorus; 82 per cent of the children and 44 per cent of the men employed were likewise exposed.

Those are the facts taken from the Bureau of Labor.

Mr. BAILEY. It then appears that 82 cases out of several hundred employes have occurred in 12 years. The occupation is not nearly so dangerous, then, as the glass-blower's occupation. My understanding is that the glass-blower's trade is practically certain to curtail human life.

Mr. LODGE. The report also says:

A hasty investigation of 2 of the 6 factories operated by this company, and inquiries here and there in the neighborhood, disclosed more than 60 cases, of which not less than 45 were serious, resulting in deformity or death.

There has been no system of reporting, so that it is impossible to get the exact percentage; but there is no doubt of the danger of the disease or of its dreadful character.

It is utterly impracticable to get all the States to pass uniform legislation on this subject. It would take many, many years to do it if it could ever be done at all.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me, many States would not need it. I think there is not a single match factory in the State from which I come.

Mr. LODGE. Then they would move to the States where there was not such a law.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well; then we would move them out if they moved into our State. We could do that.

Mr. LODGE. And they could ship matches into the State anyway. I think it is impracticable. I think everybody must see that it is impracticable.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator let me ask him this question: Where does the Federal Government derive its power to destroy an occupation in a State because that occupation may injure the health of the people engaged in it? I grant you that if these matches, when committed to interstate commerce, communicated disease as they passed from one State to the other, under the authorities the Federal Government might suppress interstate commerce in them. But, as I understand, there is no claim of that kind here. The whole damage is done in the factory

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; the whole damage is not done in the factory, by any means.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator can not find a single instance where any person has been afflicted with this peculiar disease, except the match-factory operatives.

Mr. LODGE. The disease of which I was speaking comes from working in the factory, but the matches are very destructive of life. There is plenty of testimony on that point.

Mr. BAILEY. Matches burn up houses. A Senator who sat near me a moment ago suggested that only yesterday he saw a box of matches ignite in a gentleman's pocket, and it came very near burning him up. That is a danger which men must take. But it is so infinitesimal that I do not believe any State yet has thought it necessary to pass a law against carrying a box of matches in your pocket.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I will read another bit of testimony given before the House committee. Dr. John B. Andrews, secretary of the American Association for Labor Legislation, at the hearing of January 10, 1912, in answer to an inquiry as to how many cases of necrosis he had seen in the course of his investigation, said:

I have personally investigated about 150 cases in this country—that is, I have secured the records of these cases, have gone to the people, and talked with them. I have talked to the match manufacturers. I have gone to the hospitals and talked to the medical men and dentits.

* * I should say I personally have seen, perhaps, 50 cases of phossy jaw. I have also seen many people who are employees of match factories suffering as a result of the poisoning. I am confident of that, because their teeth became brittle and decayed more rapidly than they ordinarily should. * * * Most of them (phossy-jaw sufferers) are very reluctant, as you can imagine, to have their photographs taken or to be brought to public attention in any way. They are so horribly deformed that they feel that way about it; but this man [presenting B. Plaza, from Passaic, N. J.] was more fortunate than many of them. This man went to the Passaic General Hospital for 59 days, and he had his lower jaw entirely removed—the whole bone was taken out—and since this man has offered to do all he could in the interest of wiping out this terrible disease. In one of the most recently investigated factories, employing only about 20 people, 3 have had their jaws cut out during the last three years.

So much as to the character of the disease. I return to the

So much as to the character of the disease. I return to the point I was making. It is impracticable to get this result by State legislation. Unless the United States Government acts, nothing can be done.

Mr. BAILEY. Where does it get the power to act?
Mr. LODGE. I will come to that in one moment. Unless the United States Government acts, we shall be put in a position that no other civilized nation on earth occupies; that, owing to technicalities under the Constitution, we can not put a stop to an industry which has the most hideous results on those engaged in it, and we are the only civilized nation that can not do it.

The Government has the power of taxation. I admit that it should be very rarely used for any such purpose as this; but it has been used. It was used in the case of oleomargarine. I want to recall to the Senate what the House committee quotes—the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of McCray v. The United States, upholding the constitutionality of the tax on artificially colored oleomargarine.

Mr. BAILEY. That is upon the ground that they can not inquire into the motives of the Senators in voting for it.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely. In that case the Supreme Court

Since, as pointed out in all the decisions referred to, the taxing power conferred by the Constitution knows no limit except those expressly stated in that instrument, it must follow if a tax be within the lawful power the exertion of that power may not be judicially restrained because of the results to arise from its exercise.

There is no doubt that we can put a tax on matches. That was done repeatedly in the internal-revenue acts during the Civil War. We can put an internal-revenue tax on matches. If we put one on and it extinguishes a particular kind of industry, that is the result of the tax, undoubtedly; but it does not impair our power to impose a tax.

It seems to me this is one of those cases where it is absolutely necessary, in the interest of humanity, to take the only course we can to put an end to an industry which destroys people in a horrible and deforming manner.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. Let me continue for one moment, Mr. President, and then I will yield.

When I refer to destroying the industry I mean that it will destroy the use of white phosphorus in the industry. The industry of making matches will go on just the same. The manufacturers will simply adopt another process. There are healthful processes. The manufacturers have no objection to using them if they are all put on one plane.

The Diamond Match Co., which has what is known as the sesquisulphide process, which was a patented process, and is a harmless one, has filed with the Commissioner of Patents a certificate renouncing all rights under its patent, and that process is now open to everybody. The red pho harmless. That can be used by everybody. The red phosphorus is perfectly

All the match factories that are now manufacturing matches can continue to do so. The bill does not injure one of them. It only prevents their using a deadly process, which is employed simply because it is a little cheaper. The bill will not increase the price of the match. The change in the process is so trifling that it will not increase the price, but it will save an immense amount of human misery and suffering.

I now yield to the Senator from Ohio. Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has just answered one question which I intended to ask him. That is to say, he has shown that matches can be made out of substances other than white phosphorus.

Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I am in entire sympathy with the spirit of this bill. I want to ask the Senator, further, why does he postpone the date upon which this act shall take effect? I notice that section 17 provides:

That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1913, except as previously provided in this act; and except as to its application to the sale or removal of white phosphorus matches by the manufacturers, as to which it shall take effect on January 1, 1915.

What is the purpose of deferring the date?

Mr. LODGE. The purpose of delay in the House bill, which is the same as our bill, was simply to give the manufacturers an opportunity to adjust their factories to the requirements of the new processes

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator feel that it is necessary to delay it so long?

Mr. LODGE. It is delayed until July 1, 1913-practically one Mr. BAILEY. Why do you let them kill people for a year?

Mr. POMERENE. In the Senator's judgment, is it necessary to delay it so long as July 1, 1913?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am not at all set on that delay, if the Senate desires to make a change in that respect. But the House gave very great attention to this matter, and the bill seemed to me very well prepared. I thought the object of giving a year's delay was simply, as I say, to allow the manufacturers to adjust their business to it. I fancy if this bill becomes a law there will be very few of these matches either put on the market or made.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the manufacture of phosphorus matches for two years. When this horrid disease or condition was first brought to me it seemed to be utterly impossible that it could exist in a civilized community, and I say now that it would be little short of a crime did not the Senate do all it could to stamp out this horrid condition.

The Senator from Texas asks what is the purpose of the bill. I say the purpose is not revenue, but the purpose is humanity, and in Heaven's name I appeal to you as fair-minded, intelligent Senators to do all you can to aid in the passage of the bill.

We are told that it is not constitutional. Great heaven, the Constitution of the United States has stood a worse strain than this, and I am willing to take the chance at this time. As to the horrid condition of "phossy jaw," should you once see a case, I say there is no Senator who would stand in his place and plead the claims of constitutionality or any other claim in extenuation of it. I once saw a case of "phossy jaw." Women and children mainly are the employees. The fumes of the phosphorus settle in their bones, particularly it settles in the teeth of those who have decayed teeth, and ultimately it is communicated to their bones, until I have seen the bone of the right cheek of one of the operatives absolutely eaten away.

I have been much interested in it. There is an article which appears in Everybody's of April, "Matches or men," under the nom de plume Gordon Thayer. It is a nom de plume, I will say, for I know the young woman who is the author of it. She is a neighbor of mine, and has sought and ferreted out the condition and cases that are most horrid to portray. Let me read just a little of this article for the benefit of the Senate. The following question is asked of the foreman of a phosphorusmatch company in the United States:

"Is the health of your operatives good?"
"We have no cases on us," he answers; "but I've only been here a We ha

"We have no cases on us," he answers; "but I've only been here a short time."

"You have, however, been working at matchmaking before?"

"I've been at it 15 years."

"And in that time you've seen sickness among the workers?"

"You don't ever need to ask that question," he answers. "There isn't anyone in the business who hasn't seen it. If they tell you anything different, they lie."

The foreman's manner suddenly loses its apathy. "I'll never forget my first case," he says, with a shudder. "I've never been the same since. It's always there. I know the thing is there. I know it all the day long. I see it at night. I can't forget it. He'd been in the same factory with me. They told me what was the matter, but I didn't understand them. I went to see him. The windows of the room were wide open, but I could scarcely stay to hear him talk. He couldn't talk, really; just a kind of a mumble. But I understood. He put his fingers into his mouth before my eyes and pulled out a piece of jawbone near an inch and a half long. I ran away from him then. I've been seeing it ever since. I've been smelling it ever since."

He said he never could forget the loathsome, horrid sight nor the horrid stench.

Now, my fellow Senators, this is not a question of profit or money, nor do I believe it is a question in which the Constitution is affected, but it is a clear case of humanity, and whether laboring men and women advocate it or not, I care not: I am willing to submit the case to the laboring men and women. It will make for good and for humanity and for justice over the tyranny of a greedy money power that is pressing the present method of manufacture of phosphorus matches.

I trust with all my heart that we may have a unanimous vote upon the part of the Senate on the other side of the Chamber as well as on this side.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, as between the Constitution and humanity I have long been aware that the Constitution stands small chance. But still there are a few of us living out of our time and lagging superfluous on the stage who believe that humanity remains still with the States and that the Constitution abides with the Congress of the United States.

The Senator from Massachusetts read a sentence, I think it was only a sentence, from the opinion of the court in the oleomargarine case.

If any Senator feels interest enough in this question to examine that opinion, he will find that the court predicated its decision upon the theory that Congress having the power to levy taxes, it is not competent for the court to attempt to search the hearts of Congressmen to determine the purpose for which they levy them. That has long been the doctrine of that court, and I am free to say that it is a doctrine to which I have never fully subscribed.

I believe that if a citizen of the United States can allege and prove that Congress passed a law to serve a purpose not within its powers the court ought to hear those facts and determine the law of that case upon the facts of it as they determine the law of nearly all other cases upon the facts of them.

But whatever my opinion may be about that, the rule is too well established now to be successfully assailed, and I know perfectly well that if Congress passes this act, and it is challenged in the courts, the courts will sustain it precisely as they sustained the oleomargarine act.

The tax on matches amounts to 2 cents a hundred, or 20 cents a thousand. These matches retail for 5 cents a thousand. The tax, therefore, is four times the present price of the matches. It would be a curious court that did not, in its own consciousness, understand that the purpose of this bill is not to raise revenue, because it is perfectly apparent, I might almost say on the face of it that its authors and supporters do not expect and desire to raise revenue under it.

In the case of the internal-revenue tax on matches, to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers, the purpose was to raise revenue, and the tax was fixed according to that purpose. Here the purpose is avowed by the Senator from Massachusetts, and if I were permitted to refer in this body to what has transpired in the other House I could say that the proponents and advocates of the measure there were equally as candid as the Senator from Massachusetts has been with the Senate.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that unless we can pass legislation of this kind we are the only civilized country in the world thus disabled. Does not the Senator from Massachusetts know that we are the only civilized country in the world with this particular kind of a Constitution, and that it is this particular kind of a Constitution which disables us?

Mr. LODGE. Well, Mr. President, I do not think it does disable us

Mr. BAILEY. It would if you did practice a fraud upon it.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will pardon me-

Mr. BAILEY. In just a moment. Let me put this question to the Senator from Massachusetts: Does the Senator from Massachusetts: sachusetts believe that the Supreme Court of the United States would sustain this act if it declared that no match manufacturer should use this particular substance in the manufacture of his matches?

Mr. LODGE. No: because I do not suppose we could place that under any granted power of the Constitution. Mr. BAILEY. Under which one do you place this?

Mr. LODGE. We place it under the taxing power.

But it is perversion of the taxing power, and Mr. BAILEY. you only escape because the court can not inquire into your purpose in levying the tax.

Mr. LODGE. But the Senator—
Mr. BAILEY. The Senator does not deny that.
Mr. LODGE. I do not deny that it is being used for the purpose of repressing the use of a poisonous article.

Mr. BAILEY. In other words, you do not deny that it is being used to accomplish a purpose which we have no power to accomplish directly.

Mr. LODGE. I think we have no power to accomplish it in any other way. It did not occur to me.

Mr. BAILEY. And the only reason w And the only reason we can accomplish it this way is that the court says it can not search our minds for the motive which governs our votes.

Mr. LODGE. The court goes a little further than that, if the Senator will allow me a moment. The court also said in the McCray case:

The court can not hold a tax void because it is deemed too high. Although the effect of the tax in question may be to repress the manufacture of artificially colored oleomargarine, it is not on that account a violation of fundamental rights. An act of Congress exerting the taxing power can not be avoided on the ground that it is an abuse of

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, certainly not. Mr. LODGE. And then in Veazie Bank v. Fenno they said: The power to tax may be exercised oppressively upon persons, but the responsibility of the legislature is not to the court, but to the people by whom its members are elected.

Mr. BAILEY. The legislature ought to be profoundly thankful that it is not responsible to a court.

Mr. LODGE. The court held we have the right to do it. Mr. BAILEY. No; the court has held that it has no no Mr. BAILEY. No; the court has held that it has no power to say we have done it for an unconstitutional purpose. That is all the court has said.

In the case of Veazie Bank v. Fenno, the question was different. The court there said that the Federal Government has the power to create a national currency, and the Congress may tax out of existence

Mr. LODGE. I understand that.

Mr. BAILEY. Anything which obstructs the exercise of that

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I understand, of course, that the tax on State bank circulation rests on a different ground. I understand that perfectly; and it was only that definition of the responsibility to the legislature that I wished

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if there are ever any political opinions displayed in the Supreme Court of the United States, as sometimes happens to be the case, I would only remind the Senator from Massachusetts that the only two Democrats on the bench at that time both dissented from the judgment of the court in the Veazie Bank case, holding also that the Government of the United States had no power to tax those State bank notes out of existence. I myself think that the better reasoning was with the minority of the court. Certainly it was a better reasoning from a Democratic point of view.

But we come back at last to the proposition which the Senator from Massachusetts admits, and that is that Congress can not directly prohibit the use of white phosphorus in the manufacture of matches. The Senator from Massachusetts, advised by the learned lawyer who sits near him, admits that a direct prohibition of that kind would be fatal to the bill; but he prohibits it as effectively by this tax as if they put a prison sentence upon the manufacturer. The prohibition is as effective in the indirect case as it could be made in the direct case; but if Congress should write in the face of this bill what it desires to do, what it intends to do, and what the bill is drawn to do, it would not stand judicial scrutiny. Therefore it imposes upon the court. It circumvents the Constitution by pretending to do what it was never intended to do.

Now, if Senators are willing to trifle with the Constitution that way, I think we ought to amend it and take out of it the oath that solemnly pledges us to obey it. To circumvent it is no more permissible than to violate it; except, if you have the manliness and the courage and the directness to violate it, there is a court still left in this land with power to set your

How long it will sit I am not, of course, able to say. How long its deliberate judgments will be permitted to stand against this general and indiscriminate attack upon our courts no man can venture to say. It may be that they will leave the court and content themselves with recalling its decisions; but until that day does come there is a court there under an oath as high and solemn as the one we took to enforce the Constitution, and I defy the advocates of this bill to write upon its face the purpose which it is intended to accomplish. They dare not do it; it would not be worth the paper upon which it is written, and no man knows it better than the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. President, I suppose that when they appeal to us in the name of stricken humanity all Senators hear that appeal with sympathy, and I hope none will with a tenderer and a quicker sympathy than I do. But, sir, above the sympathy for those who suffer, above pity for the unfortunate, stands the duty of American Senators to obey the Constitution of the United

I am one of the few men who admire what is generally considered the most odious character in all of Shakespeare's I admire Shylock because when he took the bond he demanded no more than its fulfillment; and when they tempted him with more than the double return of his money, animosity asserted itself as superior to his avarice, and turning a deaf ear to those who would bribe him to surrender the rights nominated in his bond, he said to the judge: "I crave the law." And when again entreated, he still stood firm and answered: "I stand here on my bond." Whoever can say that to the upright and learned judges of this land is always secure against my prejudice.

I sometimes believe that the great dramatist intended to exhibit this character in two of its strongest lights. First, his avarice. He seemed to love his money better than he did his daughter, because it came nearer breaking his heart that she had run away with his ducats than it did that she had run away with Lorenzo. Yet, after his pitiful lament over his daughter's flight had subsided and he wanted his revenge against the gentile who had railed against his sacred nation, he craved the law; and it is the best disproof of the Baconian theory of Shakespeare that they cheated the Jew out of his bond by a subterfuge which would never have been tolerated by any court in Christendom.

But they allowed that subterfuge to be palmed off upon the learned judge by one of the suffragettes of that day. brought into the courthouse a girl. Some lawyers had instructed her before she appeared, and she decided, as a friend of the court, that the Jew was entitled to his bond; but that although he might take the flesh, he could take no blood with it, when every system of jurisprudence, modern or ancient, enlightened or ignorant, has always held that whenever you contract for a thing you contract also for everything necessary to carry out that contract. So if he had a right to take the flesh, he had a right to let the blood flow with it. We have revived the pagan doctrine. We can invent subterfuges to defeat the bonds we give; we can invent subterfuges to circumvent the Constitution, which we have sworn to support.

Mr. President, it may seem a heartless thing to say, but I think it would be better to close up every match factory in the United States and go back to the time when our fathers struck fire from flint than it would be to practice this kind of a fraud upon the Constitution of our country.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have been giving some practical attention to this question while the theories have been developed. First, I find that in this chamber of justice and statecraft we are freely using this match [exhibiting]. If some of the literature which has been sent me—and there has been a great deal-is correct in its statements and conclusions. then I should have necrosis of the jaw by this time. I find upon an examination that if you will separate the head of one of these matches the substance under the white cap will first ignite. This is evidently a shield to an inflammable, combustible head upon which it rests. I am not inclined to believe in the deadliness of everything that some one proclaims to be deadly until I have examined it a little.

The making of matches is within the recollection of most of us, or of many of us. When the old Swift & Courtney match was first made I remember being very much interested upon visiting a factory to see the method by which the sticks were put in a hopper and the room became a mass of flying splinters, which were being gathered by girls upon forms, very much as printers gather their type. When a given number of them were in place, they were clamped, sent along on a slide, tilted over, and dipped. That was the old process, and that was a great The fact is they were pioneers in the manufacture

I remember before that it was the lucifer match. It is interesting to note the derivation of the name of that match. Phosphorus is supposed to be the equivalent of the words "the morning light." John the Baptist was called "Phosphorus." That is a fact. If any of you will refer to the authorities, you will find that the word "phosphorus" has always been the synonym of "morning light." So the manufacturer of the phosphorus match took that as its name.

Then we all remember, or many of us remember, when it was called the lucifer match. It came in a brown paper package, and there used to be a 1-cent stamp on it during the Civil That was the old lucifer match, which preceded the parlor match made by Swift & Courtney.

The substance into which matches are dipped has been long in use. It is all phosphorus, except under different conditions. subjected myself to the fumes and the blaze of this white cap [indicating], which the Senate of the United States is distributing, at least among its Members. Every man who lights a cigar or a cigarette with one of these matches gets a closer contagion than the girls or persons who dip them. They are not dipped by hand, but they are dipped by machinery. The person dipping them does not come in contact with them. They are dipped in a fastened flat case, something after the style of the printer's type, and tilted so as to just reach a certain distance into the phosphorus or the mixture.

The disease which is termed "necrosis" means death and nothing else, does it not—death to anything? This is the very root of the expression meaning death. You may die partially, your finger nail may die and come off, but it does not follow that the whole human structure is dead; and the people who have been writing me have been writing long letters, probably not well advised, that the very fact that this would produce necrosis meant that it would kill people. I have seen those horrible pictures that were sent out.

I would control the use of such substances just as we control the use of deadly drugs in the pure-food and drug act.

Mr. LODGE. Opium, for instance.
Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; opium. I would control it; I would not allow it to be-

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, in the case of opium, to which he has just alluded, we passed legislation to exterminate, so far as we could, the traffic in opium.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but that is not a food. Mr. LODGE. That was not for the purpose of raising revenue.

Mr. HEYBURN. That was not food; but if we can control opium, we can control this white phosphorus. It is merely produced under a different temperature; that is all. Phosphorus is used in many ways by the human family.

I suggested, if I may take the liberty of saying so to the Senator from Massachusetts, that I had some doubt as to whether or not we would best undertake to control this by taxation or whether we would control it as we controlled opium and deadly drugs. We can safely do that, because we have done it, and the courts have sustained it. Neither opium nor matches can be classed as foods, but they are substances that, if taken into the human system, destroy at least a part of it.

I would very much rather keep within the higher principle of legislation advocated by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Balley] and not have any question as to our constitutional right to do it. I think we can do it without subterfuge; I think we can do it by making the article contraband, as we made oplum contraband; but, of course, we would have to frame very carefully a statute intended to accomplish that purpose, because the change from a comparatively harmless condition to a condition of deadly poison is both artificial and automatic; it is a chemical process; it is based upon the change of the degrees of heat to which it is subjected and the conditions under which the heat comes in contact with the article.

I do not see any difficulty, by a carefully drawn measure, in placing white phosphorus in the same category as opium or other deadly drugs that we have included in the pure food and drugs act. No one would claim that a poison is a medicine merely because you take it into your system or because it may be combined with other substances and become a medicine. My inclination is entirely against a roundabout way of doing this thing. It certainly is not so urgent, in view of the fact that we have the substance here, and I am holding it in my hand, as to preclude the practical method of having hearings or examinations upon the subject. Let us know more about is a wholly different thing to attempt to prevent people engaged the origin of the use of white phosphorus in the manufacture of matches; let us find out whether any process for the making of matches is under patent; let us find out whether any of the machinery used for the making of matches is under patent; let us find out whether any person or combination of persons would be benefited by excluding a cheaper competitor from the

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, that has all been done with great elaboration in the House hearings, and is all set forth in the report.

Mr. HEYBURN. I sent for the House hearings.

Mr. LODGE. I mean the report sets forth facts in regard to the process of manufacture, the patents, and everything else.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know it has been done; but what was the result of its being done? Senators want to know. What is the result of the investigation?

Mr. LODGE. I think it is all in the House report. Mr. HEYBURN. I know, but we have it not here. Mr. LODGE. The House report is here.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have that; I sent for that and I have it before me on my desk; but the Senator would not claim that any of the information that I have suggested is contained in that document.

Mr. LODGE. It is all there.

Mr. HEYBURN. There are some statements there, but there

Mr. HEIBURN. There are some statements there, but there is not responsibility behind those statements.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has been arguing that this result, which some of us so much desire, could be reached in another and a constitutional way by dealing with it as we have dealt with drugs and medicines in the pure-food law. I should like the Senator to be a little more specific in his statement on that point-and I ask for information-in revealing to us just how that can be done.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, Mr. President, it is not always an easy thing to draw a bill while on your feet addressing the Senate, but I will give some ideas that have come to me. I think that any attempt to curtail the consideration of a measure of this kind is apt to defeat it; any idea that a Senator will not exercise his judgment in regard to when and to what extent this measure should be discussed is more apt to defeat it than to help it.

Now, Mr. President, the substance known as white sulphur is just as well known to the commercial world as is that of sulphur in any form. It is not a recent discovery. that some chemists have been reducing sulphur to this condition for some purpose since the beginning of the making of matches. It is a perfectly legitimate subject for consideration. I have had hundreds of stereotype letters written by some one under the inspiration of some organization demanding in some cases, requesting in others, that I should do what I might do in the performance of my duties to assist in the enactment of this I have given some attention to those requests. will not be open to the charge of attempting to speak about something of which I know nothing, because I have as much opportunity to know as has another.

In response now to the question of the Senator from New Hampshire as to what legislation might be offered as a substitute for that under consideration, I would say that we may deal with this substance practically along the same lines that we dealt with opium. We may first make it contraband under the law; make the having possession of it evidence of the intent to use it for an unlawful purpose; state those purposes, and provide that it shall not be used in connection with the making of matches or any article or substance to be used in the household. We can be perfectly candid about it, and name just the article-

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. BAILEY. The Senator will perceive in an instant that the difference between the case of the phosphorus match and the case of opium is that opium when made the subject of interstate commerce was an injurious article, whereas when the phosphorus match becomes a subject of interstate commerce it is not an injurious article. When the match is ready for sale it is not injurious to those who use it. The whole trouble is with the people who manufacture it.

It is one thing to denounce an article deleterious in its nature or composition and exclude it from interstate commerce, but it within the States in the manufacture of a commodity from manufacturing it in any way which the State permits, because manufacturing is wholly subject to the jurisdiction of the State, while interstate commerce is within the jurisdiction of the General Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I was speaking from an assumption which was not entirely in harmony with the statement made by the Senator from Texas when he was addressing the Senate a few minutes ago. He stated that this material was harmless after it had been placed upon the match, but the literature which has been sent to me sets forth that the fumes from the burning of white sulphur are also calculated to promote this disease in the jaws and teeth and undertakes to give pictures of persons who have been affected by it.

Mr. BAILEY. But the trouble is that among the 90,000,000 of our people no case of this disease has ever been found outside of one of these factories. Consequently that statement could not be sustained

Mr. HEYBURN. It was printed; and then there was a picture of a man who had been infected, not by being engaged in the making of the match, but by the fumes.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me, there is testimony before the House committee that if these people would brush their teeth and keep them clean they would not contract this disease. I have not felt inclined to go into that subject, but if it is reserved to any legislative body to look after the teeth of people, I think it ought to belong to the State.

Mr. HEYBURN. Evidently I have not been as successful as I hoped to be in framing a bill while on my feet addressing the Senate. I did not expect to be very successful, because it is not a proper way in which to frame a bill. I was merely reaching out for a reply to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gal-LINGER]. It was not necessary that his question should be replied to in order that the position which I have taken might be

Some weeks have elapsed since this question came to my attention, and it came with a great amount of literature and a large number of letters. The letters have continued, and they now begin to bear the appearance of round robins. They are coming every day, in every mail, urging me, sometimes with reason and sometimes without, not to oppose this bill. I am not going to oppose legislation that will meet this difficulty. My interest is in seeing that the legislation which we enact shall be effective; that it shall accomplish the purpose; that we shall not enact a seeming law and put it upon the statute books and have the court that has the last word about it say, "You had no right to do it." In that event we will have accomplished nothing; we will have adjourned and gone home two or three times, perhaps, and the evil will go on.

I wonder why there has been any necessity for postponing the time when this bill shall go into effect. Why should the makers of these matches, who, if these statements are true, are criminals, be given a latitude of time in which to continue this nefarious work? That does not appeal to me. If the statements made about the manufacture of these matches are true, I would stop their manufacture before 4 c'clock to-day, if the law could be made to operate so quickly.

There is no Sepator who has spoken who is more zealous, more desirous than I am of stopping this evil, admitting for the sake of argument that it is an evil. But there is no Senator in this body who is more anxious than I am that the legislation that we enact shall be lawful and within the scope of our power. I am not going to be discouraged or desist because anyone thinks I have talked too long or out of time about it. A measure reported from a committee, and in this body for consideration, is the property of every Senator; and there are no mas-

I say that because there was a murmur of dissent when I presumed to exercise my right and my duty in submitting what had to say about this measure. I will eventually stop that kind of thing, and stop it for good. Mr. President, I have said what I have said because I felt that the relief sought should be reached in another way.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is not in the Chamber, because the very few moments for which I shall occupy the attention of the Senate will be devoted to a proposition which he has announced. I intend to vote for this bill, and I should be sorry to have it believed that even for the sake of humanity I would consciously vote for a measure that palpably violates the Constitution of the United States.

cause the courts of the country are precluded from entering into a consideration of the motives of those who vote for the bill.

I believe Senators who vote for the bill are in harmony with their constitutional powers. There are two Constitutions in this country—the Constitution as it was written by the fathers, and the Constitution as it has been interpreted now for more than 100 years.

I will admit that if the question proposed by the Senator from Texas had been proposed to those who made our Constitution, with the impossibility on their part of looking forward to the needs and the development of a great country, I believe they would have answered the question in harmony with his suggestion. I believe they would have said that the power to tax, although it is the power to destroy, must be exercised with a view to raising revenue, and for no other object. But now for more than 100 years the Constitution of our country has been otherwise interpreted and otherwise applied.

I do not agree to the fundamental proposition that the power to tax given in the Federal Constitution can be used only for the purpose of raising revenue.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, did the Senator from Iowa understand me to say that?

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not impute it to the Senator from Texas; and I was about to go a little further toward the position which the Senator from Texas did assume.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Iowa understands, of course, that I readily agree that if the Government has the right to regulate or to prohibit, it may do so through taxation as well as otherwise.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. I think there is no question about that. But the position of the Senator from Texas is that inasmuch as this tax is not imposed for the purpose of regulating commerce among the States or with foreign nations, but is levied nominally for the purpose of producing a revenue, if it does not regulate commerce among the States or with foreign nations it must be levied for the purpose of creating a revenue.

I do not see any difference whatsoever in principle between a tax levied for the purpose of extinguishing the industry now under consideration and a tax levied for the purpose of preventing the importation of merchantable commercial commodities.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me, in my view it is the difference between regulating manufacture in one case and regulating commerce in the other.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, we have not levied taxes upon imports during all these years for the purpose of regulating commerce with foreign nations. We have levied these import duties for the purpose of preventing the admission into our country of commodities which we desired to produce ourselves. The Senator from Texas has been heard to say many times, I am sure, and there are a great many distinguished men throughout the whole history of the country who have contended, that the Congress of the United States has no constitutional power to levy taxes upon imports for the purpose of preventing those imports from seeking our ports.

Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him? Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him? Mr. CUMMINS. In just a moment. I have heard it argued so many times that it is deeply impressed upon my memory that we have the power to levy these duties only for the purpose of raising a revenue.

I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Texas has ever made the statement that we had no constitutional power to levy taxes except for revenue, it was one of those slips like he made awhile ago when he spoke as if Shylock's daughter ran away with Othello instead of with Lorenzo. I make those mistakes now and then. But if I made that statement, it was a slip, because I do not doubt our power to regulate foreign commerce; and we may regulate it by a tax as well as by any other appropriate

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. I do not recall having heard the Senator from Texas make that argument, but I have heard it so often and so generally in the debates that have occurred in the last 25 years that I know a great many people hold that view. It is just as much of a subterfuge for the American Congress to levy duties upon imports for the purpose of regulating commerce, when they do not desire to regulate commerce in any other way than to prevent the incoming of these commodities, as it is to levy a duty or a tax upon matches such as are described in this bill.

I therefore think that according to the interpretation of the Constitution of this country, as accepted by the people of the The Senator from Texas admits that the bill, if enacted into law, would be constitutional. But he questions the right of Senators to vote for a bill which would be constitutional bethe patriotism of the Congress of the United States rather than to the Constitution of the United States.

I have made this suggestion because I have the same high veneration for the charter of the American Republic the Senator from Texas has, that has been so often applauded and eulogized by him, and I would not intentionally or consciously vote to pass a bill, even to meet this great emergency, that would be in violation of that instrument.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not propose to prolong the debate. I only want to make a suggestion, in view of the vote which I shall probably east.

I do not understand why it was not entirely practicable to treat these matches, if they are dangerous, not only during the manufacturing period but afterwards, as contraband of commerce, and prohibit their being shipped in commerce, or deny them the channels of interstate trade. Certainly if they are of such material as has been described, and their effect in the process of manufacture and their possible effect in use are such as have been described, they could have been so treated. In that event the constitutional power to deal with the subject could not have been questioned, because if these matches are injurious to commerce or injurious to the public there can be very little doubt that under the power to regulate commerce we could deny them the right of shipment in interstate commerce, and could prohibit their being entered in the channels of interstate trade.

Thus treated there need not have been much doubt about the constitutionality of the law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If no amendment be proposed to the bill, it will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate concurrent resolution 19, relative to the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, which were, on page 5, line 14, to strike out "those" and insert "the honorably discharged veterans of the Civil War"; on page 5, line 21, to strike out "those" and insert "the honorably discharged veterans of the Civil War"; on page 5, line 23, to strike out "those" and insert "the honorably discharged veterans of the Civil War"; on page 6, line 5, to strike out "people" and insert "honorably discharged veterans of the Civil War"; and on page 6, line 7, after "rations," to insert "Provided, That the total expenses incurred in the execution of the provisions of this resolution shall not exceed the sum of $2,500.

Mr. OLIVER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 252) to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau, which was, on page 2, line 20, to strike out "one thousand four" and to insert "eight."

Mr. BORAH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that it go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is a bill which passed the Senate and comes back from the House.

Mr. HEYBURN. It comes back amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It comes back amended.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then it may go to the calendar.

The motion is to concur.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to concur is in order. If negatived the bill can be sent to conference.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have not understood that a matter coming back from conference can be placed beyond the consideration of the body to which it is returned where it has been amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But the bill has not been in conference. It is simply back from the House with a House amendment, and the proposition is that the Senate shall concur in the House amendment. If the Senate concurs it will dispose of the

Mr. HEYBURN. I was under a misapprehension. I withdraw my objection. When it comes back from conference it will be time enough.

Mr. GALLINGER. The motion is to concur.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] that the Senate concur in the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is suggested that the motion here is to

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. That motion is debatable. The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly the motion is debatable. If it is to be debated the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 4230, the hour of 4 o'clock having arrived.

AMENDMENT OF PRINTING LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4239) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho objects to the unfinished business being temporarily laid aside. bill is then before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and the Secretary will report the pending amendment, which is the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

The Secretary. On page 75, line 15, before the word "dollars," strike out "eight" and insert "two" so as to read:

The superintendent of documents is authorized to furnish to subscribers the daily Congressional Record at $2 for the long session.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Idaho if he will not yield until I can have the amendments of the committee acted upon.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not in a hurry to press this amendment. I will ask the Senator if he has the communication that has not been printed. There is a communication from the department with reference to this amendment, and if the Senator will make that available-it should have been printed beforeit will facilitate the consideration of it. Of course, I shall not go into a debate on this measure until I have access to that document, because it is the report of the department on it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask unanimous consent that a letter addressed to the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing by the Public Printer, of date January 11, 1912, be printed as a public document.

Mr. HEYBURN. No, Mr. President; it is the report called for by the committee to which the resolution went, and it should have been printed at that time. It should have come to the Senate with the report.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. HEYBURN. I said the response from the secretary to the chairman of the committee should have been printed and come to the Senate with the report upon the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. The Joint Committee on Printing asked for certain information from the Public Printer regarding the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho; that is, as to the cost that the amendment would be to the Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was the ordinary request.

Mr. SMOOT. Its answer came to the committee. I have the

Mr. HEYBURN. Was it not the ordinary request that is sent up by a committee to a department when the measure comes up for its consideration. It did not differ from any other request for information?

Mr. SMOOT. It did not differ from any other committee request, but those requests are never published as documents. If the Senator desires the information, I will give him copies of the letter.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask permission to use the original letter when I speak.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly the Senator can have the original letter. He can have it now.

Mr. HEYBURN. That obviates one difficulty at present.

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator from Utah desire to be further heard? No; I simply wanted to continue the consid-Mr. SMOOT.

eration of the bill. I ask the Senator from Idaho to yield until certain committee amendments are offered and acted upon and then we can take up his amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the committee desires at this time to offer amendments and to take the action of the Senate upon them, I certainly will restrain my impatience until my amendment is reached in its order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho expresses a willingness to delay offering his amendment until the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; with the understanding that the consideration shall proceed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has put no request made by the Senator from Utah in reference to printing.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President. I will withdraw that request, because I will turn the original letters over to the Senator from Idaho and he can get the information from the letters

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 104, line 20, I move to strike out the period at the end of the line and to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no publication not having to do with its ordinary business transactions shall be printed on the requisition of any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government unless the same shall have been expressly authorized by Congress.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask the Senator if that is intended to refer to any printing asked for by any committee of either body of Congress?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the present law, word for word, but in the preparation of the bill it was overlooked.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 107, line 20, I move to strike out the words "an exigency exists which requires that work be done elsewhere" and to insert "it would be to the best interest of the Government to have work done."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. In line 21, on the same page, I move to strike out the words "which requires that work be done" and to substitute "it would be to the best interest of the Government to have work done."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 115, line 14, I move to strike out the number "86" and to insert the number "85." I understood that that was done last night, but in reading the RECORD this morning I find that it was not recorded, and therefore I ask that the amendment be now made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the numerals will be changed.

Mr. SMOOT. Those are all the committee amendments.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BURTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 28 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 4, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, April 3, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Spirit, everywhere present, we stand before The with uncovered hearts; Thou knowest us altogether, the motives which prompt our acts, the objects to be obtained which leave their impress upon our characters for good or bad, for weakness or for strength. Create therefore within us clean hearts and renew a right spirit within, that we may build for ourselves God-like characters and thus prove ourselves worthy sons of the living God in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 22772. An act appropriating $350,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on the Mississippi River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the con-currence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4778. An act to correct the military record of John T. Haines

S. J. Res. 94. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress; and

S. 180. An act providing for the celebration of the semicentennial anniversary of the act of emancipation, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4778. An act to correct the military record of John T.

Haines; to the Committee on Military Affairs. S. 180. An act providing for the celebration of the semicentennial anniversary of the act of emancipation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

S. J. Res. 94. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress; to the Committee on the Library.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (H. R. 22650) to replace section 4214 and section 4218 of the Revised Statutes was changed from the Committee on Ways and Means to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY-OSAGE INDIANS, OKLAHOMA.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The call rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the unfinished business is the bill (S. 2) supplementary to and amendatory of the act entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Nation of Indians in Oklahoma," approved June 28, 1906, and for other purposes.

The House automatically will resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. LLOYD, will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2, with Mr. LLOYD in the chair.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be dispensed with, and that we proceed to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to dispense with general debate and to proceed with the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the bill ought to be dis-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. I do.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire] is the author of the bill, and he made the report. The Indians in question are in his district, and I yield to him for an explanation of the bill

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I will be just as brief as possible in running over the various paragraphs, and give to the committee as near as I can an explanation of the purpose of the bill. The bill is supplementary to and amendatory of an act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Nation of Indians in Oklahoma. The first paragraph of the bill simply provides that until the inherited lands of the Osage Tribe of Indians shall be partitioned or sold the Secretary of the Interior-be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay the taxes on said lands out of moneys due and payable to the heirs from the segregated decedent's funds in the Treasury of the United States.

In the act allotting these lands a question arose as to whether the lands were taxable. The law relating to the question of taxation in the original act is as follows:

That upon the issuance of such certificate of competency the lands of such member, except his or her homestead, shall become subject to taxation, and such member, except as herein provided, shall have the right to manage, control, and dispose of his or her land the same as any citizen of the United States: Provided, That the surplus lands shall not be taxable for the period of three years from the approval of this act, except where certificates of competency are issued or in case of the death of allottee, unless otherwise provided by Congress.

Upon that question there was a contest by the representatives of the Indians, on petition, who claimed that under this law these lands could not be taxed unless a certificate of competency had issued. There has been one decision by the Federal court in effect that the surplus lands were taxable after three years. That is the construction of this statute by the local Federal court. From that decision there is pending an appeal. Inasmuch as the question had been passed upon by the Federal court, the committee thought it best not to interfere, and so far as this bill is concerned it leaves the question on that one decision, that the lands were taxable and are taxable now; that is, were taxable at the expiration of three years, all except the homestead. The homestead is nontaxable.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is this the situation in regard to the Osage Indian lands? Under a former act of Congress, I believe one passed in 1906, each Osage Indian was entitled to make four selections: First, a homestead; second, a parcel of 160 acres; third, a second parcel of 160 acres; and, fourth, a residue amounting to less than 160 acres.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is that a correct statement of the situation?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma, Yes, Mr. MURDOCK. The homestead so selected in the first instance is inalienable and nontaxable, and does it so remain today under the law?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It does under the present law and it does under this bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is, under this bill it is not possible for the Indian to alienate his homestead as originally designated by him?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Well, he can not alienate; he can exchange under this provision, but the land he secures in exchange is inalienable.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is true enough on the original 160 acres which he selects, but when he selects the extra 160 acres does it become alienable?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Only to a limited degree, and will explain that when I reach the paragraph, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to hear that explanation.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the gentleman leaves the first section, would like to ask him what is meant by the expression "inherited lands" of this tribe. As I understand it there are no lands that the tribe as a tribe has inherited.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Well, it means the members of the tribe; the lands inherited by members of the tribe.

Mr. NORRIS. If this were enacted in the form you have it there, would it not be misleading, because there are no such

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do not recall any lands now which might be inherited by the tribe. It was evidently intended to apply to members of the tribe, and if it is not properly expressed it can easily be amended.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from

The Senate bill, without the amendment reported by the House committee, provides for the taxation of Indian lands under certain conditions. The House committee proposes to propose an amendment striking all that out and then says that until the inherited lands are subject to taxation the Secretary of the Interior shall pay the taxes. What does it mean by saying that until the lands are subject to taxation, which intimates that they are not subject to taxation, and pending that the Secretary shall pay the taxes? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. With respect to the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois I will say this: There was a mistake there either by the committee or in the print of the bill. As I understand it, under the committee provision or committee amendment it would not read as the gentleman has it there, but if you would strike out, after the word "be," line 9-and if I am wrong about it, it will have to be amended, in any event, to obviate the objection of the gentleman from Illinois—after the word "be," in line 9, if you strike out the remaining portion of that line and line 10 down to and includ-ing the word "be" in line 1 on page 2, it makes the bill as it was my understanding it should read after it was amended as it came from the Senate, and it would then read like this, and I shall propose this amendment:

That until the inherited lands of the Osage Tribe of Indians shall be partitioned or sold the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay the taxes on said lands out of any money due and payable to the heirs from the segregated decedents' funds in the Treasury of the United States.

I shall offer an amendment striking out those words, so as to make the bill read as I believe it was the intention to have it read, because it is unintelligible, practically, as it is.
Mr. MANN. There is no doubt about that. There

The Senate's proposition was to declare subject to taxation the lands after the issuance of the certificate of competency or removal of restrictions on the alienation.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understand the House amendment does not propose to subject to taxation the lands of the Indians further than they are now subject to taxation.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That was the purpose of the committee. The Senate provided that these lands should only become taxable after what is known under the act of 1906 as a certificate of competency should be issued to the Indians. Now, there were 2,230 at the last census of these Indians, and a certificate of competency has been issued to about 450 of them. It was the intention of the Osage people and the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to have the act of 1906 provide for their taxation after three years that is, after conditions had adjusted themselves, after the allotments had been made, and all that sort of thing, so the Senate bill provided for that taxation only after the certificate of competency had been issued.

Mr. MANN. I do not find any such word as "only" in the provision.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I suggested that because it means exactly the same thing.

Mr. MANN.

I do not think so.

I do not think so.

Read Oklahoma. Well, the Senate bill provides Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Well, the Senate bill provides the lands may become taxable after the certificate of competency is issued, and I inserted the word "only."

Mr. MANN. To emphasize it?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. To emphasize it, believing that that provision will preclude the possibility of any taxes being levied upon this land under the Senate provision until after the certificate of competency has been issued.

Mr. MANN. That would depend upon the law.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. This would be the law.

Mr. MANN. This would not change any law that provided for the taxation of Indian holdings.

for the taxation of Indian holdings.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think it would.

Mr. MANN. Clearly it would not. This only extends the taxing power over lands that are supposedly not now taxable.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Either the gentleman is wrong or I am wrong. My position is this: Under the provisions of the Senate act, this paragraph as passed by the Senate, the State could not tax until after the certificate of competency had been

Mr. MANN. That would depend upon other law, whether there is any provision in existing law providing for it.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I read the only other law there is upon the subject, and there is some question about that and it now hinges upon the decision of the local Federal court. Mr. MANN. What is the fact now under the law? Are these lands now subject to taxation before a certificate of competency or removal of restrictions on alienations are granted?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The court decided under the act of 1906, the paragraph which I read a few moments ago, that the lands, all except the homesteads, were and are taxable and have been since the lapse of three years after the allotment act, or since 1909.

Mr. NORRIS. Regardless of competency?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Regardless of competency. That is what is known as surplus lands. Now, then, the State law provides this, that the assessment for taxation purposes includes not only the surface but minerals. Now this question has arisen. They levy for taxation purposes upon this land, and under the State law they must have considered the mineral rights. They discover gas and oil, and gas and oil on this reservation is held in common by the tribe, so they have linked the surface taxation necessarily under the State law with the mineral taxation which belongs to the tribe, a thing that unquestionably can not be, in my judgment, and I see no way out of except to call the State legislature together and change the statute, because I think ultimately on an amended petition adopted by the Osage people the court will have to change this decision in the case.

Mr. MANN. Well, the court may change the decision, but what I am interested in is what this bill proposes to do. Now, does the Senate-and the Senate provision, whatever it is, has to be considered in the House, although the House proposes to strike it out, and it may remain in the bill after the bill emerges from conference—does the Senate amendment restrict or extend the restriction over the home of the Indian?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The Senate provision makes no change whatever in respect to the homestead, but restricts the power of the surplus, as, in my judgment, was the purpose of the committee. The purpose of the committee in the House is to not extend or restrict the power of the legislation by the State, but allow it to remain as it is, and inasmuch as the case is now pending in the lower court, let the court decide whether the land is taxable.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will permit, the news came to the committee while they were considering this bill, in the form of a telegram as to what the Federal court had done in Oklahoma. The committee merely said that it would stand on the law of 1906, which said that all surplus land should be subject to taxation. We thought it unnecessary to legislate on the subject which had been mooted—

Mr. MANN. My understanding is that you struck out the provision of the Senate because you proposed to rent the land of incompetent Indians?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The agreement with these people by the Interior Department at the time of the allotment of this land, under the act of 1906, was that the surplus land should be taxed. There is no other way to provide for local government. I will explain that there were 656 acres of land for each one, and every acre was a sufficient guarantee for the They have about 655 acres each. Indians.

Mr. MANN. How long will they have it? You can take it away from them through the taxing power.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Just as long as the Secretary of the Interior protects them, because there is no instance in this bill or in any bill where anything may be done with the lands and funds of those incompetent Indians without the authority from the Secretary of the Interior. We provide in this bill that the Secretary of the Interior may, out of the fund of the Indians now in the Treasury of the United States, pay the tax upon this land.

Where is that provision? Mr. MANN.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Right here in the bill. We will reach it shortly.

Mr. MANN. I say, where is it in the bill? I would like to know.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. There is no interest of the Indians that is not guarded in the bill. I can find it in a second.

Mr. CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from New York?
Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. ACGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. CONNELL. I would like to know in just a word while the gentleman is on that point, to clear it up, under this extended taxation that is proposed in the bill for these lands—

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Not extended—

Mr. CONNELL. What will become of the minors and the children of the Indians who might inherit some of it? Are they provided for or will they become paupers, dependent on the State?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The bill absolutely protects in every detail the minors and persons who may inherit land who have Osage Indian blood in their veins by providing that no steps shall be taken without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and that is the provision now under the law of Mr. CONNELL. That is to be perpetual under this law, that no disinheritance of these Indian children shall follows?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Certainly not. It is all in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, and will be after this bill passes as it is now.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. AKIN of New York. I understood the gentleman to say that the courts had decided a certain thing. Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The Federal court of the estern district of Oklahoma.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Is there not an appeal pending? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The most recent action, I believe, is the filing of a supplemental bill by the attorneys for the Osages

Mr. AKIN of New York. The decision has not been rendered

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. No.

Mr. AKIN of New York. That is in the air yet?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. AKIN of New York. After the appeal is decided by the court, where will the children come in?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do not believe there is any evidence anywhere that the land will be eaten up by taxation. There is the same precaution exercised in that regard as there has always been.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Minnesota? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask a question, and may make a statement later, as I think there is a lot of misunderstanding about this paragraph. Does not the law as it stands now provide that the surplus land shall be taxed? Is not that what the law says?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think it does. The court has so decided.

Mr. MILLER. That is the decision of the court?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; the gentleman is right. Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman mean by "surplus land" everything but the homesteads?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; everything but the home-

Mr. MANN. Is not that a controverted question?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; and I understand this bill is designed to correct that.

Mr. MANN. Why not leave it to the-

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will read that opening paragraph, I think he will find it does not subject any of the land to taxation-even that provision that passed the Senate-excepting that it says that after a certificate of competency shall have been issued then they shall be subject to taxation. That is the law to-day, and the courts are now construing it. These lands are subject to taxation before and after the certificate of competency.

This does not enlarge or restrict it. I think the committee believed that when it considered the question. Now, if it is the opinion of the House that we should pass legislation at this time excepting surplus lands from taxation, either before or after the certificate of competency, that is a proper subject of discussion, but it has nothing to do with this bill. Oh, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] can smile all he likes. It could be ingrafted in the bill. If the House wants to do that, it can do so, but that is not what this bill is trying to do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman also is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire] stated that the reason why the committee struck out the Senate provision was that it would limit the power of taxation on surplus lands to those Indians where the restrictions had been removed or the declaration of competency had been issued. Is that the reason assigned by the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. MILLER. No; it is not. Mr. MANN. That is the reason assigned by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLER. That is not what was in my mind. Anybody reading that paragraph will see that the contention of the gentleman is not well founded.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Gentlemen can put their own construction upon it; but, as I construe that senatorial paragraph, it would mean that this land could not be taxed until after a certificate of competency had been issued. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] took issue with me, and, as I understand, he takes the same position as that which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] takes. I may be wrong about that.

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to think that the surplus lands are not subject to taxation at all unless some other provision is inserted. The gentleman thinks that he may get a construction of the court to the effect that they are. They have not been taxed in the past.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I know this, that it was the intention of the Osage people to have their surplus land taxed. Every foot of that reservation was taken up in allotments. They now have an organized county. If we preclude from taxation this surplus land-and all the Osage people understood originally that it was to be taxed—then you have put a burden upon the people there who are trying to support a county, a burden that they are unable to stand.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman a moment ago and several other gentlemen on the Committee on Indian Affairs stated that there was a provision in this bill providing for the payment of taxes on surplus land owned by incompetent Indians. Where is that provision?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I can not put my hand on it just this second, but it is here.

Mr. MANN. Gentlemen have been seeking it, and seeking it in vain. I hope the gentleman will give it to the House.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is in all cases of incompetency the Secretary of the Interior will pay the taxes.

Mr. MILLER. Would not the Secretary have to do that under the present law, without any new legislation, in looking after the affairs of his wards?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Have the Osage Indians severed their tribal relations?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The Osages have a limited government. Under the act of 1906 their council is recognized. They now have their councils, and the action of their council is recognized by the Secretary of the Interior in order to give validity to their local acts.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. You say they have a limited tribal government?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Only to a limited extent. Mr. HAMIL/TON of Michigan. Are their lands still held by them as a tribe, or are they held in severalty?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. They are held in severalty.

They have taken their allotments.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There are some of them— Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Under what law have they this limited tribal government?
Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Under the act of 1906, known as the allotment act of the Osage Tribe of Indians.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is it a fact that every Osage child born since July 1, 1907, is without an allotment of land? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. What would be the status of a minor child born since July 1, 1907, who was the sole heir to this land, if it is subject to taxation?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The Secretary of the Interior would pay the taxes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Would not the land be sold for taxes? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. No; the Secretary of the Interior or the guardian of the child would pay the taxes on the land.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is it not a fact that the Osage child born since July 1, 1907, is also without part in the tribal funds?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. A child born since 1907. Mr. MURDOCK. Such a child is not only without any allotment of land, but is also without participation in the tribal

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. He is in the same condition as children born in any other tribe in the United States where the allotments have been made.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is it not true that under those circumstances the land would be sold for taxes during the minority of the child?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It is not.

Mr. MURDOCK. Who would pay the taxes, if the child has no part in the tribal funds?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It is the purpose of this bill to provide for just such cases as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. MURDOCK. How can it be done if the child has no part of the tribal fund?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. When we reach that paragraph it will be easy for the gentleman to see. It provides for minors, and for inherited lands.

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not believe it provides for minors in that event.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It is a matter for the House to determine when it reaches that paragraph.

Section 2 provides for the exchange of homesteads where it would be to the best interests of the alloitee, the land taken in exchange to be held under the same restrictions as the original homestead.

This section is similar to section 4 of the House bill, except that section 4 of said bill provides not only for the exchange but for the sale of homesteads in certain cases. I think the provision limiting the transactions to exchanges is preferable, and I therefore see no objection to the enactment of the section.

I read that from the report of the Secretary of the Interior upon that paragraph.

Now, as a further reason for this paragraph, I desire to state that there were four choices of this land. Each Osage has about 657 acres. That includes all the land on the reservation, or 1,500,000 acres. One of them would take as a homestead in one section his first selection of 160 acres; over in another section another 160 acres, over in another a third, and the residue in the same way. That has been done in every single instance. There is no allottee on the reservation who has all his land contiguous.

At least one-third of these people are just as competent as anybody to traitsact their own business. Some of them do not desire to sell. They desire to exchange their allotments, so as to bring their lands together. That can be done, and it was thought best by the council, the Secretary of the Interior, and the tribe in general that this be done. Hence this provision in the bill for the exchange of allotments.

Section 3 relates to orphans, minors, and insane.

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman passes section 2, may I ask him a question?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. MANN. Section 2 provides that the Secretary of the Interior, where it would be for the best interests of Osage allottees, and the same is substituted to the Osage council, for recommendation to permit the exchange of homesteads for other allot-ments. Just what is meant by "submitted to the Osage coun-cil"? Does that mean that the Osage council must approve it?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It means that they must approve it.

Mr. MANN. It does not say so.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It means that some stronger person of Indian blood might desire to exchange allotments with a weaker or less competent person, and the Osage council desired to maintain a certain jurisdiction. It is done for the protection of the weak and against the aggressions of the strong.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will notice, referring to the punctuation of the bill, which is sometimes important, that it

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, where the same would be to the best interests of Osage allottees, and the same is submitted to the Osage council, for recommendation to permit the exchange of homesteads or other allotments, or any portions thereof, of Osage allottees under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe and upon such terms as he shall approve.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does that mean that if it is submitted to the Osage council, then the exchange is permitted, regardless of the action of the Osage council?

McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That certainly was not the intention. At least it never was my intention, and if it can be construed in that way I would certainly be for an amendment. It is merely for the recommendation of the council because the council desires to protect the weaker against the strong, where there was a proposed change of allotment in order to bring them closer together, in order that they may have continuous land.

Mr. MANN. Would the section which proposes to permit "the exchange of homesteads or other allotments, or any portions thereof," permit the exchange of a homestead owned by one Indian for surplus lands owned by another?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; where the Indian desired to change the location of a homestead, unquestionably it would.

Mr. MANN. Exchanging one homestead for another is one thing. Presumably they took the best land for the homesteads, but exchanging a homestead for surplus lands is another and quite a different thing. Whether it becomes a homestead or not, I want to know what the gentleman means by it. It is not clear in the bill-"to permit the exchange of homesteads or other allotments, or any portions thereof "-whether that means the exchange of homesteads and then the exchange of other allotments, or whether it means the exchange of a homestead for other surplus lands.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. My construction of it is that they might exchange a homestead for surplus lands or for another homestead, or for other lands, provided they got what, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, is an equivalent in value; and when they do exchange, the land becomes a homestead and inalienable as under the present law.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will understand that there is objection on the part of some persons to that provision on the ground that the original homesteads cover the best land.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is a false assumption. Mr. MANN. And to now permit the exchange of a homestead for surplus lands would be to permit an Indian to trade off his good homestead for land not so valuable for homestead purposes.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Well, that is a false assumption. An Indian bright enough to take up the best land for a homestead is bright enough to keep it. The position of the committee was that where it was desirable to make an exchange the Secretary of the Interior would properly guard the exchange, particularly where he has the assistance of the council.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Certainly. Mr. BUTLER. It is somewhat difficult for us to understand just what the privileges are here provided. What is the Osage council, or how is it selected?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It is selected by the people. Mr. BUTLER. By the Indians? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. By the Indians.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman know what character of Indians are usually selected for the council?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; I know.

Mr. BUTLER. Are they selected from among the best Indians?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The present governor of the tribe, or principal chief, as I believe he is designated under the law, is a man about one thirty-second Indian blood and one of the very best men of the State.

Mr. BUTLER. On an exchange of land the council must be consulted?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; to doubly guard the weak against the strong.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman think that that constitutes all the safeguards necessary?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do.

Mr. BUTLER. And that they will look out for the welfare of the Indians?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I have no doubt about it. It is the purpose of the committee and of the Secretary of the Interior and the people who wanted this paragraph to make the lands more valuable, if possible, and to prevent their selling

Mr. BUTLER. I quite understand the desirability of the Indians having their lands contiguous.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The question was how could we guard the matter, and what was the best plan for protecting them, and we fell upon this plan. Mr. BUTLER. My purpose is to learn whether there is a sufficient care taken, or whether the council will take sufficient care in passing upon these allotments and looking after the best interests of the Indian, and see that he is not imposed upon by some one stronger than he-is. Congress can not provide the rules, and it must be referred to some tribunal.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think the Secretary would be sufficient, but, as a double precaution, we provided that the council should also recommend the exchange.

Mr. BUTLER. The Secretary of the Interior must get his information largely from the council.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. From the council and the local superintendent.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER. Section 2, page 2, reads:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, where the same would be to the best interests of Osage allottees, and the same is submitted to the Osage council—

Then there is a comma-for recommendation, to permit the exchange of homesteads or other

That is not punctuated properly, but outside of the punctuation that gives the Secretary of the Interior authority to permit the exchange of homesteads or other allotments, regardless of the recommendation of the Osage council.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is not the intention. Mr. COOPER. That is what it says. He is not bound by the recommendation under this phraseology.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Bound by the recommendation of the council? Well, he ought not to be.

Mr. COOPER. Then what is the use of having the recommendation of the council?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Simply to give as much publicity to all of these propositions of exchange as possible. instance, here will be a man of Indian blood, possibly very little and probably very little. He will desire to exchange with a full blood who has land adjacent to his own allotment. It would hardly be proper to allow these people to negotiate be-tween themselves, because the stronger would to some extent control the weaker. The purpose was to give this as much publicity as possible, lodging the final action in the Secretary of the Interior, who is presumed to know and who would be fair between the parties who proposed the exchange.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma think that the Secretary of the Interior, located in Washington, 1,200 or more miles from the land, would know better what would be for the best interests of the Osage allottees than would the Osage council, chosen by the Indians themselves?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think the gentleman's proposition is a little far-fetched.

Mr. COOPER. One moment; this language, which I will read again, says:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, where the same would be to the best interests of Osage allottees and the same is submitted to the Osage council—then comes the comma-for recommendation to permit the exchange-

And so forth. Of course, that comma ought to be after the word "recommendation," and then it would read:

The same is submitted to the Osage council for recommendation, to permit—

And so forth. That is, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to permit this exchange of homesteads, regardless of the recommendation of the council, and that is exactly what

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is what, in my judgment, it ought to say. As to the Secretary of the Interior knowing more about local conditions than the Indians, I will say this, that simply because all of this business is lodged with the Interior Department of the Government of the United States, not only in Oklahoma, but in every State of the Union where there are Indians, it does not mean that Congress intends to say that the Secretary knows more than those who are conversant with the local conditions, but here is a department of the Government of the United States whose duty it is to look into every disputed question, by inspectors with which that department is provided, and to pass upon local disputes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Certainly. Mr. COOPER. What other tribes in the United States have council analogous to the Osage council?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The Choctaws and the Chicka-

Mr. VREELAND. And the New York Indians, the Senecas? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes. Mr. DAVENPORT. And the Creeks? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman think that on this question of what will be best for the interest of the Osage allottees, and I am reading from the bill, that question having been submitted to the Osage council, the Secretary of the Interior should be permitted to disregard the suggestion of the Osage council as to what is best for the Osage allottees and permit the exchange of homesteads or other allotments without regard to an adverse recommendation of the council?
Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. No.

Mr. COOPER. That is what he can do if this is enacted into law.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; he could do a great many things that a man of good judgment ought not to be presumed

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman think that discretion ought to be left with him?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do. Mr. COOPER. To disregard the finding of the Osage council? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I certainly think the discretion ought to be left with the Secretary of the Interior. Let us say that there are two Indians who desire to exchange allot-They must first present the matter to the council, the men at home who know every condition, who know the relative capability of these parties who propose the exchange. will have his friends, possibly. A dispute might arise in the council. One member of the council might think that a certain proposition was fair and another might think that it was un-The dispute and the contention would reach the Secretary of the Interior, and what would a cautious Secretary of the Interior do in the natural course of things?

Mr. COOPER. I will answer that by saying that it would probably bring up about 50 white men to 1 Indian to labor with him. Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I know what he ought to do, and I think the gentleman knows what a capable Secretary ought to do, and I think we have a capable Secretary. He would make a thorough investigation through his superintendents and other inspectors provided for him for that purpose, and he would take into consideration, possibly, the recommenda-tions of the Members of Congress from that State, who are familiar with the conditions.

Mr. COOPER. I had in mind this thought: That, generally speaking, there ought to be a presumption that nobody would have so at heart the interest of the Osage allottees as would the Osage council, and that the council, familiar with all of the conditions and knowing the Indian nature better than anybody else, would be best capable of judging; but if we are to permit an executive officer 1,500 miles from this land to say that that recommendation of the Osage council does not amount to anything, though it may be a unanimous finding of the council-

Mr. MANN. What benefit can it be in any event?
Mr. COOPER. I do not understand what benefit it would be but it does seem to me that where these Indians have a council their interests as allottees are safer in the hands of that council than in the hands of any executive officer of the Government so

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I am endeavoring to learn.
Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think it ought to ultimately be lodged with the Secretary of the Interior, but I will say this, if the gentleman is of the opinion that it ought to rest with them I would not have any serious objection to any amendment he would offer to that effect. I think the bill is right as it is drawn, however.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman think that any exchanges should be made that are not approved by the majority of the Osage council?

the majority of the Osage council?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. No; I do not.

Mr. MONDELL. Then, I want to suggest to the gentleman that his bill ought to be amended. The final decision ought to rest with the Secretary of the Interior; that is, the Secretary ought to have the right to veto the favorable action of the council, but in my opinion he should not have authority to make an exchange which the council does not approve, and that can be made very clear by amending the bill by striking out the words in line 8, page 2, "the same is submitted to," and in line 9, by striking out the words "for recommendation" and inserting in line 8 the words "upon the recommendation of"; and then the bill would read "that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, where the same would terior be, and he is hereby, authorized, where the same would be to the best interest of the Osage allottees, and upon the recommendation of the Osage council, to permit the exchange of homesteads," etc. That would require favorable action by the Osage council, and it would still leave the Secretary with authority to decline to approve the exchange, but it would give him no authority to approve an exchange that the council did

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. As I said before, that is a matter that I would not contend about personally. I do not much like the idea of putting the council above the Secretary of the

Mr. MONDELL. I am not proposing to do that. Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. In effect it would.

Mr. MONDELL. I am proposing to give the Secretary the veto power over the council; but what the gentleman does is to put the Secretary in a position where he is not called upon to pay any attention to the views of the Osage council.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think the Secretary would pay attention to that.

not previously approve.

Mr. BUTLER. I would not take the discretion away from the Secretary of the Interior. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask another question.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. BUTLER. How is it possible they got in such a mix up in selecting their lands so that the lands were not contiguous when they selected them? Who was there to select it for them or assist in selecting it, if anybody?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. There was a commission appointed, and under the allotment act they were permitted to take three first choices—first, a homestead, and then 160 acres the second choice, and then 160 acres as a third choice—and the commission found it was impossible to have them take these choices adjacent and contiguous, so that it was done that way, right or wrong.

Mr. BUTLER. I know the gentleman has plenty of information in regard to this subject, and I would like to know why they did not take up these lands which were contiguous.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. They wanted to get lands here and there, hoping to get something better, and now they want to exchange and get them contiguous. Right or wrong, I should like to have seen them taken contiguous.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will permit, is not it also true that various lands were allotted at different times so it was rendered impossible to take the lands contiguous? I think they had three different allotments.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. They were taken as fast as they could choose.

Mr. BUTLER. How many members were the council?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Twelve members. Mr. BUTLER. Elected how frequently?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think every two years.

Mr. BUTLER. In the regular way?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. In the regular way by regular election.

Mr. McCALL Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. McCALL. Is the gentleman sure that these lands held not within fimited patents are taxable?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Well, we have gone from that; the Federal court within a few days ago held they were taxable under the law as it is.

Mr. McCALL. I asked this question because in Michigan lands there held under patents which restrain alienation without the consent of the Secretary have been held not to be

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. This is a special enactment, and they have to pay taxes on the surplus lands. Now, in regard to paragraph 3, I will be as brief as possible, it provides— I read from the words of the Secretary of the Interior in his recommendation:

recommendation:

Section 3 provides for the administration of property of deceased allottees and of minor, insane, or otherwise incompetent persons, making these estates subject to the jurisdiction of the probate court of the State of Oklahoma, but retaining certain supervisory powers in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior.

This section is similar to section 6 of the House bill. In the report on said bill it was suggested that there be added to the section the words "Provided, That no land shall be sold or alienated under the provisions of this section without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior." This provision has been added in the Senate bill. A further amendment is necessary by reason of the transposition of certain words in the section. It is suggested that in line 18, page 2, after the word "other" and before the word "incompetent," there be inserted the words "allottees of the Osage Tribe," and that these words be stricken out of line 19. With this amendment, I see no objection to the enactment of the section.

The purpose of that provision is this: The constitution of the State of Oklahoma exempts Indian incompetents and Indian minors from its operation, and that leaves these people absolutely in the hands of Congress. Under the act of 1906 we provided that these matters be controlled by the Secretary of the Interior. Now, there have been a great many cases of inherited lands. They come up here before the Secretary for final disposition. He has had some trouble in getting accurate information and it was thought best to allow the local courts to determine who inherited, who the proper heirs were, and then pass it up to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval. We again lodged final action with the Secretary of the Interior and think that is sufficient precaution, but we give him the assistance of the courts of Oklahoma.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. May I ask the gentleman a question in regard to section 3? The section provides—

That the property of deceased and of orphan minor, insane, and other incompetent allottees of the Osage Tribe, such incompetency being determined by the laws of Oklahoma, which are hereby extended for such purpose to the allottees of said tribe.

It seems to me the better language there would be to strike out the words "hereby extended for such purpose to the allottees of said tribe." As it is, they do not mean anything

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will reserve that until we get on the bill under the five-minute rule he will have a chance to offer such amendment to strike it out. Section 4 was simply inserted for the purpose of protecting the mineral lands of Oklahoma. I think it unnecessary, but it was thought best by the Senate to insert it. Section 5 provides that the Secretary of the Interior may permit the sale of a portion instead of all the lands, as is now the law, and the committee thought it a good provision. Section 6 simply provides for the payment of the funds of the Osage people out of the Treasury of the United States, where the Secretary finds them entirely competent. Section 6 provides for a partition of the lands where the Indians can not agree. Section 7 simply provides that the lands can not be encumbered for debts, which is an additional precaution under the present law. Section 8 provides that the competent Osages, where the Secretary finds them competent, may dispose of their funds, but not until he finds them entirely competent. Section 10 simply provides for an additional appropriation. That is all I care to say, unless some gentleman desires to ask some question.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. FERRIS. In looking over this bill, there is not a single paragraph or line that permits any Indian to alienate in any way until it is approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman is quite right.

Mr. FERRIS. And he can not withdraw his funds until it is approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. He can not.

Mr. FERRIS. And can not exchange lands until he has the approval of the Secretary of the Interior,

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. He can not.

Mr. FERRIS. This bill does not make any change in the law with reference to taxation.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It does not; it does not extend the power of the Indians or restrict the powers of the Indians, but simply takes greater precautions.

Mr. FERRIS. One word further. I believe these Indians get about 650 acres per capita, men, women, and children.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Each member of the family.

Mr. BUTLER. Up to a certain date. Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Up to July 1, 1907.

Until the rolls were closed. Mr. FERRIS.

I have one other question that I wanted to ask the gentleman. In a family of six that would make in the neighborhood of 4,000 acres of land to that particular family?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; it would.
Mr. FERRIS. This bill is merely to adjust and change the administration, still keeping the power within the Interior Department with reference to the money and lands as to their Is not that true?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It is.

Mr. FERRIS. And the gentleman has undoubtedly heard on the floor here of certain criticisms being brought to the desks of different Members by outside parties. Have any criticisms been brought to the Committee on Indian Affairs at any time?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. None whatever. They have not even gone to the people of that country. I will say this: This will meet the approval of everybody on the reserve. Whites, Indians, and everybody are favorably to this bill.

Mr. FERRIS. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that this bill, prior to its introduction by himself in the House and Senator Owen in the Senate, was not submitted to the council, to the Interior Department, to the Indian Office, and every conceivable party interested in the legislation?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It was.

Mr. FERRIS. And was it not the unanimous agreement of all of them that this was as nearly good as we could come to it? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It was.

Mr. FERRIS. And it is the unanimous consent of all of them?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask how it passed the House and the Senate?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The bill passed the House and the Senate in the last Congress. It went to conference. The report came in on the morning of the day the House adjourned, and as there was some discussion here over the question of whether there should be an additional appropriation for the Tariff Commission, there was no opportunity to bring up and adopt the conference report. This passed the Senate twice, and it has been passed upon favorably by the Interior Department twice, and by the council of the Osages, and has been approved by everybody

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And is it not true that without the passage of a bill of this character matters would be left in such an unsettled condition that it would injure the Indians to a large extent?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It is so much that way that this is considered local emergency legislation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much money is to the per capita credit of the Indians now in the United States Treasury? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Nine million dollars, all told. It is the richest tribe of people in the world.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman from Oklahoma will permit?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Certainly. Mr. FERRIS. In a colloquy with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] a short time ago—I think it went into the Recorp, and, if it did not, it ought to do so—I stated, in my opinion, what this bill did provide. I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGurre] if, in line 9, on the first page, there should be a provision to carry out the thought of the gentleman, and carry out his statement, which I thought was not true, namely, adding, after the word "land," the following words:

And surplus lands which heretofore by law were not subject to taxation.

So that their land might not be frittered away and lost by some authority of the Secretary?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think it is a good suggestion, and I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is right, although I took issuance with him at the time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] that I think the intention of the Committee on Indian Affairs was not to change existing law, either by direction of otherwise, that would enlarge the power to tax any of these lands; that is, lands that were not now taxed.

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely; but I still think that the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is a proposition like this: Suppose an incompetent Indian under the act of 1906 subjected his land to taxation at an amount above his homestead. Surely the authority should be vested in the Secretary of the Interior to pay the tax on the land rather than to let it have any chance to get away from the incompetent, Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is at present a controverted question and, as I understand it, is going to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. FERRIS. It is controverted to that extent, it is true. In the act of 1896 it said all surplus lands would be subject to taxation. It has been a mooted question in my State as to whether they could accomplish that, and Judge Cottrell, who is the judge of the western district of Oklahoma, held that they were subject to taxation. That decision was communicated to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire] while the committee was considering this very proposition.

Then, reverting to the suggestion of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], it was the idea that we should not take from or add to what the existing law of 1906 provided and what the courts had held it to be. But the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] reaches a question still beyond that, and that is the proposition that if that act subjected certain surplus lands of incompetent Indians to taxation, and those lands are subject to taxation at some time between payments, or between times when the Indian had an available sum of money when he could himself go and pay the taxes, as he ought to do, it does not, then, seem to be out of place to vest in the Secretary of the Interior the power to go and pay them for him. He has large deposits in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In order to do that you have to assume that these lands are subject to taxation-

Mr. FERRIS. That is true-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In advance of the decision of the court.

Yes, if they are subject to taxation; but the Mr. MANN. amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] did not presume as to that one way or the other.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Well, if it is in that form it is all right. There is no question, as I understand it, about lands that are inherited being subject to taxation?

Mr. FERRIS. No; the bill prescribes that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This bill was intended to read as follows:

That until inherited lands of Indians belonging to the Osage Tribe in Oklahoma shall be partitioned and sold, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay the taxes on said lands out of any money in the Treasury, etc.

Mr. FERRIS. That applies to inherited lands, and it ought to apply to these with equal force.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now if you want to anticipate that the Supreme Court will affirm the judgment of the court in Oklahoma in holding that these lands are subject to taxation, and want to provide in such cases that the Secretary of the Interior shall pay the taxes

Mr. FERRIS. In that connection, I think we have the right to make that assumption. We are fortunate in having here the gentleman who introduced and passed that bill, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire]; and he states with all the earnestness that he has that that was the intention of Congress, and that Congress intended to do that specific thing. I think, therefore, we may safely assume that Congress intended to do that. And in addition to that we have the views of the Federal court which not more than two months ago passed upon that question and declared that that was so.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman may be correct as to that, but I will have to take issue with him as to what the intention of Congress may have been. enacted a great deal of legislation in regard to lands in Oklahoma, and particularly with regard to their taxation, without intending to do what it is claimed was done.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I intended to say that it was the purpose of the Osage Indians and of the Interior Department to frame this original bill of 1906 in such a way as to tax the surplus lands after the expiration of three years.

Mr. FERRIS. It is the opinion of the gentleman that Congress did intend to do that when Congress passed the bill?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It was my intention Mr. BUTLER. Why did the Indian wish to increase his taxation?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. They were getting the benefit of local government.

Mr. MANN. They wanted to be like the whites. Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Why not tax their surplus? There are many of these men who are just as competent as we are to do business.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], I will say that the Indians owned all of this land.

Mr. BUTLER. I think better of the Indians if they fully pay their taxes on this land.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Without the white men they could not have anything in the way of bridges or roads or other improvements, and undoubtedly they did intend that some of the land should be subject to taxation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all general debate be closed on the bill, and that it be read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have a few words to say on this bill myself. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire] did not get through the bill. I had hoped that he would finish.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I went through the bill and stated its purpose as to every section. I did that as briefly as could.

Mr. MANN. I listened attentively to the gentleman, and I was unable to follow him further than the third section. I think the gentleman said that as to sections 4 and 5 and 6 and 7 and 8 and 9 and 10 the purpose was to pass the sections. [Laughter.]
Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman is a little in-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the first section of the bill attracted my attention, in the first place, because it did not mean anything, as reported by the committee. I said to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire] some time ago, in discussing the bill, that section 1, as reported by the committee, did not make sense, and he explained to me that he would read to the House a decision of the court that would show how sensible the section was. But now he frankly admits that there was an error made, and that the bill requires amendment.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I stated further to the gentleman at that time that there was a mistake or misunderstanding, and that it would require an amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman probably imagines that he made that statement to me, but my recollection is not sufficiently good to remember it. However, that is neither here nor there.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Whether I did or not, it is not a serious proposition?

Mr. MANN. No; it is not a serious proposition. If the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] offers the amendment he has suggested, it may be that the Indians will be protected. I remember the occasion when the bill passed the House to subject these surplus lands to taxation.

If I am not mistaken I said then that it would not subject the Indian lands to taxation very long, because the incompetent Indians would not own them very long after they were subjected to taxation. But if that is corrected, I have no objection to that section.

In my judgment section 2 ought to be first amended and then .

stricken out of the bill. [Laughter.]

If it is proposed to have the Osage council pass upon the exchange of these allotments, it ought first to require the approval of the council and then the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. I propose to offer an amendment, in line 9, to strike out the comma where it now is and insert, after the word "recommendation," the words "and approved by it," so that it will provide that the proposed exchange shall be submitted to the Osage council for recommendation and approved by it, and then that the Secretary of the Interior, after that approval, shall have the right to permit the exchange.

I do not quite understand why these exchanges are desired. It would seem to be perfectly plain that if you throw open to all of the Indian homesteads the right to exchange for other homesteads the Indians will be subjected to pressure from every side to get rid of them in some way, by the exchange of homesteads, and produce a condition of unrest among the Indians which ought not to be produced. The Indian who has a homestead now ought to be using it as a homestead, reducing it to cultivation, but the moment you offer him the opportunity to trade it off, you will excite his trading desires rather than his homestead desires, and he will not be left in quiet, because every man who has a chance to skin the Indian will be proposing an exchange of homesteads, and every homestead that is of particular value, either because of the surface of the soil or what is under it, will be subject to the temptation of having somebody making a trade with him. These trades, as a matter of course, would ordinarily be approved by the council, or generally disapproved by them, and I do not think it is fully safe to leave it even to the Secretary of the Interior, who acts through agents there, all of whom may be perfectly honestthough that would be an unusual condition of affairs in this world-but all of whom may not have the best judgment in the What is the object? What will be accomplished? I should like to ask the gentleman what good will be accomplished by permitting the Indian who is living upon a homestead to trade it off and move his homestead to some other

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will yield, I can give him one illustration. In some neighborhoods where there is rich farming land there are a good many Indian farmers; but other Indians are living far off from these points. They want to send their children to school, and by exchanging their homesteads that are in some of these out-of-the-way places they can get into a neighborhood where there is a good school which will accommodate them. Possibly some bachelor may have the land around the schoolhouse, and a man with children could exchange with the bachelor. Part of the lands are very rough and mountainous, not suitable for the location of school buildings, while others are agricultural lands.

Mr. MANN. What the gentleman says is true, but that is a very good fairy tale. What are the facts? When these allotments were made the Indians took for homesteads the best land on the reservation. Then they took some surplus lands of less value, and then they were permitted to take some additional surplus lands of still less value. Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] says the reason they want to permit the exchange of homesteads is to permit the man who lives on poor land to come and get the best land. Why, he now owns the best land as his homestead, and if he is permitted to exchange it for surplus lands he will be relegated to places where there are no schools and where the land is poor and probably fit only for What good will it do to permit those Indians to be subjected to the temptation, from start to finish, of having a man offer them what they consider better trades in order to get their homesteads away from them?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do not know whether I made it plain or not. I intended to make this statement, and it is all there is to the proposition: The large majority of these people, nearly half of whom are just as competent as anybody, many of them worth $50,000, $100,000, or $200,000, desire to get their lands adjacent and contiguous. Now, that was the sole purpose of this provision. That being the desire of all those people, including the council, the question then arose, How can it be be to referenced? be best safeguarded? And it was thought that to put it up not only to the Secretary of the Interior, as has always been the case with all the tribes of the Union, but to take the double precaution, where a person of greater and one of lesser ability want to exchange allotments, and put it before both the local council and the Secretary of the Interior would be the best way to safeguard it. The purpose is to make their lands more valuable, and it ought to be done.

I live there; I know the situation; I know these people want it, and I know that no one is going to get hurt by it; but it will,

on the contrary, add value to their lands.

Mr. MANN. It is a very desirable thing at times to leave something to the discretion of some officer; but it is never desirable to adopt a vicious principle and leave the execution of it to an officer, hoping that the vicious principle will not do any If the gentleman were proposing to authorize an Indian having a homestead to exchange for the homestead of another Indian, I would not object; or if he were proposing to authorize the surplus lands of one Indian to be exchanged for the surplus lands of another Indian I would not object; but what you propose to do is to permit the homestead of an Indian, 160 acres of good land, to be exchanged so that in the end he will own as a homestead 160 acres of $2 land instead of 160 acres of $50 land, such as he owned in the first place. might receive the difference in cash for aught I know, but his homestead would be valueless as a homestead.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. If it is not too long; I do not want to lose all my time.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Just a brief statement. The bill specifically provides that if a homestead is exchanged the party exchanging it must have its equivalent in value, and the equivalent must be set aside as a homestead and so designated and made inalienable, as under the present law. It is not confined to 160 acres of land, but it may be more if necessary. It must be its equivalent in value, and it is done under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior and the Osage council.

Mr. MANN. I know all that.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. But the gentleman said 160 acres of $2 land, and it could not be done in that way

Mr. MANN. It could be done in that way, and there is no other way if the provisions of the bill are to be executed. they intend in good faith to follow that provision of the bill it ought to be stricken out because there will be no surplus lands of the value of the homestead land to be exchanged unless you give him a very large acreage for a homestead, and that is ridiculous.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It is not ridiculous.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman allow me? I know the gentleman from Illinois has not skipped a single word in the bill or a single thought, and therefore he knows that the decision in the last analysis is left to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. I know that, and I have so stated half a dozen

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; and I am simply stating it for another purpose. The Secretary of the Interior is the one who made the first allotment to the Indians. This gives him no greater power than he had in the first place, but it gives him the right to revise and to make his first decision stronger and better than he did in the beginning.

Mr. MANN. Oh, this is quite a different thing. Mr. FERRIS. If he made any mistakes in the first allotment he ought to be allowed to correct them.

Mr. MANN. I am willing to allow the Secretary to correct any errors if he made any. In the first place, the allotments were made of homesteads of the most valuable lands. there was another allotment made of the surplus lands, and a third allotment was made of additional surplus lands so as to even up the property allotted to each Indian. The best lands were taken for the homesteads and the poorest property was in the last allotment. Now, when you authorize by law any homestead in the reservation to be exchanged for surplus land you subject any white man to undue pressure, and much less incompetent Indians. Everybody knows that the white man of Oklahoma Territory has no special objection to taking possession of some of this land, even if the Indian loses it. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, just for illustration, we have in the United States, all told, only a trifle more than 300,000 Indians. We have an Indian bill now coming in that proposes to appropriate six or eight million dollars for their care and support. If we made the same proportionate appropriation for the aid of the white people of the United States, it would take more than $2,000,000,000 a year. Why do we have to appropriate this money out of the Treasury of the United States? We say that the Indians are our wards and that we permitted them to lose their property, to trade it off to the whites or lose it, and therefore we feel under obligations to give them support. favor of first protecting their property and see that they are treated fairly and see that we are treated fairly, so that we will not be compelled to constantly pay money out of the Treasury for the support of these Indians, who ought to be supported out of their own property.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that a great deal of this money which is appropriated for the support of the In-dians is trust funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Indians, and that the money allotted among the Indians by the Indian appropriation bill comparatively little of it is a pure gratuity?

Mr. MANN. I think that is not the fact. A large share of it comes out of the Treasury of the United States and does not come out of the trust funds of the Indians.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER. Are homesteads limited to 160 acres?

Mr. MANN. I think, in the first place, they were allotted 160 acres for a homestead.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. One hundred and sixty acres. Mr. COOPER. Then I would like to ask this question, which was suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Anderson]: Suppose an Indian wants to exchange 160 acres for much poorer land; he would have to receive much more than 160 acres to make it equivalent to the homestead, and would it be lawful to declare the greater amount a homestead?

Mr. MANN. We would have the right to declare the greater amount a homestead. We might give an Indian 2,000 acres, but everybody knows that that is a ridiculous proposition.

Mr. CARTER. I want to say that some of the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribe have 500 or 600 acres in homesteads.

Mr. MANN. I am glad of it. Mr. Chairman, there has been some discussion about section 3 as to what is the meaning of the language-

That the property of deceased and of orphan minor, insane, or other incompetent allottees of the Osage Tribe, such incompetency being determined by the taws of the State of Oklahoma.

The use of the language in the bill is not very happy in that it confuses, as it seems to me, the question of competency as declared by the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of the lands, and the question of incompetency fixed by the laws of the

The incompetents in the State are the insane, minors, idiots, possibly spendthrifts. As I understand that provision in reference to fixing incompetents by the State of Oklahoma, it would not provide that that State would have any control over the question of competency as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior so as to authorize the sale of lands, or anything of that sort, beyond the control or over what we usually call incompetents in all States.

But I would like to ask the gentleman, in view of the lan-guage "subject to the jurisdiction of the probate courts in the State of Oklahoma," does the State of Oklahoma have a court by the title of probate court?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The statute, I think, has been changed since the bill was first drawn. It is now the county court.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it was changed since the bill was drawn.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I mean the original bill.

Mr. MANN. Because in another provision it speaks of the county court.

Mr. DAVENPORT. The county court exercises probate jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. The committee has recommended striking out section 5, restricting the alienation of all or a portion of the surplus lands of any Osage allottee, and so forth. This bill will go into conference, if it passes the House, and probably would emerge from conference with that section in it, and when the bill is read under the five-minute rule I shall offer an amendment to strike out the language "register of deeds for Osage County" and insert "Osage Agency." It seems to me the form of the bill as it came from the Senate is unworkable. It proposes where the removal of restrictions is made that the public records shall be kept in the office of the register of deeds for Osage County, showing what land each allottee is authorized to alienate. How would they get into the possession of the register of deeds and who would pay the expenses? Would they be recorded in the registry of deeds? Who would know anything about it? No one, until he got ready to take the land from the Indian. If the restrictions be removed, there ought to be some public place where anybody can go and obtain information, and the only place you can do that is with the Osage agencies.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I might say that we struck that out for the very reason the gentleman from Illinois has stated. We thought the Congress of the United States ought not to try to impose upon a county official a duty for which there was no money to pay him and which there was no way to require him to do.

Mr. MANN. There is no way of giving it to him. Mr. FERRIS. Yes; and we struck it out for that reason.

Mr. MANN. As to section 5. I would suggest to the gentle-man that the language is somewhat mixed.

Mr. CARTER. Is that the present section 5? Mr. MANN. Section 6 of the original bill—

That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, hereby is authorized, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him and upon application therefor, to pay to Osage allottees, including the blind, crippled, aged, or helpless, all or part of the funds in the Treasury of the United States to their individual credit.

If you stop there, you ought not to insert the word "insane," but with the provise that is in here you must insert the word "insane" as descriptive of the class of incompetents. Then you Then you go alread with the proviso that he shall be first satisfied of the connetency of the allottee, which, of course, would not include an insane person-or that the release of said individual's trust funds would be to the manifest best interests and welfare of the allottee: Provided further, That an trust funds of a miner or a person so afflicted as above mentioned, or an allottee non compos mentis shall be released and paid over except upon the appointment of a guardian.

You have made no provision in there in reference to the funds of the insane person in the first part of it. You must insert the word "insane" above or strike it out in your second proviso.

Mr. FERRIS. It ought to be inserted, undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. The original section 7 provides that from and after the approval of this act the lands of deceased Osage allottees, unless the heirs desire to and can agree as to partition of the same, may be partitioned or sold upon proper order of the county court of Osage County, State of Oklahoma. I had a note in my copy of this bill to strike out "the county court of Osage County, State of Oklahoma" and insert "in a court of competent jurisdiction." I presume there is no objection to that, because I have since been told that the county court did not have the power of ordering a partition of property in that State.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Congress has the authority to give it the power.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but if they have no authority under the State law they would not have authority to exercise that power.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; they would. The Supreme Court has decided that if Congress grants jurisdiction to a court with respect to Indian matters, that court has jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. power to compel the State court to do anything, and if the State laws provide, as I understand they do in this case, that another court of superior jurisdiction shall have jurisdiction over partition proceedings, we may say that the county court shall have jurisdiction, but the county court can not exercise the jurisdiction, because it must exercise jurisdiction under the laws of its own State first.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. In the case of Indians, the courts can exercise jurisdiction given by the Congress of the United States, but, notwithstanding that, I think the gentle-man's suggestion is a good one.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that I caught all of the gentleman's suggestion, but I think this same identical question was under consideration when the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter] had a bill here, and I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] raised that same question at that time. At that time this identical question of conferring jurisdiction on a State court was submitted to the Attorney General's office at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, and the Attorney General's office was of the opinion that Congress could confer jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. That was an entirely different proposition.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; that was a different proposition. Mr. FERRIS. It was a question of conferring power of appointing appraisers.

Mr. CARTER. That was in respect to the question of a Federal judge, as I remember.

Mr. MANN. We can undoubtedly confer power upon the local court to appoint appraisers, but we could not compel the court to exercise the power. In this case the county court could not exercise the jurisdiction, because the State court has conferred jurisdiction in partition matters upon another court, so that neither one could exercise the jurisdiction if this bill passed.

Mr. FERRIS. What was that statement-that the county court could not order a partition and sale?

Mr. MANN. That is what I have been told. Mr. FERRIS. That is not the case. The county court has the power to order a partition and sale.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows better than I do. I have been informed that the district court in the gentleman's State has control over partition matters.

Mr. FERRIS. In estates.

Mr. MANN. But this is not a matter of estates.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Our district court is the only court that has the power to order a partition of interests in inherited estates, or any other estates.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of probate proceedings.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I wanted to explain that in probate matters, ordering a sale of minor's land, upon proper showing, they have that power, but they have no power in the probate court to handle the landed estate except to see that it goes to the proper heirs.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman is wrong about that,

Mr. DAVENPORT. No; I am not.

Mr. MANN. In the original section 7 of the bill, on page 6, in line 11, it provides:

The shares due minor heirs, including such Indian heirs as may not be tribal members, and those Indian heirs not having certificates of competency, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States—

And so forth. I do not understand just what is intended to be accomplished by that. Does the gentleman mean shares due to minor heirs, including minor Indian heirs? You say-the shares due minor heirs, including such Indian heirs as may not be tribal members.

That might include heirs 90 years old.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Members, I suppose, of another Indian tribe. You see, they have intermarried.

Mr. MANN. But you say—minor heirs, including such Indian heirs as may not be tribal mem-

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is right.

Mr. MANN. It may mean such minor heirs, or that Indian heirs who may not be tribal members. Do you propose to include under the term "minor heirs" adults who are members of the tribe?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. We do not, of course.

Mr. MANN. Well, you say it.

Mr. JACKSON. It says before that-if some of the heirs are competent and others have not certificates of competency, the proceeds of such part of the sale as the competent heirs shall be entitled to shall be paid to them without the intervention of an administrator.

Mr. MANN. That does not cover this. These Indian heirs may or may not be competent. The provisions in your section is you dispose of lands of competent Indian heirs, and here is a provision which says minor heirs shall include other Indian heirs not members of the tribe. Now, if the purpose is to include only minor Indian heirs you should say so; if not, let us know what it does mean.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit, I think that clearly means enrolled Indians on other than the Osage tribal As to whether it is intended to include those who have reached their majority, I will not attempt to say.

Mr. MANN. It does include those who have reached their majority under the term "minor heirs." That is what I want to know, whether that is the purpose or not. It then provides that this money shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of the Indians upon the same conditions as attached to segregated shares of the Osage national fund or paid to the duly appointed guardian. Will the gentleman object to inserting, after the word "or," the amendment "with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior"?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I would not object. Mr. MANN. Because that is the only safeguard. that, if somebody has managed to get a guardian appointed for an Indian and the guardian gets the money, God knows what will become of it. Now, the committee struck out "or be disbursed in such manner and to such extent as the Secretary of the Interior may determine." What does the committee expect to be done with this money?

Mr. FERRIS. I will say these funds are held subject to be disbursed as Congress may provide, and every session of Congress we have provided a certain per capita payment shall be made and trust funds turned over, and we do not ordinarily give the Secretary of the Interior power to expend in an unlimited way the funds of the Indians. With that language left in the bill the Secretary could expend for any purpose all the funds, if he wanted, and for any purpose he saw fit, and the committee did not think he ought to have that much authority.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In other words, become part of the tribal funds.

Mr. MANN. What are those conditions? Mr. FERRIS. We have had other funds subject to the same restrictions as undistributed trust funds. They are held in trust, drawing 4 per cent interest, for the benefit of the tribes, and deposited in different depositories and interest paid at intervals.

Mr. CARTER. I think the amendment offered is a much better restriction than the one stricken out.

Mr. MANN. In the original section 8, which provides:

That the lands allotted to members of the Osage Tribe shall not in any manner whatsoever or at any time heretofore or hereafter be en-cumbered, taken, or sold to secure or satisfy any debt.

The committee recommended the striking out of the words "or at any time heretofore or hereafter." I take it there can be only one purpose in that, and that is to authorize the encumbrances which have been made upon these lands heretofore to have some effect.

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman think as amended it would do that?

Mr. MANN. What is the purpose in striking it out?

Mr. CARTER. I do not object, but I want to get the gentleman's opinion on that point. I agree with the gentleman that ought not to be done, and-

Mr. MANN. What is the purpose of striking it out?
Mr. CARTER. And I do not think the change does that. I can not give the gentleman that information.

Mr. MANN. I know there can be no other purpose in striking it out, except-

Mr. JACKSON. I remember that in the committee, and it appears on the face of it that it is mere surplusage. If you are going to permit the allottee to encumber his land in any way what is the use of saying at any time or heretofore or hereafter or any other time?

Mr. MANN. There is some use to say any time hereafter when you say they shall not do it, but it is quite necessary sometimes to say it shall not be done heretofore, and that is what this means.

Mr. JACKSON. It does not mak Mr. MANN. It does make sense. It does not make sense to say-

Mr. JACKSON. When the legislation takes effect in the future

Mr. MANN. It takes effect in the future-that they shall not hereafter do it-but why should not we provide at the same time that if they have done it in the past it shall not be legalized?

Mr. JACKSON. I do not know that there is any objection to that.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will turn to line 7 he will

That no lands or moneys inherited from Osage allottees shall be subject to or be taken or sold to secure the payment of any indebtedness incurred by such heir prior to the time such lands and moneys are paid to such heir

Mr. MANN. Why did the committee propose to take out this other language?

Mr. FERRIS. Because they thought this would apply.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think that was done on a motion of mine. As it read it said-

That the lands allotted to members of the Osage Tribe shall not in any manner whatsoever, or at any time heretofore or hereafter, be en-

That is not very good English, and the intention was to absolutely limit it, and it should not be done at any time. Heretofore means something in the past.

Mr. MANN. We know what it means. I wondered why it was stricken out.

Mr, BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman it was done entirely at my suggestion, believing it would improve the language of the bill, and there was no other thought. Mr. MANN. I recognize the gentleman as authority upon English grammar now more than ever.

Mr. CARTER. If the language had been left in it would mean nothing, because if a legal transfer were made prior to the passage of the bill it could not be vitiated by a later enactment, and if it were not legal when made this would not con-

Mr. MANN. We have control over the lands of these Indians, and here you propose to insert a provision saying it shall not be encumbered in the future to pay debts. We have the same authority to say an encumbrance already made to secure debts, not if it had good validity—
Mr. CARTER. Not if it had validity when it was made.

Mr. MANN. No validity.
Mr. CARTER. I do not think the gentleman would contend that it should give them validity.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether it does or not. I am in favor of declaring that if they had attempted to encumber these lands to pay debts they should not now.

Mr. CARTER. I wanted to ask the gentleman what he would have said if we had left the original language in the bill?

Mr. MANN. I would have said that for once the Committee on Indian Affairs was trying to protect the rights of the Indians. [Laughter.]
Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.
Mr. COOPER. It seems to me there could be an improvement in lines 10 and 11. How do they "pay" land to heirs in Oklahoma? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. That is like the first section, where it says that "no land shall be taken to secure the payment of any indebtedness." What do you mean by the word "secure"?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

I did not get the question.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not answer that. Possibly he can answer this one. The Senate had this provision in:

Incurred by such heir prior to the time such lands or money are turned over to such heirs.

And our Committee on Indian Affairs turned over to the heirs and provided that no such money should be given to the heirs. I do not know, of course. Probably they find that in some school of rhetoric. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] very naturally inquires how you "pay" land to a man. I assume that the Committee on Indian Affairs—

Mr. CARTER. How would you "turn over" land?

Mr. MANN. That is very easy. You would turn it over by deed. I assume that the Committee on Indian Affairs must have reason for striking out "turning over" lands and inserting lands. [Laughter.]

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Would the gentleman be satisfied with the word "transfer" or "convey

Mr. MANN. There is nothing of the kind in the original proposition. It says:

The time said lands and moneys are paid to such heirs.

Mr. JACKSON. Perhaps the Committee on Indian Affairs thought the lands had been turned over too many times

Mr. MANN. It appears that originally the Osage allottees were paid on the order of the Secretary of the Interior. Now it is upon the order of the county court of Osage County. Who will make the order? And to whom will it be made? How will the order apply?

Mr COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption

there?

Mr. MANN Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman think there ought to be any restriction as to the amount that can be paid for a coffin in which to inter one of these aborigines? I have just been told that in one case a coffin in which to bury an Indian cost $800

Mr. BUTLER. He was a good Indian. [Laughter.]
Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman does not mean to say that it costs a member of this tribe $800, does he?

Mr. COOPER. No; not this tribe, but it was done with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, just like this pro-

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That might have occurred in Wisconsin.

Mr. BUTLER. That was taken out of his own money, prob-

Mr. COOPER. No; I presume the county court checked it out of its own funds. [Laughter.] Probably it was taken out of the fund-

Mr. MANN. I suppose there is more satisfaction to a dead Indian to have his money expended in an elaborate funeral than to spend it in his lifetime. I have often seen cases where that was true with respect to white people, using the word "satisfaction" in a little different meaning. But the probate court can not do this. The probate court can approve the funeral expenses, but it can not make an order for the payment of this money which is in the Treasury of the United States.

Then, this provision is in here, providing that "nothing herein shall be so construed as to exempt such property from liability to taxes." Of course, if it is liable to taxes, it is not necessary. If it is not liable for taxes it should have no place in the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope this bill will be amended in some particulars so as to make it a workable bill and so as to pro-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent that after 10 minutes general debate be dispensed with and that the bill be read under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Ste-PHENS] asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in 10 minutes and that the bill be then read under the fiveminute rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this bill will be voted down.

There are two classifications of land in the Osage part of the West, roughly—bottoms and uplands. Almost without exception the bottom land is the more valuable land taken in comparison with the uplands. In the law of 1906, in which the Osage Indians were allotted their land, it was provided, first, that the Osage Indian should select 160 acres as a homestead. The Osage Indians have been in their present territory now for over half a century. Many of the Indians had actual home-steads before the time of allotment. There were some improvements in the way of houses and barns and fences on some of these homesteads. Under the law of 1906, naturally an Indian did one of two things: He either selected his old homestead, which was in the bottoms, or he went somewhere else and selected a valuable bottom 160 acres.

Now, the law of 1906 also provided that after the first allotment of 160 acres the Indian could select a second parcel, another 160 acres; that after he had made the second selection he could make a third, also of 160 acres; and that thereafter he could have his share of the residue remaining after the distribution of the whole. Now, it happens that the first 160 acres selected as a homestead in Oklahoma is worth something like $25 an acre; that I the second selection, the uplands, the rocky land, is worth about $4 an acre; and the residue is probably worth still less.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That statement is absolutely without any facts to base it upon. I do not know where the gentleman gets that kind of information. You can not get it from the Osage Agency, and you can not get it from the Osage people, and you can not get it from the Interior Department.

Mr. MURDOCK. I think the gentleman will find that that statement will be fully substantiated if he makes inquiry at the Interior Department. In any event, the first selection of a bottom homestead was a selection of valuable land.

The value of bottom land, as the gentleman knows, runs over $25 an acre—sometimes $50 an acre and sometimes $100 an acre, according to proximity to city, and sometimes to $150 an acre, whereas sometimes the high and rocky land, as mentioned by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens], will not bring as much as $4 an acre.

Now, the act of 1906—if the gentleman will permit—provided that the Indian should not alienate the homestead. That was our guardianship over the Osage Indians, not the guardianship of the Osage Council or of the Secretary of the Interior, but the protection of the law.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. With pleasure. Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I find on page 6 a provision that reads as follows:

When the heirs of such deceased allottees have certificates of comare hereby removed.

I have been trying to find out all through this debate what the general restrictions on alienation are, if there are any.

Mr. MURDOCK. I confess to the gentleman that I do not There was a provision in the law of 1906 that this homestead land should not be alienated and that it should not be taxed for 25 years.

Mr. Chairman, I have never had my fund of sentimentality drawn upon heavily by the noble red man. He is not always noble, and not infrequently he is not red. I have lived all my life in territory which was once Osage reserve. I have seen some of the migrations of the Indian tribes into their present holdings. The relation of the white man to the Indian in this country from the first has not been flattering. did not have much civilization at the start. His civilization was a different civilization from that of the white man, not only in degree, but also in kind. When he was removed to a reservation his condition became, as most of the Members here on the floor from my part of the country know, pitiable.

Members talk here about the Osage Indians being the richest tribe on earth. They are the richest tribe on earth, and have been that for many years; but what has been the condition of the Osage Indians in the past—even within the last 10 years? The term "riches" ought not here to convey the idea of luxury. When I was first elected to Congress, one of the things which stirred my young legislative breast and led me to believe that I could be of use down here in the matter of reform was in connection with my desire to wipe out the then existing "prorate house." As the gentleman from Oklahoma will remember, the "prorate house" was a small shack on wheels, occupied by the white traders of the Osage Nation. On the quarterly payment day, when the members of this richest tribe on earth received their portion of annuity from the Government of the United States, they were paid their money at the window of the agency by the agent. The white traders used to roll the prorate house around in front of the window of the agency, form a cordon of white men on either side a lane, and as soon as one of the members of this richest tribe on earth received his Government annuity, grab him and conduct him summarily through the gauntlet into the wheeled house of the traders. Just what then happened to him, no outside white man was ever able to find out, but the tradition was that the Indian's money was taken away from him, prorated among the traders to whom he was indebted, and the Indian thereupon was turned loose to contemplate the advantages of affluence.

Now, the Osage Indians are the richest tribesmen in the world; but the full-blood Osage Indian ought not to be left unprotected by this Congress. For him his homestead allot-ment is the last ditch. He ought not to be left to the mercy of some county officer in Oklahoma or to the Osage council, or to the Secretary of the Interior in the matter of alienating his homestead. We ought to keep our guardianship over him intact, and the way to keep it intact is to beat this bill if the provision for the exchange of homestead remains in it.

minute you pass this bill, and permit the Indian to exchange his homestead of 160 acres for another homestead of any extent, of supposedly equal value, that minute there will begin a movement in the Osage country which will take the valuable bottom land out of the hands of the full-blood Indian and place it in the hands of his more intelligent Indian brother, or the white man. [Applause.]
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask that the bill be now read under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the committee general debate is now closed, and the bill will be read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it cnacted, etc., That from and after the approval of this act all allotments belonging to members of the Osage Tribe of Indians, except homesteads, be, and the same hereby arc, declared subject to taxation, under the laws of the State of Oklahoma, from and after issuance of the certificate of competency or removal of restrictions on allenation: Provided, That inherited lands shall be subject to taxation from and after the date of death of the allottee; and until said lands be partitioned or sold the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay the taxes on said land out of moneys due and payable to the heirs from the segregated decedent's funds in the Treasury of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, after the enacting clause, lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, and line 8 to and including the word "Provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before that is put, I should like to know what the gentleman is going to do with reference to the balance of it?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. As soon as that is stricken out, I will offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] had an amendment to go in there.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. As soon as the vote is taken to strike out the Senate provision and insert the House provision I am going to move a further amendment, which I think will meet the intention of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, as a further amendment, in line 9, page 1, I move to strike out the words "subject to taxation from"—

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman undertaking now to offer the other committee amendment?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I did not know there was any other committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. This ought to be disposed of before we vote on the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment is first in order.

Mr. MANN. I know that is ordinarily the case, but that is not requisite, and the gentleman offers an amendment which ought to be offered before the committee amendment is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, then, the gentleman may offer his amendment.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. In line 9, page 1, I move to strike out after the word "be" the words "subject to taxation from and after the date of death of the allottee; and until said lands be," so that it will read:

That until the inherited lands of the Osage Tribe of Indians shall be partitioned or sold, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay the taxes on said lands out of any money due and payable to the heirs from the segregated decedents' funds in the Treasury of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, lines 9 and 10, page 1, by striking out the words "subject to taxation from and after the date of death of the allottee, and until said lands be."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 8, page 1, by inserting the words "until the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 0, by inserting the words "of the Osage Tribe of Indians."

Mr. DAVENPORT. Before that amendment is agreed to, I move to insert after the word "of" the words "the deceased members of," so that it will read:

That until the inherited lands of the deceased members of the Osage Tribe of Indians

And so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment, in line 9, page 1, by inserting after the word "of" the words "the deceased members of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to move to recommit the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order in Committee of the Whole, but it will be later on.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is it in order at the present time to move to strike out the enacting clause? Mr. MANN. It is in order at any time to make that motion, but I hope the gentleman will not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 3, by striking out the word "moneys" and inserting the words "in money."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next section. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, where the same would be to the best interests of Osage allottees, and the same is submitted to the Osage council, for recommendation to permit the exchange of homesteads or other allotments, or any portions thereof, of Osage allottees under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe and upon such terms as he shall approve: Provided, That where a homestead or homesteads pass in the exchange, in whole or in part, an equivalent in value of land suitable for agricultural purposes shall be furnished, to be designated as a homestead. The new homestead shall be subject to the same restrictions as the original homestead. The Secretary shall have authority to do any and all things necessary to make these exchanges effective.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 9 by striking out after the word "council" the comma and inserting after the word "recommendation" the words "and approved by it" with a comma. I suppose it is proper to refer to the Osage council by the pronoun "it"?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 9, by striking out the comma after the word "council" and inserting after the word "recommendation" the words "and approved by it" with a comma.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will be agreed to, but after it is agreed to I shall move to strike out the section. There are very few Members of the House present just now, and as it is useless to discuss a proposition with only the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs present, with the expectation of overruling them by their own votes

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, will the gentleman be willing to exclude the provision as to homesteads and allow them to exchange surplus lands?

Mr. MANN. As far as I am personally concerned, I am willing to do that if there can be an understanding that when this goes to conference homesteads will not be reinserted.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Of course, I can not speak for the conferees, but the gentlemen from Kansas and Illinois seem to object to the provision in regard to homesteads. The Indians ask it, but if it is going to endanger the bill, which is badly needed and ought to pass, I should prefer to have it stricken out.

Mr. MANN. Well, of course I can speak only for myself; I can not speak for the other Members of the House. Nobody understands that better than I do.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would much rather it be

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would much rather it be stricken out than that we should lose the bill at this session.

Mr. MANN. I fully appreciate the fact that striking this section out of the bill, in my judgment, does not affect the merits of the rest of the bill at all or the working of the rest of the bill.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It does not, but it affects the value of the lands. If they can make the exchanges, it will enhance the value of their land.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know enough about it to object to giving the Secretary of the Interior, under the restrictions here, power to permit them to exchange surplus lands one with another. I can see that that would be advantageous, but I am opposed to permitting them to be tempted by the exchange of homestead lands.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I wish the gentleman would offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. MANN. I was going to raise the point of no quorum, but

Mr. MANN. I was going to raise the point of no quorum, but for the present I will not do it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, what is the gentleman's amendment; what is the effect of it?

Mr. MANN. The amendment is simply to require the approval of the Osage council before anything is done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman form Libraican.

by the gentleman from Illinois,
The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if the word "until," in line 8, page 1, is still in the bill? There does not seem to be any sense in it.

Mr. MANN. That is right as it is. I will say to the gentleman that there has been an amendment made which makes it read "until the inherited lands of the deceased members of the Osage Tribe of Indians shall be partitioned or sold, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized," and so forth.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Is the portion subjecting it to taxes stricken

Mr. MANN, All of it. Mr. Chairman, I will offer a motion so as to have something pending to strike out the section and see if we can perfect it.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Then I would like to offer an amendment, perhaps, to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MANN. Let us see how it would leave it to permit the exchange of allotments other than homesteads.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Make it read "to permit the exchange of surplus allotments." That is the way they are described in the surplus allotments. ignated under the law, or any portion thereof, and after the word "approve," in line 12, strike out the rest of the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move, then, in line 10, to strike out the words "homesteads or other" and insert in lieu thereof the word "surplus," so that it will read, "to permit the exchange of surplus allotments."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 10, by striking out the words "homesteads or other" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "surplus."

Mr. MANN. There is no question but that the words "surplus allotments" covers it, is there?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It covers it absolutely under the law

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. Mann. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso beginning on line 12, page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk rend as follows:

Page 2, line 12, amend by striking out all of the proviso down to and including the end of line 17.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to that. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered y the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. The word "Provided" should go out and the colon in line 12 should be made a period.

You preserve lines 18 and 19?

Mr. FERRIS. You

Mr. MANN. Yes. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "approve," in line 12, insert a period in lieu of the colon.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. George having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 20842. An act to provide for a tax upon white phosphorus matches, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 15471. An act making appropriation for repair, preservation, and exhibition of the trophy flags now in store in the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.

OSAGE INDIANS, OKLAHOMA.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the property of deceased and of orphan minor, insane, or other incompetent allottees of the Osage Tribe, such incompetency being determined by the laws of the State of Oklahoma, which are hereby extended for such purpose to the allottees of said tribe, shall, in probate matters, be subject to the jurisdiction of the probate courts of the State of Oklahoma, but a copy of all papers filed in the probate court shall be served on the superintendent of the Osage Agency at the time of filing, and said superintendent is authorized, whenever the interests of the allottee require, to appear in the probate court for the protection of the Interests of the allottee. The superintendent of the Osage Agency or the Secretary of the Interior, whenever he deems the same necessary, may investigate the conduct of executors, administrators, and guardians or other persons having in charge the estate of any deceased allottee or of minors or persons incompetent under the laws of Oklahoma, and whenever he shall be of opinion that the estate is in any manner being dissipated or wasted or is being permitted to deteriorate in value by reason of the negligence, carciessness, or incompetency of the guardian or other person in charge of the estate, the superintendent of the Osage Agency or the Secretary of the Interior or his representative shall have power, and it shall be his duty, to report said matter to the probate court and take the necessary steps to have such case fully investigated, and also to prosecute any remedy, either civil or criminal, as the exigencies of the case and the preservation and protection of the interests of the allottee or his estate may require, the costs and expenses of the civil proceedings to be a charge upon the estate of the allottee or upon the executor, administrator, guardian, or other person in charge of the estate of any Osage allottee shall be subject to the provisions of this section and shall contain therein a reference hereto: Provided, That no guardian shall be appointed for a minor whose parents are living, unless the estate of said minor is being wasted or misused by such parents: Provided further, That no land shall be sold or allenated under the provisions of this section without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am afraid there might be some question, under the language of this bill, in reference to what is meant by the words "incompetent allottees of the Osage Tribe, such incompetency being determined by the laws of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that I think the laws of the State of Oklahema provide who shall be competent to transact business and who shall not, such as minors, insane persons, the feeble-minded, and so forth. That is evidently what the courts would hold.

Mr. MANN. It is not sufficient ever to say to me that a certain thing is evidently what the courts would hold. I have been a practicing lawyer too long.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the courts take judicial notice of the statutes of the States and of the United States, and when a law states that it is subject to the laws of another State you do not have to restate that law? The courts take notice of the acts of the legislatures of the States and of the acts of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I discovered that before I went to the law school, and it is good law. The gentleman is right. This bill in the original section 10 defines what is the meaning of the word "competent" as follows:

The word "competent," as used in this act, shall mean a person to whom a certificate has been issued authorizing alienation of all the lands comprising his allotment except his homestcad.

Here is a proposition in this section to allow a definition, not of the word "competent" which we have, but of the word "incompetency," which is supposed to be directly the opposite of the word "competency," according to the laws of the State of Oklahoma. I think no one here desires to have Oklahoma given permission to go into anything in reference to competency or incompetency, except as to those classes of cases or persons that are declared incompetent by practically all of the States. such as the insane, idiots, minors, spendthrifts, perhaps, and that sort, because it is not the purpose, as I understand this section—and that is what I would like to know—to allow the probate court to take possession of all the property of all the Indians who are not competent. But it might bear that construction. Is that what the gentleman wants? Here is an in-competent Indian, who is incompetent so far as the definition of competency is concerned, incapable of alienating his property on account of incompetency. Does the gentleman propose to let the probate court step in and have control of the property of that Indian on the ground that he is incompetent?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, my understanding of the bill is that it designates the statutes of the State of Oklahoma to prescribe incompetency so far as this section is concerned, and the incompetency prescribed by the statute of Oklahoma prevails with respect to this paragraph, and that only the insane, the feeble-minded, and so forth, would be affected.

Mr. MANN. Let us suppose there is a spendthrift. I take it that all of the States provide for taking possession of the property of a spendthrift on the ground of incompetency. Here is an Indian who is now incompetent. Suppose somebody files a petition in the county court of Osage County alleging that this Indian is incompetent under the laws of the State of Oklahoma because he is a spendthrift. Do I understand, then, that the probate court is going to take possession of his property?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think it ought to.

Mr. MANN. Is it not now under the centrol of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Not as to his qualities of spending. The property is under the control of the Secretary of the Interior so far as giving any money is concerned outside of his annuities. He can do as he pleases about it and spend it as fast as he wants to. This does not give the probate court any jurisdiction that would permit the Indian to secure his money out of the Treasury or sell his land without the sanction of the Secretary

Mr. MANN. Of course this does not permit the probate court in any event to sell the property of the Indian.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Not without the sanction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. It does not permit the probate court to do it unless it is authorized by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know of somebody what is meant by the language beginning in line 21, page 3:

* * * and the preservation and protection of the interests of the allottee or his estate may require, the costs and expenses of the civil proceedings to be a charge upon the estate of the allottee or upon the executor, administrator, guardian, or other person in charge of the estate of the allottee.

And so forth

That provides that where the property has been misappropriated or squandered by the guardian or administrator, the ward, the Indian, ought to pay the cost of recovering it back. Why not let the costs follow as in other cases? I do not think it ought to be left in the discretion of the court to say whether he shall pay it or not.

Mr. MANN. I call the gentleman's attention to the lan-

The cost and expenses of the civil proceedings to be a charge upon the estate of the allottee or upon the executor, administrator, guardian, or other person in charge of the estate of the allottee, and his surety, as the probate court shall determine.

Mr. BOOHER. I understand that language is there; but why should there be a provision in there at all that the estate of the ward should in any case pay the expenses?

Mr. MANN. But supposing a proceeding is commenced at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of bringing a suit against the guardian or the administrator, and that falls, and the administrator wins the suit.

Mr. BOOHER, Yes.

Who is to pay the expenses? Mr. MANN.

Mr. BOOHER. It certainly ought not to be taken out of the estate of the ward where the guardian has squandered the estate. Let the party who brings the suit pay the cost.

Mr. MANN. But the Government is doing that as the guardian of the ward, and of course will take that out of the funds of the word. I take it, these suits would not be idly brought by the Government. The gentleman would not propose that if the Government endeavors to presecute the administrator in behalf of its ward, the expense of that should be put upon the State of Oklahoma or should be paid out of the National Treasury on the other hand?

Mr. BOOHER. No; if this stands as it is, the probate court has the discretion of charging the costs against the estate of the ward, even though the ward wins the suit.

Mr. MANN. Courts usually have the power of adjudging costs, but they generally assess them against the defeated party. I think that is all this means. Sometimes the costs are divided.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "require," in line 22, page 3, the words "that no part of."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 22, after the word "require," insert the words "that no part of."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me call the gentleman's attention to line 1, page 4, where it says, "As the probate court shall determine." That language, I think, will make the amendment of the gentleman unnecessary.

Mr. BOOHER. Well, I will move to strike it out when I get to it. Mr. TURNBULL. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the whole matter is under the jurisdiction of the court, and what is the use of talking about costs if it is going to the courts of Oklahoma in this manner to be settled? Is not the question of cost settled there?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think so. .
Mr. TURNBULL. It ought not to be here in this, and I do not think you can do it by this proceeding.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I will say the purpose of the paragraph is to protect the property of the Indian where suit has been brought as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. I desire to say the committee considered this carefully.

Mr. MANN. I will suggest to the gentleman I do not quite see how the Government should proceed. Suppose the estate of a ward has been destroyed and so you bring suit against the administrator and cause the superintendent of the agency to investigate the matter and he finds suit ought to be brought, it is quite clear you can not expect the superintendent of the agency to pay the costs. It is quite clear the Treasury of the United States can not be compelled to pay the costs, because there is no law authorizing it. How will the Government proceed?

Mr. BOOHER. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois this: If he brings suit in the interest of the ward and fails then the general law would charge the costs against the losing party, but under this if he brought suit and won, in the discretion of the court, the costs might be taxed against the ward.

Mr. MANN. I think the court usually ought to have that discretion. I imagine the cost should be taxed in any event against the estate where the estate has succeeded in its suit against the administrator.

Mr. BOOHER. Why is it necessary to have any provision in the bill at all about taxing costs?

Mr. MANN. Without it you could not commence suit.

Mr. BOOHER. Yes; you can.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman from Missouri I desire to make a suggestion. This is not the case of ordinary litigants. In those cases the losing litigant would be taxed with the costs. In the case before us it is absolutely true that a functionary of the Government will take steps on behalf of a ward on the suggestion that some fiduciary has wasted the estate of the ward. If after the institution, and in the progress of the proceeding it is found that the fiduciary has not wasted the estate it would not be proper to tax any costs against the fiduciary. The functionary of the fax any costs against the fiduciary. The functionary of the Government who has acted in good faith, and sought to protect the estate of the ward by the institution of appropriate proceedings certainly should not be liable in costs. has made out a good case. He shows that he has not been at fault and has not wasted the estate of the ward, thereby relieving himself from any personal pecuniary responsibility. such a case the losing party can not be taxed, because the losing party happens to be the representative of the Government. Hence there is no one left to be taxed with costs in a personal The estate of the ward should carry the burden because the proceeding was in his interest. Otherwise who would pay these costs? The Government is certainly not compelled to pay them, and there is no general fund out of which these costs may be paid. In the case under consideration since it would be ascertained that there had been no waste on the part of the guardian, or the fiduciary, the costs properly should come out of the estate of the ward.

Mr. BOOHER. If the representative of the Government brings the suit in the interest of the ward, then the ward has got two guardians working for him.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That may be.

Mr. BOOHER. If the representative of the Government loses his suit, then the costs will be taxed against the unsuccessful party, the ward, and paid out of his estate in the hands of his guardian by order of the court.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Would you charge them against the functionary of the Government?

Mr. BOOHER. If he is acting in his representative capacity. If we did not put in this provision the general-cost law of Oklahoma will apply, but with this provision in here, even though the representative of the Government should win in the suit. then, in the discretion of the court, costs might be taxed against the estate of the ward. If we strike that out, then costs will be taxed under the law of Oklahoma, and the losing party will pay the costs.

Mr. MANN. This does not change the existing law in reference to taxing costs at all, and when the costs are taxed he has got to pay it.

Mr. BOOHER. The law of Oklahoma provides costs shall be taxed and collected.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman have the property of the ward sold?

Mr. BOOHER. No.

Mr. MANN. The law of the United States provides it can not be sold, and how will you collect the taxes?

Mr. BOOHER. The guardian has already the money which is to the credit of the ward, and if the court finds there has been no misappropriation of the fund and judgment is rendered against the Government representative the guardian having the funds of the ward in his hands will be ordered by the court to pay the costs out of his estate. There is no trouble to get the cost if the court renders the proper judgment.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I suggest that in this particular case there might be some difficulty unless the language of the bill A representative of the Federal Government is directed to take certain steps under certain contingencies. If it is ascertained that the guardian has not wasted any property of his ward, I do not know whether under the laws of Oklahoma there would be any authority in the court to provide that the costs should be paid out of the estate of the ward. Yet it is very clear that in such a case the estate of the ward should pay them. The proceeding was instituted in good faith in his

Mr. FERRIS. And I think it is fair to say that he should have the costs assessed against him if he should win.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I repeat that it is perfectly in such a state of facts the estate of the ward ought to pay the taxed

Mr. BOOHER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 22, after the word "require," insert the words "that no part of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that the Clerk at the desk be instructed to strike out the word "probate" where it occurs in this section, because there is no probate court in Oklahoma. The county court has jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN, I doubt whether the gentleman wants to strike out "probate" wherever it occurs.
Mr. FERRIS. Wherever it refers to the probate court.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that where the words "probate court" appear they may be so changed in this bill as to read "county court." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That nothing herein shall be construed as in any way changing the rights of the Osage Tribe in oil, gas, and other minerals as fixed in the Osage act of June 28, 1906, or in any manner be construed to change or amend the provisions of said act in regard to oil, gas, coal, or other minerals.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, in line 13, before the word "and" the word "coal," so it will read:

Oil, gas, coal, and other minerals.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on his amendment?

The amendment has not yet been reported. Mr. MANN.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I accept the amendment on behalf of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not reported the amendment yet. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, before the word "and," in line 13, insert the word "coal."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the section by striking out, in line 23, page 4, the words "register of deeds for Osage County" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Osage Agency," so as to get the vote of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 23, strike out "register of deeds for" and insert "Osage

Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment because I am perfectly willing to strike out this section. If the section is stricken out of the bill when passing the House it will go to conference, and I was afraid that the attention of the conferees might not be sufficiently called to it without having a vote of the House as to the ambiguity. It ought to be "register of deeds for Osage County."

Mr. FERRIS. I think the section ought to be left out. The more I think of it the more I recognize the wisdom of the gentleman from Illinois in regard to it. They do not allow the records to be kept free of inspection by anybody who desires to inspect them.

Mr. MANN. The Secretary of the Interior has repeatedly time and time again insisted upon the change being made in this bill.

Mr. FERRIS. The Secretary has? Mr. MANN. Yes. Mr. FERRIS. I have no objection to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to the amend-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say he is going to strike out the section. ought not to be in the law.

Mr. MANN. What I am afraid of is that it will be in the law when it becomes the law, with this objectionable provision in it, and when a man gets his alienation removed under the existing section we only have the benefit of one individual.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will add as objection to lines 21, 22, 23, and 24, as to the matter of public records being kept, it ought not to be in the law at all. No provision is made as to who is going to keep the record, who is going to pay the expense of having such a record kept, and so far as the Indians whose restrictions may have been removed, that can be ascertained from the agency by simply applying there.

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly apparent under the Senate provision if restrictions were removed from any Indian the order would never be filed in the office of the register of deeds until was to be used by somebody who had made the purchase.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Undoubtedly.
Mr. MANN. And nobody could tell in advance how the public record would be kept at the Osage Agency.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My objection to the section is that if an individual Indian has had land that is now restricted and he does not elect to have those restrictions removed, he ought not to have forced upon him a provision providing that the restrictions can arbitrarily be removed merely for the purpose of taxing the land.

Mr. MANN. I am quite willing to strike out the section. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Now the committee amendment, Mr. Chair-

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment, which is to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, hereby is authorized, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him and upon application therefor, to turn over to Osage allottees, including the blind, crippled, aged, or helpless, all or part of the funds in the Treasury of the United States to their individual credit: Provided, That he shall be first satisfied of the competency of the allottee or that the release of said individual trust funds would be to the manifest best interests and welfare of the allottee: Provided further, That no trust funds of a minor or a person so afflicted as above mentioned, or an allottee non compos mentis shall be released and paid over except upon the appointment of a guardian and an order of the proper court and after the filling and approval by the court of a sufficient bond conditioned to faithfully administer the funds released and the avails thereof.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Mr. MANN. The Clerk does not need to read that. It is the duty of the engrossing clerk to change that.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows: Amend, lines 3 and 4, by striking out the words "turn over" and inserting the word "pay."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, in line 4, after the word "blind," the word "insane." The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 4, by inserting after the word "blind" the word "insane"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice this provision says "aged." What does the gen-tleman from Illinois understand from the word "aged," in line 4? That is a peculiar term to me, and it is doubtful whether it means according to Dr. Osler's theory-60 years of age-or whether it means 85 years or 110 years. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Of course, in this case I suppose they mean somebody so old that he has to have a guardian. At any rate they can not turn it over to him, but must turn it over to a guardian. I do not think it belongs to this bill.

Mr. FOSTER. I should think it does not, because a man might be 85 years old and still be competent to spend his own

Move that the language be stricken out.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out of line 4 the word "aged."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out of line 4 the word "aged."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to speak in opposition to it unless the gentleman desires me to before he proceeds, but I do want to speak on the amendment. That word is properly in the bill. The Indians have some peculiarities of their own, and in that respect they are different from the rest of us. One of them is that old people who become helpless and unable, by reason of senile disability or something of that kind, to handle themselves and acquire a livelihood are not treated by the other members of the tribe with the care and consideration which they ought to have, and they fall properly into that class described by the word "helpless," of which the blind, insane, and crippled are members. The aged among the Indians can properly be thus classified. I think the language of the bill is entirely appropriate and that class should be included.

Mr. MANN. If they are included in the word "helpless" it would be unnecessary.

Mr. MILLER. The blind are helpless and the cripples are helpless, and if we enumerate the different classes who are helpless we ought to enumerate as many as possible.

Mr. FOSTER. It occurs to me that one of the reasons why an aged man is not entitled to manage his own property is because he is incompetent from infirmities of mind or body due to age and not on account of age alone. Now, as to being crippled, an Indian might be crippled and yet perfectly competent to manage his own affairs. To my mind these terms here indicate very clearly that this bill has been drawn by somebody outside of Congress, possibly by some shrewd attorneys who are hanging around Washington pretending to help the Indians at so much per head, because I take it that Members of Congress and members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, who are believed to be competent men-I would not say otherwise-would not have used this particular language. A bill coming over here from the other body has been passed without the careful scrutiny which this committee usually gives to legislation of this kind.

Now, we have seen, and it has been pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], that there are many imperfections in this bill, and we see here now such imperfec-tions in enumerating the different kinds of afflictions that are here enumerated, among them the blind and the crippled and the aged and the helpless, on the theory that they are not competent to manage their affairs. And yet I do not believe that there is any member of this Committee on Indian Affairs that can give a good reason why this language is in the bill as

Now, we talk about a crippled person. As I said a moment ago, are you going to say that because a man has one arm cut off he is incompetent to manage his affairs, or if he has one foot cut off he is unable to manage his affairs, and that therefore you must take him into court and have a guardian appointed for him so as to manage his estate?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman-

Now, Mr. Chairman-Mr. FOSTER. Mr. MILLER.

I have been recognized.

No; I do not understand the gentleman has Mr. FOSTER.

been recognized. I think I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman thinks that because a man is crippled and aged the bill declares him incompetent. It does not. It merely provides that in that case his funds must be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior. I think the gentleman will agree that that should be done.

Mr. MILLER. This is providing a way by which the funds of one of these classes may be taken care of for his use.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, who has the floor? I yielded it to the gentleman from Minnesota a moment ago.

Mr. MILLER. I think I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. MILLER. I do not yield to anyone now. I want to make statement first.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know how the gentleman from Minnesota took me off the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has never been on the floor except by unanimous consent.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg the Chair's pardon. I offered an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not rise to speak to it. Mr. FOSTER. I thought I did, and I permitted the gentleman from Minnesota to make an observation. But it is all

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so understand. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there will be any difficulty in letting everybody talk all they care to on this paragraph. What I want to say is what I undertook to say at the outset, and then I will let the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

FOSTER] have all the time he wants.

I think there is a misunderstanding as to the amendment to this section. It does not say who are incompetent and who are not, but it does say that incompetents who have not had their restrictions removed, and therefore have not received their share of the property, and who belong to these classes, should have their funds taken care of by the Secretary of the Interior and used for their welfare as he sees fit.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MILLER. I said I would yield first to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. I will take occasion to say what I have to say later.

Mr. BOOHER. Further down in section 6 of the bill there is a proviso that persons so afflicted must have a guardian appointed before they can get their money. The words "so afflicted" would cover the crippled, blind, and aged. Such a person must have a guardian appointed before the Government can turn over to him his share of the money for his support.

Mr. MILLER. That is entirely true, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Booher] will clearly see why it is so; that is, why Indians whose restrictions have not been removed, because they are not considered competent, must have a guardian ap-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota

[Mr. MILLER] has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes, as I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOOHER. Why would a man who has lost an arm, or a finger, or a toe, or crippled in any manner have a guardian appointed in order to receive from the Government the money that the Government owes him?

Mr. MULLER. He does not need to have a guardian because of that affliction, but he needs to have a guardian by reason of being incompetent.

Mr. BOOHER. 'says "so afflicted." The bill says "crippled and aged," and then

Mr. MILLER. But they would have to be otherwise incompetent.

Mr. BOOHER. The bill does not say so.

I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota Mr. KINDRED. a question. What does it cost to appoint a guardian in the State of Oklahoma, in a case that would require his appointment? Mr. MILLER. I am unable to answer the gentleman.

Mr. DAVENPORT. If the lawyer does not charge too much, the cost amounts to about $10, provided the guardian can give a personal bond. If he gives a surety bond, that costs at the rate of about $5 per annum per thousand, which is paid out of the estate.

Mr. KINDRED. But, after all, a man is at the mercy of his

Mr. DAVENPORT. No; because there are a great many people who are skilled in the preparing of probate papers.

Mr. KINDRED. I am not urging the point, but what would be the usual fee of an attorney?

Mr. DAVENPORT. It would probably be $10 for preparing the papers and securing the appointment.

Mr. KINDRED. Then the fees of the attorney and the court costs and clerk's fees, and so forth, would not exceed $50? Mr. DAVENPORT. Oh, no. The court costs were included in the $10. Mr. KINDRED. The whole thing would not exceed $25.

Mr. DAVENPORT. No, sir; it would not. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minne-Bota [Mr MILLER] has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the peculiar language in this bill. It is provided in section 5 that the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is authorized to pay to the Osage allottees, including the blind, crippled, aged, insane, and helpless, all or part of the funds in the Treasury of the United States to their individual credit, and that he shall first be satisfied of the competency of the allottee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. It is provided that he shall first be satisfied of the competency of the allottee, or that the release of said individual trust funds would be to the manifest best interest and welfare of the allottee; that no trust funds of a minor or person so afflicted as above mentioned, or non compos mentis, shall be released or paid over except on the appointment of a guardian

Now, if an Indian is crippled, I suppose then it is a question whether he is entitled to manage his own funds, or whether they shall be paid to his guardian. What is the intention?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This only applies to aged, crippled, and insane Indians who are not permitted to use their own funds, which are in the hands of the Government, and who have nothing to live upon unless they derive from the Government, through Congress, the right to withdraw their funds for their use, and it says what this applies to. It does not authorize them to use those funds except through the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not necessary, then, for a guardian to be appointed for a man simply because he is crippled?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the Secretary of the Interior Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. believes that the funds withdrawn for his support and maintenance would not be so used, then he has the right to require that a guardian be appointed.

Mr. FOSTER. And if an Indian is old, then they can not give

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If he is old, and needs it, and has the money in the Treasury to his credit, then this law permits him to withdraw it, so that he can use it to live upon.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But in the case of a crippled Indian, even though they were satisfied it was to his best interest, they still would have to appoint a guardian for him.

Mr. FOSTER. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is so. The language of the bill is such that it is hard to understand.

Mr. MILLER. My attention has been called to a part of the last proviso with which I was not familiar. I am frank to say to the gentleman that he is correct. The bill can be corrected and made entirely proper, so as to remove the objection of the gentleman, by striking out in the second proviso after the word "minor," in line 10, the words "or a person so afflicted," as above mentioned, so that it will read:

That no trust funds of a minor or an allottee non compos mentis-

And so on. To other parties the Secretary of the Interior may pay the money direct.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that would improve it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I think the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota would not fully meet the case, because some of these people who were blind, crippled, aged, or helpless might be incompetent.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly. Mr. MANN. The gentleman's amendment would only declare incompetent those who were minors or insane. amendment prepared which I think will meet the situation, and will submit it.

Mr. FOSTER. I am willing to withdraw my amendment and let the gentleman submit his.

Mr. MANN. We have already inserted the word "insane" in the class of incompetents. My amendment is to strike out the words "so afflicted as" in the proviso, in line 11, and insert after the word "mentioned" the words "who is incompetent,' and then strike out the words "or an allottee non compos mentis," so that it would read:

Provided, That no trust funds of a minor or a person who is incompetent, as above mentioned, shall be released and paid over except upon the appointment of a guardian.

The gentleman will note that the provision is that before the Secretary can pay over the money he must find that the allottee is competent or he must find that he needs the money expended for his benefit. My amendment would leave it to the Secretary to pay the money, if he is competent, or if he is incompetent and still needs the money, it must be paid to the guardian.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to suggest that along the line of his proposed amendment if, after the word "mentioned," in line 11, the words "adjudged to be incompetent" were inserted, it would cover the whole ground.

Mr. MANN. I will suggest to my colleague that it is the Secretary of the Interior who ascertains whether the person is incompetent, and in addition to that there must be an adjudication of incompetency in order to obtain a guardian.

Mr. McKENZIE. In this case the Secretary renders the judgment. Some one has to judge the party competent or in-

Mr. FERRIS. Let me suggest that these people are incompetent, irrespective of any holding or judgment, because of the fact that they are of Indian blood and Indian allottees. This is a relief measure. Now, I want to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois what his amendment is. It is evident that there is some need of an amendment to this proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the bill already provides that the Secretary of the Interior, before he pays the money, must be satisfied of the competency of the allottee and that he needs the money. Now, my proposition is to put into juxtaposition the word "competency" and the word "incompetent" in the bill, and make it read:

Provided, That no trust fund of a minor or person above mentioned who is incompetent shall be released and paid over, except upon the appointment of a guardian.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can make clear what is in my mind, but it seems to me that the amendment should be so formulated that it would leave it in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior as to whether or not he should have any guardian. The expense of getting a guardian appointed and the administration upon the estate is an onerous one and an expensive one. I am not sure that in each and every case the Secretary ought to be compelled to have a guardian. It will make attorneys' fees and increase expenses. I am not sure that they ought to bear them.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Oklahoma would not say that we ought to turn over money to an insane man?

Mr. FERRIS. No.

Mr. MANN. And he would not say that we ought to turn money over to a minor, although he may be in fact competent?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman would not say that we ought to turn the money over to anybody thoroughly incompetent, or shiftless, without the appointment of a guardian to control it. Now, under this language the Secretary is authorized to determine who is competent and who would be incompetent, and if these people are competent, although they may be blind and crippled and aged and helpless physically, they could have the money paid over to them, but if incompetent, as distinguished from competent, they would be mentally incompetent; they must have a guardian.

Mr. FERRIS. I am in full accord with what the gentleman says. But it seems to me it ought to go further. It seems to me that between the annuity and the grass money payment in the intervals when no money is coming to them this could be dispensed to the aged, crippled, and demented Indians for little necessaries without going through the cumbersome routine of applying to the probate court for a guardian.

Mr. MANN. This does not require him to do that, if he is satisfied as to the competency of the allottee.

Mr. FERRIS. But suppose he is incompetent?
Mr. MANN. This does not mean incompetent in reference to removing restrictions from alienation.

Mr. FERRIS. It might mean that.
Mr. MANN. No. This means the same thing as it does in section 3, where it clearly means competent to handle money and take care of himself.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman's amendment is good, but I think it would work better if the Secretary of the Interior were given discretion in all cases as to whether a guardian was needed or not.

Mr. MANN. I think he is given that discretion absolutely.

Mr. FERRIS. I am not sure about that.

Mr. MANN. He has the discretion as to whether a guardian shall be appointed if he has the discretion as to whether he is needed or not.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I made the motion to strike out the word "aged" because I thought some of these enumerated restrictions were undefinable. But so that my colleague may offer the amendment he has, which I believe will cure the whole matter, I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw my

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend lines 10 and 11, page 5, by striking out the words "so afflicted as" and inserting after the word "mentioned," in line 11, the words "who is incompetent." Also by striking out the words "or an allottee non compos mentis."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 10 and 11, page 5, strike out the words "so afflicted as," and insert after the word "mentioned," in line 11, the words "who is incompetent," and striking out the words "or an allottee non composements."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to section 9, where the word "competent" is defined. I will ask him if it would not be better if he added to his amendment the words "competent to handle the same," because his amendment would restrict the payment to those who had a certificate of alienation.

Mr. MANN. I will say that I think the word "competent," as defined in section 10, does not relate in any way to the word "incompetency" in section 3 of the bill. I discussed that a while ago in the House.

In section 3 of the bill incompetency is left to be determined by the laws of the State of Oklahoma, but the word "competent" is defined in the bill, and only that one word. It means the removal of the restriction of alienation. The word "incomas used in section 3, relates to mental capacity.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is right, but some department official may take a different view of that.

Mr. MANN. I was afraid of that, and I suggested that possibly we ought to change section 3, but that was not done. I think after the debate there would not be any trouble about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to call the attention of the gentlemen of the Indian Committee to the language of that section. Line 4 of section 5 provides that the money shall be paid "to the Osage allottees."

Mr. FERRIS. That is limited by two provisos.
Mr. COOPER. Yes; but the language I have just read is mandatory and provides that the money shall be paid to allottees. The second proviso says that it shall not be paid over except "upon the appointment" of a guardian; but it does not say it shall be paid to the guardian. Of course, it perhaps say it shall be paid to the guardian. Of course, it perhaps means that, but it is not a good use of language. The language first used is an express provision that it shall be paid to the allottees, and this says that it shall not be paid over except upon the appointment of a guardian and an order of the court, after the filing and approval by the court. I suggest that, to make that clear and specific, as it ought to be, we should strike out all after the word "over," in line 12, page 5, down to and including the word "court," in line 13, and insert the words "except upon an order of the proper court to a duly appointed guardian of such person." That would make it clear; and then I would amend further by inserting after the word "filing," in line 14, page 5, the words "by such guardian," so that that proviso would read:

* * shall not be released and paid over except upon an order of the proper court to a duly appointed guardian of such person and after the filing by such guardian and approval by the court of a sufficient bond, etc.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in that way. Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman offers his amendment, will he permit me to suggest that under the amendment which he proposes it would require an order of a proper court before any money could be paid over?

Mr. COOPER. To the guardian.

Mr. MANN. But there is no authority to which the order can be directed. The Secretary of the Interior, who has the funds, is not subject to the order of the court, and in this case this section leaves it within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to pay it over to a guardian after the court has appointed the guardian; but the court can not order the Secretary of the Interior to pay it over, and I do not apprehend that the gentleman will want to require the Secretary to pay it over. Mr. COOPER. No.

Mr. MANN. As the section now stands the court must first appoint a guardian, who must give bond, which assumes that the person is incompetent, and then the Secretary of the Interior has the discretion to pay it over or not pay it over, but is not required to pay it over.

Mr. COOPER. I think the gentleman misapprehends the force of what I was saying. The language is mandatory, in line

4, that he shall pay it over to the Osage allottees.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will notice the language:

That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, hereby is authorized, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him and upon application therefor, to pay to Osage allottees, etc.

Mr. COOPER. Just one moment. It provides that the Secretary of the Interior is, in his discretion, authorized, upon such terms and regulations as may be prescribed by him, and so forth, to pay "to the Osage allottees." He is authorized to pay to the allottees and to nobody else. The second proviso is that no trust funds, and so forth, shall be released and paid over, except upon the appointment of a guardian and an order of the proper court, after the filing and approval by the court.
Mr. MANN. I think the language is not very good.

Mr. COOPER. I was suggesting that the language is not at

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I call the gentleman's attention to the part of the bill in line 4 which he is discussing, that the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion is authorized, upon application, to pay to any Osage allottees the money in the Treasury, provided that he shall first be satisfied of the competency of the allottee, or that the release of said individual trust funds would be for the manifest best interest and welfare of the allottee. It then provides that he may pay to a class, which is described—the blind, the insane, the crippled, the aged, or the helpless-and the last proviso is to the effect that if that class or any of them be incompetent, the money shall be paid to a guardian. I think the gentleman was laboring under a misapprehension as to what this section does. The section authorizes the Secretary, if he deems the allottee to be competent, to pay him the money. There is no guardian about it.

Mr. COOPER. My objection was that the proviso is that it shall not be paid over except "upon the appointment of a guardian," and so forth.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is to this helpless class. Mr. COOPER. But it should be, "Shall not be paid over except to a duly appointed guardian," and so forth.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. COOPER. Of course I am.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The court could not order the Secretary of the Interior to pay money to anybody.

Mr. COOPER. No; but the point I make is this—
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] made some mention here in regard to a firm of shrewd lawyers who were interested in this bill. I propose to read here to show something about these people and how they got this bill up:

Senate bill No. 2 was drawn by the firm of Kappler & Merillat, attorneys for the Osage Nation. Under the terms of their contract with the nation they agreed to protect and conserve the rights of the Osage Nation of Indians in their tribal rolls, lands, and funds. They have appeared before the Senate Indian Committees in advocacy of this bill, notwithstanding the fact that it seeks to render taxable the homesteads immediately upon the death of the allottee, and notwithstanding the further fact it seeks to place the entire full-blood element within the control of the local probate court.

Attached is a statement of the fact shown by the Attached is a statement of the facts shown by the records in connection with the employment of this firm by the Osage Nation:

Nation:

As an illustration of the reckless and indiscriminate manner in which the department gives its approval to contracts secured by certain attorneys with Indian officials, the separate contracts approved by the department with the firm of Kappler & Merillat, consisting of Charles J. Kappler and Charles Merillat, with the Osage Tribe of Indians, may be cited. This firm of attorneys maintain offices at the city of Washington, and were until within the last four years, when they secured their first contracts with Indian tribes, a comparatively obscure and unknown firm of attorneys. Up until March 4, 1906, Charles J. Kappler had never attempted to practice law, but had for several years theretofore held the position of cierk to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, which position he held during the period that ex-Senator Stewart, of Nevada, was chairman of that committee. Up until about the same time Charles H. Merillat was a reporter for the Associated Press, and had never previously had any experience in the practice of the law. On April 11, 1908, these two gentlemen, having theretofore associated themselves together in the practice of law in the city of Washington, D. C., secured a contract from the principal chief of the Osage Nation—

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the communication which the gentleman is reading is of the utmost interest to many of us— I know it is to myself-and I can not hear it. I wish the gentleman would read it a little louder.

Mr. AKIN of New York. I am trying to get it all in. I do not care much whether the gentleman hears it or not [laughter]-

Aff. ARIN of New York. I am trying to get it all in. I do not care much whether the gentleman hears it or not [laughter]— to represent said Osage Nation before the executive departments and the Congress of the United States at Washington, the courts of the United States, and elsewhere, if necessary, as attorneys for said nation for the sole purpose of protecting and conserving the rights of said Osage Nation of Indians in their tribal rolls, lands, and funds. * * The compensation provided by said contract was $5,000 per annum and expenses. Under this contract this firm of attorneys have devoted not to exceed 60 days per annum to such business of the Osage Tribe of Indians as they deemed within the terms of their contract. At the same time they were operating under this national contract which was approved by Secretary Garield on May 6, 1908 (said contract and others hereafter referred to appearing in H. Rept. No. 2273, 61st Cong., 2d sess., vol. 2, pp. 2299 to 1303, inclusive), they accepted employment from individual members of the tribe, making a separate charge against the individuals for the services rendered them in Washington before the department in all matters pertaining to their individual allotments. When an Indian who had theretofore been deemed an incompetent applied to the Secretary for a certificate of competency, this firm of attorneys secured, in some instances by solicitation, employment to represent the Indian before the department. When the certificate was issued, this firm of attorneys wired the information to certain individuals who were engaged in the business of purchasing Indian lands, apprising those persons of the fact that the certificate of competency had been issued and that the Indian could then make a valid conveyance of his land. For this information they received from $500 to $500 per case.

On April 15, 1908, this same firm of attorneys entered into another contract with the Osage Indians, by which they agreed to prosecute for the Indians against the Government a claim commonl

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman's time be extended one minute in order that I may ask a question. I thought the gentleman had finished. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended until he has opportunity to read what he has, say, for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

Chair hears none.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Of course, gentlemen, you can not work any Fowler arrangement or horse me a bit. I am going to read the paper, and I do not know whether I will answer any questions when I get through:

questions when I get through:

It will be observed that from a fair construction of the contracts providing for the annual employment of this firm they were required to do and perform all the services specially provided for in their separate special contracts. It thus appears that, by the action of the department, the attorneys holding contracts which had been approved by the department and which are therefore binding in law against the Indians have been and are now permitted by fine distinction as to the services to be rendered under their annual contract to mulet the wards of the Government and at the same time take from their own clients many thousands of dollars.

Thousands of lawyers of at least equal standing to the firm of Kappler & Merillat, and of far greater experience in actual practice, can be found who would devote their undivided time and attention to the affairs of these Indians, protecting them against all claims asserted against the nation of every kind and description, and prosecuting all claims of the tribes against the Government or any individual for an annual compensation equal to the amount provided in the annual contract held by these attorneys.

Mr. MHLLER, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has read to our

Mr. MHLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has read to our great gratification and edification a communication, and I think we are entitled to know who is the author of the communication. and in order that the record might be complete and that it might have its full weight and strength with the membership of the House I will ask the gentleman if he will kindly give us the author of the communication.

Mr. AKIN of New York. I will tell the gentleman plainly it is not any of his affairs. I have a right to read it, and I have read it, and if the gentleman wants to he can have it expunged from the RECORD.

Mr. MILLER. Is the gentleman ready and willing to state to the membership of the House, upon his authority as a Member and upon his responsibility as a Member, that the statements therein contained are true?

Mr. AKIN of New York. Oh, no; I do not say they are true. Mr. MILLER. Then I call the gentleman's attention to the fact it is questionable whether any Member of the House, in my judgment, ought to put upon the record of the House an attack like that upon two gentlemen whom I only casually know

And the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MILLER. And the Secretary of the Interior, unless he is willing to vouch and stand for the statement therein made or reveal the name of the author. I think it ought to be stricken from the Record, unless the gentleman is willing to tell us who wrote the communication.

Mr. AKIN of New York. I know I have had other matters stricken from the RECORD, but I am not going to strike anything more, I will tell you that plainly.

Mr. MILLER. How about the House?

Mr. AKIN of New York. If the House does not want what I read before the House, they can take it out of the RECORD. will not take it out.

Mr. CARTER. What is that worth to the House if the gentleman will not stand sponsor for it and refuses to give the author? I do not think I have heard of a case exactly like this since I have been a Member of the House. We would be very glad to know who the author is, so as to give the statement proper credence.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Why should you know who the author is?

Mr. CARTER. Because it enables me to tell whether to believe him or not.

Mr. AKIN of New York. You can go to the department and find out whether it is so or not-whether these people have been connected in the way in which I read.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman did not take that precaution himself before he brought in here charges against the Secretary of the Interior, who represents his own party, he should not expect me to do so.

Mr. AKIN of New York. I have not done that; I have simply read this statement here.

Mr. CARTER. You have not read any statement of your own to a certainty.

Mr. AKIN of New York. I know that.

Mr. CARTER. Then whose statement have you read?

Mr. AKIN of New York. That is something that you will have to find out.

Mr. CARTER. I think we know.
Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "over," in line 12, on page 5, down to and including the word "court," in line 13, and insert the words "except to a guardian of such person duly appointed by the proper court." Amend further by inserting after the word "filing," on page 5, the words "by such guardian."

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion? This matter, as the result of other amendments, has been reduced to an appointment for incompetency, either the result of infancy or otherwise. While the word "guardian" as the fiduciary does not apply to every form of incompetent, ought not you to say "guardian or committee"?

Mr. COOPER. Well, we have a guardian for all sorts of incompetents in Wisconsin.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Well, if that is true in other jurisdictions, the word "committee" applies to everything except guardians for infants. Of course if that is the legal proper phrase I have for infants. Of course if that is the legal proper phrase I have nothing to suggest.

Mr. COOPER. I offer this amendment in order to have the language accurate. The second proviso would then read that no trust funds shall be released and paid over except to a guardian of such person duly appointed by a proper court. Gentlemen will observe that the bill provides that trust funds shall not be paid over except "upon the appointment of a guardian and the order of a proper court," and so forth.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chalman, I will account the

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will accept the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the second amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend further by inserting, after the word "filing," in line 14, on page 5, the words "by such guardian."

Mr. COOPER. The second amendment is to be inserted after the word "filing," in line 14, page 5, of the words "by such guardian," and reads, "after the filing by such guardian and approval by the court," and so forth.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I also accept that

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That from and after the approval of this act the lands of deceased Osage allottees, unless the heirs desire to and can agree as to partition of the same, may be partitioned or sold upon proper order of the county court of Osage County, State of Oklahoma, in accordance with the laws of the State of Oklahoma: Provided, That no partition or sale of the restricted lands of a deceased Osage allottee shall be valid until approved by the Secretary of the Interior. Where some of the heirs are minors, the county court may appoint a guardian for said minors in the matter of said partition, and partition of said land shall be valid when approved by the county court and the Secretary of the Interior. When the heirs of such deceased allottees have certificates of competency or are not members of the tribe, the restrictions on allenation are hereby removed. If some of the heirs are competent and others have not certificates of competency, the proceeds of such part of the sale as the competent heirs shall be entitled to shall be turned over to them without the intervention of an administrator. The shares due minor heirs, including such Indian heirs as may not be tribal members and those Indian heirs not having certificates of competency, shall be turned into the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of the Indians upon the same conditions as attach to segregated shares of the Osage national fund, or paid to the duly appointed guardian, or be disbursed in such manner and to such extent as the Secretary of the Interior may determine. The same disposition as herein provided for with reference to the proceeds of inherited lands sold shall be made of the money in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of deceased Osage allottees.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first committee

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first committee amendment to that section.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

On page 6, line 1, strike out the word "may" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 10, strike out the words "turned over" and insert in lieu thereof the word "paid."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 14, strike out the word "turned" and insert in lieu thereof the word "paid."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 17, strike out the comma and the words "or be," at the end of the line, and also all of line 18 and that part of line 19 down to and including the word "determine."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 5, lines 20 and 21, by striking out the words "the county court of Osage County, State of Oklahoma," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "any court of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have no objective the county of the count tion to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, lines 20 and 21, strike out the words "the county court of sage County, State of Oklahoma," and insert in lieu thereof the words any court of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague, Mr. Mann, a question: Does he intend to strike out "the State of Oklahoma" and make it just a court of competent jurisdiction?

Mr. MANN. The court, necessarily, in making the partition would be a court of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, on page 6, line after the word "guardian," the words "ad litem."
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to that, Mr.

Chairman

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 2, after the word "guardian," insert the words "ad litem."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, in line 12, after the word "such," the word "minor."
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I accept that amendment also.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 12, after the word "such," insert the word "minor." The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, in line 17, after the word "or," the words "with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 7, after the word "or," the third word in the line, insert the words "with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not quite see the reason or the purpose of that. Will the gentleman from Illinois ex-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as the bill now reads it requires the Secretary of the Interior to pay over money to a duly appointed guardian. As I have offered it, it would leave it within the discretion of the Secretary—an amendment, by the way, which the Secretary has repeatedly suggested—and it seems to me he ought to have that authority, so that if they do have some guardian appointed down there who ought not to be a guardian he can not require the payment of the money to him.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That would permit the Secretary of the Interior to pass upon the validity of the duly elected officers of the State of Oklahoma, would it?

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all. It would permit the Secretary of the Interior to say whether the money ought to be paid over or not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does not have that application?

Mr. MANN. Not at all. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I have no objection to it. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to strike out, on page 5, line 18, the words "desire to," at the end of the line; and on line 19 to strike out the words "and can," at the beginning of the line, and to strike out the word "as," after the word "agree." Strike out, also, the word "of," after the word "partition," and insert after the word "same" the words "such lands," so that it will read, "That from and after the approval of this act the lands of deceased Osage alloftees, unless the of this act the lands of deceased Osage allottees, unless the heirs agree to the partition of the same, such lands may be partitioned."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 18, strike out the words "desire to," at the end of the line; on line 19 strike out the words "and can," at the beginning of the line, and strike out the word "as," after the word "agree," and strike out the word "of," after the word "partitlon," and insert after the word "same" the words "such lands."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have offered these amendments just to make the language intelligible.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that the language such lands" is not needed.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is right about that. I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to modify the amendment to that extent

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I agree to the amendment with that modification.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa explain why he struck out the words "desire to"? Mr. GOOD. Some of them may desire to. "Desire to" and "can" are the words of the bill. Mr. MANN. It is a legal fiction. Mr. GOOD. Yes. It balances the bill. Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from

Mr. FERRIS. An agreement is the result of a desire? Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. NORRIS. On page 6, line 1, I move to strike out the word "county" and insert in lieu thereof the word "said."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 1, strike out the word "county" and insert in lieu thereof the word "said."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I accept that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. NORRIS. The object of this amendment is to give legal effect to the language. We have already provided that this guardian shall be a guardian ad litem. Such a guardian must always be appointed by the court in which the proceeding is

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, on page 6, in line 4, I move to strike out the word "county."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, in line 4, strike out the word "county."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I accept that amendment also, Mr. Chairman.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 8. That the lands allotted to members of the Osage Tribe shall not in any manner whatsoever, or at any time heretofore or hereafter, be encumbered, taken, or sold to secure or satisfy any debt or obligation contracted or incurred prior to the issuance of a certificate of competency, or removal of restrictions on alienation; nor shall the lands or funds of Osage tribal members be subject to any claim against the same arising prior to grant of a certificate of competency. That no lands or moneys inherited from Osage allottees shall be subject to or be taken or sold to secure the payment of any indebtedness incurred by such heir prior to the time such lands and moneys are turned over to such heirs: Provided, however, That inherited moneys shall be liable for funeral expenses and expenses of last illness of deceased Osage allottees, to be paid upon order of the Secretary of the Interior.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

On page 6, in line 24, strike out the comma and the words "or at any," and, on page 7, in line 1, strike out the words "time heretofore or hereafter."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

On page 7, in line 10, strike out the words "turned over" and insert the word "paid."

Mr. MANN. That amendment ought to be disagreed to. The question being taken, the amendment was rejected. The Clerk rend the following committee amendment:

On page 7, in line 14, strike out the words "Secretary of the Interior" and insert the words "county court of Osage County, State of Oklahoma: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed so as to exempt any such property from liability for taxes."

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill something about this proviso. What is the significance of the proviso:

Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed so as to exempt any such property for liability for taxes?

I should like to ask some gentleman on the committee, Does this proviso reach those children who were born after July 1, 1907, who have received no allotment and who are not par-

The point I want to make is, in the event of the death of an Indian, and his allotment passing to heirs, is the land of a child born after July 1, 1907, who is not a participant in the fund in the Treasury and has no allotment of his own, sold for taxes under this bill? I will ask the gentleman from Okla-home [Mr. McGuire]? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The child, of course, inherits under the laws of Oklahoma, just the same as if he were of white blood. Now, under the provisions of this proposed bill, in case the child's parents had had the restrictions removed, the land would be taxable. But this takes the precaution to require that the Secretary of the Interior shall pay the taxes, whereas under the present law there is absolutely no protection, and the land will have to take its chances.

the land will have to take its chances.

Mr. MURDOCK. In an ordinary case down there will the Secretary of the Treasury have money in the fund to pay the taxes on land owned by a child born since July 1, 1907?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It would depend on what the estate amounted to. There is something like $5,000 due every man, woman, and child born previous to July 1, 1907, so the minors born since July 1, 1907, would inherit their share of the money, as well as the land.

* Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that the provision of the bill is that the taxes shall be paid out of the segregated decedent's funds in the Treasury. It is not the money which may belong to the child which is used in paying the taxes; so that in the case of a child born subsequent to the enumeration, who is not entitled to a portion of the fund, the bill provides that the taxes shall be paid out of the funds of the decedent, and not out of the funds of the child.

Mr. MURDOCK. Out of the estate.

Mr. MANN. Out of the estate. Mr. MURDOCK. Then this unallotted child is protected in the bill?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. He is.
Mr. MANN. His taxes would be paid if his ancestor had any money in the Treasury.
Mr. FERRIS. He could not be protected any further than that.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That any adult member of the Osage Tribe of Indians may dispose of any or all of his estate, real, personal, or mixed, including trust funds, from which restrictions as to allenation have not been removed, by will, in accordance with the laws of the State of Oklahoma: Provided, That no such will shall be admitted to probate or have any validity unless approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

On page 7, in line 24, after the word "approved," insert the words "before or after the death of the testator."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to inquire just what is the reason for this amendment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the purpose of the amendment is to settle the gentleman that the purpose of the amendment is to settle beyond any question that it may be approved either before or after the death of the testator. We have a general provision of law permitting Indians to make wills. There was some question as to whether the approval of the will would be valid if made after the death of the testator, so we passed a bill recently amending it. However, it was decided, I think, by the Interior Department that the Secretary had the right to approve either before or after. In this bill it was thought wise to make it definite. For instance, an Indian might make a will and die before the will would be received by the Secretary of the Interior. If the approval had to be in the lifetime of the testator it could not be approved after his death, so we changed the state it could not be approved after his death, so we changed the law so there could be no question about it.

Mr. FERRIS. We have just passed through this House a bill doing the same thing for everything on the west side of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The law providing that Indians can make wills, passed in 1910, was amended, as I have already stated, by a bill which passed this House on the unanimous-consent day before the last one, and that bill includes this provision.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember exactly the situation, but I remember that when a bill of this kind was originally introduced, either in this body or in the Senate, it had a provision in it that it must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior within a year, or that it must be probated within a year and approved by the Secretary, and I know that the Secretary made some objection to that limitation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think there was a suggestion that the Secretary of the Interior ought to have two years within which to disapprove a will, and we limited it to one year. man from South Dakota a question; will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly

Mr. COOPER. I would like to ask if that would permit an

Mr. COOPER. I would like to ask if that would permit an adult Osage Indian under guardianship to make a will? It says "any member of the Osage Tribe of Indians."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The intention is to allow any Indian to do so subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. I do not imagine that the Secretary would permit such an Indian as you mention to make a will, at least he would not approve such a will.

Mr. MANN. An insane man can make a will.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. He can make a will, but it might not be approved.

Mr. COOPER. There is nothing on the face of the will by which the Secretary of the Interior can determine whether the testator is insane. I do not suppose his investigation would include anything that would not appear on the face of the will.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; he investigates every case. Mr. Chairman, I find the memoranda that I was looking for. I see that this has been changed to comply with the suggestion. This is a report from the Secretary of the Interior in relation to a similar bill. He says:

Section 11 permits adult members of the Osage Tribe to whom no certificate of competency has been issued to dispose of his estate by will.

Such a provision seems entirely proper, but I suggest that, after the word "will," in line 1, page S, there be inserted the words "shall be admitted to probate or," and that the words "within one year from and after the death of the allottee," in lines 2 and 3, page 8, be omitted. The proviso would then read: "That no such will shall be admitted to probate or shall have validity unless approved by the Secretary of the Interior." It would be dangerous to prescribe a time limit within which such approval of the Secretary shall be given.

That was evidently changed in the Senate. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last because I want to pursue a little further the question asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin. As I understand it, there are at least two classes of these Indians, competent and incompetent, and it is not the intention of those who favor this legislation to permit those to whom the certificate of competency has not been issued to convey their estate. They must They must be competent before they would be allowed to do that, and yet this section would permit an incompetent person to convey by will the property that he would not have any legal right to convey by deed. Is that true?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What does the gentleman mean by the term "incompetent"?

Mr. NORRIS. One to whom a certificate of competency has not been issued.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think the gentleman means by the term "competent" an Indian as we consider the word "competent." We can not legislate and provide what that Indian may do. He is as free to act as any other citizen of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The purpose of this provision is to permit an incompetent Indian to make a will the same as you or I might do, and it would not be proper to permit an Indian to make a will without requiring some authority to approve or disapprove of it, and consequently we provide that a will shall have no effect at all until it is approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. NORRIS. Why, then, would it not be logical to provide that such a person, one to whom a certificate of competency has not been issued, should only make a deed subject to the approval of the Secretary?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is quite a different

Mr. NORRIS. It conveys the same property.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is an entirely different proposition. I think the gentleman will appreciate that an Indian will be actuated by exactly the same motives that any other man might be actuated by.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume so.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. For instance, an Indian who has four children, two of whom were born before the allot-ments were made and who are allotted land, and he has two born thereafter that have no land. The Indian father has his allotment, and upon his death, under the law, his estate would be distributed in accordance with the law of descent in the State in which the Indian resides. That parent, as the gentleman might do, desires to give this land which he has to the two children who are without land, and therefore he ought to have the right to elect to give his allotment to the two children and not leave any part of it to the other two. And, as I said a while ago, somebody ought to supervise his acts, and therefore we say that it shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. NORRIS. I can not see any reason why we should provide that a certain class of Indians shall not be allowed to convey their property by deed and still provide that the same Indian may convey the same property by will. It does not seem to me that it is done in any State in the Union or in any civilized country in the world. If a man is insane or incompetent to such an extent that he can not convey real estate, he can not convey it by will. In the case the gentleman puts he is assuming that the man or the Indian is competent to decide the very question that is at issue. We might take a different case, If a man were incompetent, insane, or something of that sort, you would not permit him to dispose of his property. If he was weak minded, some one might work on his weakness and would be able to get him to convey by will something that you have guarded in the law that shall not do by deed.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly. Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman from South Carolina stated the case exactly as it is and gave the reasons for this provision of the bill. This is a question that was gone over very thoroughly and discussed in the council who largely framed this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. By council the gentleman means the Osage council.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; but here are the children born since 1907, and they were not allotted.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me interrupt the gentleman there, the gentleman from South Dakota referred to that, and I wanted to refer to it but forgot it.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I wanted to enlarge a little on it.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman can do it later. The assumption of the gentleman is that these Indians, incompetent Indians, would take heir in the kind of a case they provide for. The probabilities are that the gentleman is mistaken. If we want to take care of these cases, and I would be very glad to do want to take care of these cases, and I would be very glad to do so if there is any proper way to do it, we ought to do it by law. Let us provide how the property shall descend, to cover that class of cases. Gentlemen themselves must admit that they will not be able to cover all of the cases.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Mc-Guire] was not quite through. I will yield to the gentleman later.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I was simply going to state that this paragraph was intended to reach all cases where the children have no interest in the money now in the Treasury of the United States, and no interest in the allotments, except by inheritance.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman think he will cover that?

Mr. NORRIS.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; in this way-

Mr. NORRIS. How does the gentleman know that the incompetent man is going to provide for those children? Why not provide by law that the property shall descend in that way, rather than to leave it to a man whom the law itself says is incompetent?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the law provides that the competency shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior. Of 2,230, according to the last census, 450 certificates of competency were issued. That leaves the rest of the tribe-about three-fourths of the tribe-incompetent under the law.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Just one moment. Of those prescribed incompetent under the law there are hundreds who are just as competent as any person-

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt about that, but there are some of them who are not.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Just one moment-so far as designating who should be the beneficiaries of their estates?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. They went to the council and Here some of our children have money in the Treasury, and they have their allotments; others have nothing; we can not provide for these children except under the laws of Oklahoma; they get their share, but they do not get as much as the others, and we want the right in this bill to give those children what they ought to have—to equalize our estates.

That is the purpose of this, and it is all done under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that; but suppose some incompetent Indian does not do that and he makes a will and he gives it to somebody else, or he does not make any will at all. Then these children that the gentleman is trying to protect by this provision get nothing.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. If he does not make a will-Mr. NORRIS. You are leaving these children whom the gentleman says he wants to protect by this provision at the mercy of people whom the law regards as incompetent.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. There is no one there so incompetent that he will not take care of his children. It ought to be done under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that part of it, but the gentleman must admit that that will not take care of all of them unless these incompetent people are willing to do that.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. But the incompetent people want to do it.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. As contemplated by this bill "incompetency" of the ward, in the sense of his relation to the Government, and "incompetency" in connection with his mental disability are quite different. There are a great many Indians who are incompetent in the sense of their wardship to the Government who are, in addition to that, incompetent mentally. It does not seem to me that an Indian or anyone else who is incompetent mentally ought to be permitted to make

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman—and I think that will perhaps satisfy him, so that we can get along with the bill—the only question at issue is this: Shall we extend to the Osage Tribe of Indians the general law relating to the right of Indians to make wills that prevails as to all the Indians in the United States except the Five Civilized Tribes? That is the only question there is here, because this is the law as to the Indians in the gentleman's State and in the State of Minnesota. The question is, Shall we extend that law to the Osage Indians?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, if the general law is wrong, if it is not right, we ought not to be guilty of extending it still further. It seems to me we ought to be gally of extending it still further. It seems to me we ought to be able to get it properly modified so that this difficulty could be properly met and the proper provisions of law enacted which would meet the contingency which the gentlemen who have drafted this provision must admit will not meet all of the meritorious cases.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, supposing the will made by the incompetent Indian under this provision is an inequitable will which does not accomplish what we all hope in each case it will accomplish.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.
Mr. FERRIS. The Secretary will disapprove it, and he then has the right to take the estate, and the estate descends under the usual law of descent.

Mr. NORRIS. In that case suppose he does disapprove it; then it is just the same as if he had made no will, is it not?

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely.

Mr. NORRIS. And what is the gentleman going to do to meet that kind of a case?

Mr. FERRIS. As to those cases the regular law of descent will have to apply, and the estate will descend in that way.

Mr. NORRIS. The result will be an injustice in the case of a child that was born after an allotment took place, would it not?

It would be a misfortune to be born so late.

Mr. NORRIS. If it is not an injustice, then you do not need this provision; if it is an injustice, then you ought to have this provision that would cover all cases.

Mr. FERRIS. I submit that Indian children are constantly being born, and it would be impossible to formulate an amendment that would apply and do full justice to every child that has been born since the rolls were closed or may be born before the allottee dies.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman will admit that if this bill is enacted in its present form in some cases it would be unjust?

Mr. FERRIS. Well, not unjust; but it will fail to accomplish the good we hope to accomplish in every case. think of instances where it will not accomplish the good we hoped for; but it will do untold good, and the worst that could result would be to allow the law of inheritance to prevail.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman has given a great deal of study—does not the gentleman think the committee could bring in a provision that would do justice in all cases?

Mr. FERRIS. We talked about that at length, and I heard this thing discussed among the Indians themselves only last summer. There is a widespread desire on the part of the Indians that they be permitted themselves to be consulted in the way the property should descend. In our State the rolls were closed March 4, 1907, in the eastern half of the State, which is known as the Five Tribes, and the rolls in the western part of the State were closed some time since then. Now the rolls are closed. Children are constantly being born, and if we do not do something the law of descent steps in. For instance, when an allottee has 160 acres of land and he has four children, three of which were born before the rolls were closed and one was born after the rolls were closed, if the regular law of descent prevails, each child can take 40 acres of land; three will get an additional 40 acres to the 160 which is already had and one child has a lone 40 acres. Now, if this law passes, sub-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have further time. I have consumed more of his time than I intended to

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care for further time.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would just like to make this suggestion, that if we make a hard and fast rule as to how the land should go you will do an injustice more frequently than if we pass this

Mr. NORRIS. This only applies to incompetent persons. Mr. WARBURTON. Yes; but I take it that an incompetent Indian occupies this position: He is not able to deal with his property as an ordinary man is supposed to deal. That is to say, he will convey his land and will dissipate his property unless prevented; that is the reason we hold him incompetent. It is to prevent his doing that, but it does not say that he is incompetent to devise his land. I take it that the incompetent Indian is just as able to devise his land properly as the so-called competent Indian. He may not be as able to barter and trade, he may not be as able to take care of his land while he lives, but he is competent to say how the land shall go after his death and how it should be divided among his heirs. In these matters he is just as competent as the so-called competent Indian.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman thinks the Indian should be permitted to indicate his preference as to how his property should be disposed of after death if he is competent or incompetent.

Mr. WARBURTON. Yes.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Secretary of the Interior has not approved or disapproved the making of a will, but says it does not make a bit of difference except to let the Indian indicate how he wants his estate to go.

Mr. MANN. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to this. I understood the gentleman from Minnesota in the course of his remarks to either state or argue that under this provision an insane person might make a will.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit, I suggested that it might be possible under this provision of the bill that when a will was presented to probate it would not be necessary to prove the Indian was sane at the time he made the will. That seems to be the difficulty in this

Mr. MANN. I think that difficulty does not exist, if I may say so to the gentleman. It says, "By will, in accordance with the laws of the State of Oklahoma." I think it is very clear that a person could not make a will unless he was mentally competent under the laws of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. The question in my mind was whether "in accordance with the laws of the State of Oklahoma" referred merely to the method of executing the will or whether it referred to the mental or other capacity of the testator making it.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to suggest to the gentleman on that particular point. The beginning of the section says that any adult member shall have the right to do so and so, but it must be done in accordance with the laws of the State of Oklahoma. I would think now, just taking a first blush, a first jump at it, that the construction "in accordance with the laws of the State of Oklahoma" would refer more to the formality that is required in the making of the will than to the person who made it, because the law of Congress described in the first line of the section says that any adult member of the tribe can make a will. If the law of Oklahoma, for instance, required two witnesses to it, he would have to have them; otherwise it would not be in accordance with the law of Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that the law of Nebraska, for instance, requires a witness to the signature of a person making a will.

Those are limitations.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Suppose he were insane?

Mr. MANN. Well, I just wanted to put in the Record my opinion on the subject, formed after an examination. I do not believe it was so intended, nor do I believe it would result in giving anyone the right to make a will unless that person under the laws of the State of Oklahoma is mentally competent. This is simply to permit a person to make a will who has not had the restrictions on alienation removed.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman thinks, does he, that notwithstanding the statement in the first line, which says "who of this tribe can make a will," they would have to be qualified under the laws of the State of Oklahoma in order to make a legal will?

Mr. MANN. I think so, clearly.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the gentleman think that the words "in accordance with the laws of the State of Oklahoma" do not apply and could not be construed to apply to a person designated by Congress, but to the methods that that person so designated in the first line of the section would have to pursue in order to make his will?

Mr. MANN. I think it applies to the whole thing. I think the making of the will in this case must be under the laws of the State of Oklahoma, just as any other person makes a will, and in addition it must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. In other words, I do not think this intends to enlarge the number of persons in the State of Oklahoma who are entitled to make a will, but simply to give our adherence to the permission.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. In line 18, after the word "any," insert the words mentally competent."

Mr. MANN. Where does the gentleman put that?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. After the word "any." Mr. MANN. It should be after the word "member."

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. After the word "member," in line 18, insert the words "mentally competent."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 7, line 18, after the word "member," by inserting the words "mentally competent."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. It will destroy the sense of the bill. Mr. MANN. Oh, no. That will not hurt it any. Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the geatleman from Minnesota, a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that section 5 provides for the disposition of certain trust funds under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, after a guardian has been appointed, and that the guardianship implies incompetency on the part of the Indian to handle that property.

Now, section 8, which we are discussing, absolutely contradicts that so far as concerns the making of a will and gives to an Indian so mentally or physically incompetent that he has to have a guardian during his lifetime to take care of his property the right to make a will and dispose of it all. The language of the original section 5 is, "a person so afflicted, blind, crippled, or helpless"; and now the proposition is, by the section under discussion, if enacted into law, to permit a "helpless Indian," a "blind Indian," though under guardianship, to be left to the tender mercies of the lawyer—if he happens to be that sort of a lawyer—who writes his will for him.

Mr. NORRIS. They do not have any of them in Oklahoma, [Laughter.] I suppose.

Mr. COOPER. He is helpless, he is blind, and during his lifetime section 5 strictly limits the disposition which can be made of his trust funds and other property; but just as soon as he comes to die we allow his will to do with trust funds and property as he pleases. This helpless Indian makes a will and disposes of it-

Mr. FERRIS. In the discretion of the Secretary.

Mr. COOPER. Oh, in the discretion of the Secretary. consider the number of people that would be coming to Washington to assure the Secretary that Indian wills had been properly made. It would impose a very serious burden upon him. These lawyers would say, "This will is in all respects in legal form," and they would bring as many or more witnesses here to say that no undue influence was practiced upon the testator as will be here to say that the blind and helpless Indian was im-The law should not shift such an impossible task upon the Secretary of the Interior, but should itself contain provisions ample to meet the situation.

We, the Congress of the United States, are the real guardians of these Indians. It is our business, as the gentleman from Nebraska said, to provide by law just what shall become of the property of these incompetents when death comes. One of the easiest persons in the world to impose on, I should say, would be a blind, helpless Indian.

The contingencies suggested by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burkel, and again suggested by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire], can all be met and amply covered by a law. If children are born after the allotments have been made we can by statute declare what shall become of the property in the event of death.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I do not think we have that power.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, before my amendment is put I should like to ask unanimous consent to modify it so that it will read as follows:

After the word "Indians," in line 19, insert "not mentally incompetent."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will accept that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 19, after the word "Indians," insert the words "not agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. COOPER. I move to amend the amendment by adding the words "and not under guardianship,"

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CONNELL). The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Anderson].

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That section 4, paragraph 4, of the Osage allotment act, approved June 28, 1906, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Fourth. There shall be set aside and reserved from the royalties received from oil, gas, or other tribal mineral rights or other tribal funds, however arising, not to exceed $40,000 per annum for agency purposes and as an emergency fund, which money shall be paid out from time to time upon the requisition of the Osage tribal council with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the provision in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes,' approved June 7, 1897 (30 Stat. L., 90), limiting the amount of money to be expended for salaries of regular employees at any one agency shall not hereafter apply to the Osage Agency."

Mr. MURDOCK. I should like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma a question. The gentleman will remember that there were oil leases made upon some of the Osage Indian lands previous to allotment?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. On all of the lands.

Mr. MURDOCK. Were those Standard Oil leases or not? Could they be so designated? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. No; they were not Standard

Oil leases

Mr. MURDOCK. They were leases of independents? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. They were independent, local Later on, since production, I understand that the Standard Oll Co. has purchased some of those leases in what is known in the oil field as proven territory, and that the question of the transfer is now before the Secretary of the Interior, and he has refused to approve the transfer from independent or local producers to the Standard Oil people on minor leases after they have been chopped up.

Mr. MURDOCK. So now these leases which were made previous to allotment are in statu quo?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. No; they are not. There are 1,500,000 acres of the land, and the Secretary of the Interior refused to renew what was known as the blanket lease on any land which had not been tested, or where they were not producing, or where they had not proven or disproven the presence of oil. They had drilled on about 600,000 acres, and the lease was renewed as to that much of it. The rest of it is not under lease at this time, and they are taking steps to lease all of it.

Mr. MURDOCK. What becomes of the income from these leases? Does that go into some general fund?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That goes into the Osage general-purpose fund. Some of it is paid out. It does not go into the Treasury of the United States. It is paid to the Osages, except where a part of the money is taken for the running expenses. They pay for their own local government, and that is the purpose of the last paragraph. Their business is so enlarged that they are very much behind with their leases. They can not get funds. They have not the funds now to employ suffi-

Mr. MURDOCK. Is that why this limitation upon the pay of employees is placed in this paragraph?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is the reason. This fund goes first to the running expenses, and what is left is paid in severalty to the Indians.

Mr. COOPER. What change is made? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I und

I understand that the only difference is an increase from $30,000 to $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice that in this bill it says that the limitation on the amount paid at any agency in one year shall not apply hereafter to the Osage Agency. I should like to inquire the reason for that?

Mr. MILLER. That is the law now. This does not change that. This simply increases the amount from $30,000 to $40,000. The Osages wanted $50,000, but, after consideration, it was fixed at $40,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is correct. The other part of it is the law at the present time.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Lloyd, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 2) supplementary to and amendatory of the act entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Nation of Indians in Oklahoma," approved June 28, 1906, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken in gross.

No separate vote was demanded on any amendment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Stephens of Texas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 14667

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14667) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depreda-tions," approved March 3, 1891.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. If the House should now adjourn, would not this bill be the unfinished business on next Calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. It undoubtedly would.
Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to raise the question of consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. That is raised in the committee under this auto-

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] that when this bill comes up the House automatically goes into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and then is the time for the gentleman to raise the question of consideration.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, at the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Insular Affairs, an article was inserted in the Record entitled "A suggested Democratic policy for the Philippines." I now ask unanimous consent that an article which appeared in the same paper, the National Monthly, written by the Hon. Manuel L. Quezon, Resident Commissioner of the Philippine Islands, entitled "The true Democratic policy for the Philippines," be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I think I shall not do, I would like to make this suggestion for the benefit of Members of the House in order to ascertain their point of view. We have got in the habit of inserting in the Record most anything that anyone asks for. It is printed in the Record in fine type. Anybody that reads the Record regularly certainly does not read articles in that fine type. What the benefit of inserting them in the Record is I have not been able to discover. The Senate, a very illustrious body at the other end of the Capitol, has adopted the practice in recent months, instead of inserting these articles in the Record, of having them printed as Senate documents. It seems to me that it would be a much wiser practice for the House, instead of inserting everything in the Record, where it only serves to cumber up the RECORD and where nobody will read them, to print them as House documents, where people can get at them and read them. I do not object to the request of the gentleman from Virginia

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The article referred to is as follows:

THE TRUE DEMOCRATIC POLICY FOR THE PHILIPPINES.

[A reply to the Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Member of Congress, by Hon. MANUEL L. QUEZON, Resident Commissioner from the Philip-pines.]

In the January issue of the National Monthly appeared an article by the Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, in which he expressed his wish to present a Philippine policy which should be at once "Democratic, considerate, humane, and in accord with all the

He begins by saying that "the Democratic Party is not responsible for acquiring the Philippines." In view of the fact that the Democratic leader of the day, Mr. Bryan, assisted by George Gray, the Democratic Senator from Delaware, secured the ratification of the treaty with Spain, which ceded the islands to the United States, this statement should be modified. Had this gentleman stood with Senator Hoar, the Philippine question would never have arisen. But it is true that Mr. Bryan never contemplated the retention of the islands, but only the conclusion of peace, believing and always consistently urging that the United States should take the islands in trust, to turn them over to the control of the Filipino people. That the islands should receive their independence and be given the opportunity to work out their own salvation was the Democratic doctrine, and has been proclaimed as Democratic doctrine in every national convention since that day. If it was a blunder to take the islands at all, it is a blunder to be rectified by letting them go as soon as possible.

Mr. Redfield says that "it may be laid down as fundamental that the Democratic policy requires that the American flag shall not permanently float over any dependent people," and he quotes with cordial approval a statement from the editor of the St. Louis Republic, as follows:

"Devoted to equal rights and equal opportunities, it would trust the whole body of the people at any time with any responsibility voluntarily assumed rather than yield control to one man or to a small group of men, no matter how wise and how good," and he prefaces this by the statement that "Democratic policy can not approve taxation without representation; no more can it approve the exercise of power over many by a few.

There is an earlier and more fundamental statement of Democratic doctrine, indorsed for more than a century by the whole American people. It reads thus:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident. * * * That all men are created equal," and that governments derive "their just powers from the consent of the governed."

Upon these self-evident truths the Democratic Party may safely take its stand, and if these are respected their independence can not longer be denied to the Filipino people, who are American subjects to-day against their will, only because the United States are strong enough to conquer them, and who are governed not by their representatives, but by a few Americans, in choosing whom they have no voice. We may, however, content ourselves with the statement of principle which Mr. REDFIELD quotes, for the retention of the Philippines is wholly inconsistent with that, since the control of the whole Filipino people is given to a few Americans, who tax them as they think proper.

Mr. Redfield argues that the Filipinos are poor, and, looked at "from the lowest standpoint—that of material needs—are in a backward condition"; that "the home of the Filipino farmer is usually a hut"; that "he is a child in farming, and needs to be taught"; and his conclusion is "that when they shall have acquired a common language and means of communication and have by the practice of self-government in their municipalities and provinces acquired the habit of self-government, and when the majority of them shall be able to cast a ballot which they can read in any language, it will be for them to decide what they wish their future relations with the United States to be" and that until then "education, commerce, sanitation should be promoted by all the influence and power that is available to the American people, and that in the development of commerce the rights of the people of the islands shall be safeguarded scrupulously."

In this connection it may be noted that he thinks a hundred millions a year or more might flow to this country from the Philippines.

Mr. Redfield insists that before the question of independence is decided conditions must exist in the Philippines which do not exist in this or any other country and which have nothing to do with the right of self-government.

He says, "when they shall have acquired a common language." As Gov. Curry says, who is as familiar as any American can be with the Philippines, almost every Filipino can read or write his own language, and they understand each other. When was it Democratic doctrine that one nation could seize the territory of another, and insist that the inhabitants of the conquered territory should learn a new language before the question could be raised of giving them back their own land?

"They must speak a common language." Do the voters in Mr. Redfield's own district speak a common language? Do the Pennsylvania Dutch speak a language which the Minnesota Norwegian, an east-side Hebrew, or a Boston Italian can comprehend? Because there is a difference of language in the islands shall the United States, with all the different languages spoken in this country, insist that the Filipinos can not be free till they speak the same language, and that not their native tongue? How many well-governed, happy, and prosperous independent nations of to-day would immediately lose their independence if this rule were to be consistently applied?

"When they have by the practice of self-government in their municipalities and provinces acquired the habit of self-government." All the provincial governors are now Filipinos; the municipalities are governed by Filipinos; almost half the commission are Filipinos; more than half the judges and a large majority of other officers are Filipinos; and the assembly which has shown its sense and capacity, is wholly Filipino. They have shown capacity for self-government; and, if not, who is to judge when they acquire it, and what proof is needed?

Mr. REDFIELD would leave these questions to the American people, and let them decide whether another people can govern themselves. When was that sound Democratic doctrine?

He would have the interests of my people "safeguarded scrupulously" while the United States is developing the resources of the islands. When was that ever done in the history of the world? Is it done now in the United States by those who have been developing your resources in iron, coal, oil, tobacco, beef, and hides? Heretofore no subject people found their interests protected by their rulers, and the United States, which can not protect its own citizens against unscrupulous capital, certainly will never protect the Filipinos any better.

Mr. REDFIELD is afraid that the islands will fall into the hands of a native oligarchy. Where are they now? What is the Philippine Commission but an oligarchy appointed by a foreign If it be true that the Filipinos of wealth and education will, with the consent of their countrymen, exercise a controlling influence in the government of the islands, is not that better than it is to leave them in the hands of a foreign oligarchy without that consent? Will not their own countrymen understand them better than aliens? Any government to which the governed consent, be it oligarchy or monarchy, is in accordance with the fundamental doctrine enunciated by Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence. England is a democracy as much as the United States, and the King has far less power than the President; but if the whole Filipino government consisted of president, senate, and house of representatives, as in this free land, and the Filipino people had no voice in selecting them, that government would not be democratic. It hardly lies in the mouths of people so largely governed by a few, the various bosses who for years have controlled American politics-for a people taxed during so many years by men selected by those who have profited by the taxes, to insist on ideal conditions in the Philippine Archipelago.

Mr. Redfield reaches his conclusions by assuming certain facts that do not exist or else have less importance than he claims for them. He says the Filipinos largely live in huts and are children in farming. So are most of the people in this world. There is nothing so little understood by luman beings as farming. Let him ride through the United States and see how many of his fellow citiezns live in huts in the country or worse tenements in the large cities; let him examine the census and learn how small is the average income of American citizens, and see how the tests which he would apply to the Filipinos would be borne in this country.

He says "there is no such thing as a Philippine people," and points to the existence in the islands of various tribes like the Negritos, Igorrotes, and others. There are about 7,500,000 to 8,000,000 people in the islands, and of these all but 500,000 are civilized Christian people. Are these people to be denied the right to govern themselves because some of their fellow countrymen are savage. Were there no American people when Cornwallis surrendered, because there were savages within their territory? Is the right to independence of the American people affected by the fact that among them there are millions of dis-franchised negroes, Italians, and others? What reason is there to suppose that these tribes, Moros and others, would not be safer in the hands of a Filipino government than they are in the hands of the American Government? The statistics will show that more Americans on one side and savages on the other have been killed in the attempt to subdue the Moros and other tribes than were killed of Filipinos or savage tribesmen in any contest between them during three centuries before American occupation. Even now warfare is going on against the Moros, although the facts are not disclosed to the American people. During the war of conquest the Igorrotes of Luzon and the Moros of Mindanao recognized and obeyed the authority of the Philippine Republic, and while Christian Filipinos ruled the Moros the valleys and mountains of the Moro country were free from bloodshed. Mr. Redfield's statements in regard to the relation between the different elements of the Philippine population can not be substantiated by facts.

Mr. Redfield says that 192,975 voters alone voted at the last election, and that this is a small percentage of the total population. This is also true in every election in the United States, since only 20 per cent of the total population is usually taken as the total possible voting portion. If there are $,000,000 people in the Philippines, the men of voting age should number 1,600,000, but this Government does not let all these vote. They must speak and write either English or Spanish, or must have a certain amount of property, or pay a certain sum in taxes. How many voters in the United States would be disfranchised if some foreign power were to seize the country and insist that to vote they must learn Russian or German? There are all over this country many voters who have no property and pay no tax. If all these were disfranchised unless they could speak some foreign language, how much would the registered vote be reduced?

Tell the voter, moreover, that the men he chooses will have no power, that whatever they do can be vetoed by a foreigner, and a great incentive for voting is removed. If, in Mr. Redfield's State, the voters could only choose the assembly, and the governor of Massachusetts appointed the senate and the governor, how much interest would the New York voters take in an election?

When the Filipinos are given their independence, the classes now disfranchised can be permitted to vote, and will know that their votes will have some weight. Then we should see a much larger vote at our elections. When the substance is denied the form soon ccases to attract. While the Philippine Commission appointed by the President can veto any act of the Philippine Assembly, no wonder then that the voter does not vote.

Mr. Redfield quotes the statements of Moro chiefs, given through an interpreter, but these are not to be taken at their face value. Those who heard them and knew the conditions under which they were made knew that they were not spontaneous and that they did not express the sentiments of the speakers. The Moros, as Mohammedans, count it a virtue to kill a Christian. How absurd is it that they should be represented as insisting that the chance to do this good act be denied them? The writer was present when the statements quoted by Mr. Redfield were delivered, and he could write an interesting story about their true source.

In short, Mr. REDFIELD would retain the Philippines until conditions which exist nowhere else exist there. He would leave the Filipinos under the sway of a small American oligarchy, against the will of the Filipino people, lest they be controlled by their own best men, who, in any community, are necessarily few. Such a government by their own leaders would be hailed with delight by the Philippine people. Mr. REDFIELD, on the other hand, would allow one man to "rule with a rod of iron 120,000 savages, whom nobody before has even been able to deal with or bring under control, whose least word is now their law," to quote the words of Governor General Forbes. He would let another American rule 350,000 men, as the same authority states that he does, thus giving two individuals despotic power over a large proportion of the savages, whom he is afraid to trust to their Filipino brothers. He would continue this system indefinitely until the rulers of the United States decide that the Filipinos are fit to govern themselves. By what right can this be called a Democratic policy? How can it be reconciled with Democratic principles, as he himself states them? How can it be distinguished from tyranny?

"I contend that it is to arraign the dispositions of the Almighty to suppose that he has created beings incapable of governing themselves. Self-government is the natural government of man," said Henry Clay. "No man is good enough to govern another without that other's consent," said Abraham Lincoln. These are statements of the true Democratic doctrine, and, as President Schurman, of the first Philippine Commission, said:

"The worst government of the Filipinos by themselves is better that the best government of them by us."

No nation ever rises save by its own exertions and its own mistakes, and every nation has the right to its independence. To these principles the Democratic Party has committed itself again and again since 1898. Its policy is to let the Filipinos govern themselves, and no specious argument for the continuance of American sway should blind any Democrat or make him untrue to the principles which alone justify the party's existence. In this emergency it must be true to itself and let the Filipino people go. Any other course is morally wrong and politically indefensible.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14918) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also requested the Senate to furnish the House with a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2819) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900, the original having been lost or destroyed.

CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The following message from the House was laid before the Senate yesterday and there was pending a motion by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] to concur in the House amendment. The Secretary will again read the action of the other House.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 2, 1912.

Resolved, That the bill (S. 252) to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau do pass with the following amendment:
"Page 2, line 20, strike out 'one thousand four' and insert 'eight."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho to concur.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that that clause of the bill be read as it would read if amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as re-

The Secretary. On page 2, section 3, strike out "one thousand four" and insert "eight," so that if amended it will read: One special agent, at $1,200, and one messenger, at $840.

Mr HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am not entirely sure that this belongs to the class of resolutions that come up automatically or come over. It is not within the ordinary class of resolutions that being introduced upon one day and going over come up during the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands it, that is not the proposition now before the Senate. The rules provide that the Chair at any time may lay before the Senate messages from the President, the House of Representatives, and so forth.

Mr. HEYBURN. But it having been laid before the Sen-

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was not disposed of, although it could have been disposed of had the point been insisted upon. It was interrupted to lay before the Senate the unfinished business on yesterday afternoon, and the moment the unfinished business was laid before the Senate, had it seemed wise to the Chair the Chair could have again at that moment presented it for disposition, but the Chair did not. The matter is now be-fore the Senate, having been presented by the Chair, which, as the Chair understands the rule, he has a right to do at any time, for final disposition.

Mr. President, I think it is not within that Mr. HEYBURN. class. It is now before the Senate on a motion from a Senator and not upon any action of the Chair. I am merely seeking to develop the real status of it by inquiry, not to raise any elaborate discussion

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion is pending to concur in the House amendment. Now, whether the motion be considered as originally made this morning or whether it be considered as a motion coming over from yesterday, it seems to the Chair, is immaterial.

Mr. HEYBURN. Except that it would not come up at this time over an objection, the morning business not being dis-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule which permits the Chair to lay matters before the Senate, section 6 of Rule VII, provides that-

The Presiding Officer may at any time-

At any time-

lay * * * before the Senate any bill or other matter sent to the Senate by the President or the House of Representatives.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; that is where there is a concurrence; but here there is a new issue joined, and the issue joined rests on the motion of the Senator from Idaho. The question is whether it comes within that rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that it is properly presented at any time other than when the Journal is

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but is it that kind of a motion? It did not come over. The question now to be considered and voted upon is not any question that came over from the House; it is the motion of the Senator from Idaho. The motion of the Senator from Idaho is a proper motion, but it is certainly not within the class of motions that come over from the House. His motion did not come over from the House; it originated here vesterday

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair thinks, it is a matter of no consequence whether it be considered as a matter which was presented yesterday or whether it be considered as a matter originally presented now.

Mr. HEYBURN. Except, Mr. President, as to the thing that would follow. If it comes up here as any other motion from a Senator and is not disposed of, it goes to the calendar automatically. If it comes over here as a communication from the House, subject to the disposition of the Chair, it does not go to the calendar, but remains on the President's desk.

While it may not be so important in this case, and I have no intention of precipitating any long discussion at this time, this condition has arisen once or twice before within my recollection, and it has always seemed to me that the Senate was deprived of the right to have the matter go to the calendar and be considered as other motions. Any motion made by a Senator and not disposed of goes to the calendar automatically, and any matter coming over from the House to the President of the Senate remains on the desk of the President.

Now, it is a question where these things rest. If it goes to the calendar, Senators then may, if they think it proper, have We have carried it subject to call and subject to objection. things on the calendar that came over like this on former occasions. Large matters we have carried over for a long time. Of course, there being no conference report here, there is no opportunity to object to the conference report, but the motion of the Senator from Idaho is the equivalent of a conference report. It performs the function of a conference report. I am not going to make any strenuous resistance to the conditions that arise, but it is quite worth while as a matter of parliamentary law to know whether or not a motion to concur in an amendment of the House made by a Senator occupies any different status from a motion to concur presented by a conference committee. If it were presented by a conference committee there would be no difficulty at all in sending it to the calendar. Why should not the same condition exist when it is presented by a Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks there is no question but that the motion of the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is now in order, and that the suggestion of the senior Senator from Idaho that by such a ruling power is taken from the Senate to do what it may wish is not a well-founded argument, because it is within the power of the Senate to negative the motion of the junior Senator from Idaho and then require the bill to take such course as the Senate may desire.

The question is on the motion of the junior Senator from Idaho that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5718) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to secure for the United States title to patented lands in the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes, which were: On page 1, line 12, to strike out "timber"; on page 2, line 3, to strike out "for"; on page 2, in lines 19 and 20, to strike out "may be used by said Secretary in the management, improvement, and protection of the park," and insert "shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts"; and on page 3, in lines 14 and 15, to strike out "expended under his direction in the management, improvement, and protection of the park" and insert "deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.'

Mr. WORKS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEADERS ON FORMER INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3475) extending the time of payment to certain homesteaders on the Chevenne River Indian Reservation in the State of South Dakota and the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, which were: On page 2, line 1, to strike out "and" and insert "such"; on page 2, line 6, to strike out "is due" and insert "becomes due by the terms of the act under which the entry was made"; and on page 2, line 9, after the word "lands," to insert: "And provided further. That any entryman who has resided upon and cultivated the land embraced in his entry for the period of time required by law in order to make commutation proof, may make proof, and if the same is approved, further residence and cultivation will not be required: Provided, That any and all payments must be made when due unless the entryman applies for an extension and pays interest at 5 per cent per annum in advance upon the amount due as herein provided, and patent shall be withheld until full and final payment of the purchase price is made in accordance with the provisions hereof.'

Mr. GAMBLE. I move the Senate concur in the House

amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

SUPPRESSION OF BUBONIC PLAGUE IN HONOLULU.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to be furnished with a dupli-cate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2819) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900, the same having been lost or destroyed since its reference to the Committee on Claims of the House, and, by unanimous consent, the request of the House of Representatives was ordered to be complied with.

PREVENTION OF FOREST FIRES.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have had several communications from officials connected with the Society for the Protection of New Hampshire Forests calling attention to a proposed reduction in the agricultural appropriation bill of the funds available to prevent and fight forest fires. I have in my hand a letter from the secretary of that society, which I ask may be read from the desk and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will read the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary

The letter was read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

THE SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF NEW HAMPSHIRE FORESTS, Concord, N. H., April 2, 1912.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: On behalf of this society I wish to call your attention to the provisions of the agricultural bill, which has recently passed the House, by which the appropriation for the Forest Service is reduced over $1,000.000, principally from the funds available to prevent and fight forest fires. Our society has carefully investigated this matter of fire protection and finds that the national forests embrace properties of about $2,000.000,000 in value. Reasonable protection of this tremendous asset from destruction by fire will necessarily involve large appropriations, but there is no doubt that if the money is properly expended it will be a wise investment for the Government to make. In 1910 the cost of fighting fires was $900,000 more than the appropriation.

I am unable to imagine the purpose of attempting to hamper forest.

In 1910 the cost of fighting fires was cook, ow more than the appropriation.

I am unable to imagine the purpose of attempting to hamper forest service in caring for the public domain; but whatever it may be, it is clear that the people as a whole will be justified in charging up to those who may be successful in their efforts to cripple the Forest Service full responsibility for the resulting loss. It is unfortunate, however, that holding people responsible for such things does not restore the forests which may be destroyed by these unchecked fires.

New Hampshire has established an efficient fire-patrol and lookout system, largely as a result of the efforts of this society.

Anything that you can do in aiding the Forest Service will be greatly appreciated.

Very truly, yours,

Society for Protection of New Hampshire Forests,

By Allen Hollis, Secretary.

THE MILITARY POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SMOOT. On yesterday the Senate ordered printed 1,000 copies of The Military Policy of the United States, by Bvt. Maj. Gen. Emory Upton, United States Army. I find, upon examination, that there are a number of illustrations embodied in the volume. I ask that the Public Printer be authorized to include the illustrations in the printing of the document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order will be entered as requested by the Senator from Utah.

THE PARCEL POST AND POSTAL EXPRESS (S. DOC. NO. 490).

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have an article by the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] on the parcel-post and postal-express situation in Congress. I move that the article be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to.

PROGRESSIVE RULE OF ACTION IN JUDICIAL MATTERS.

Mr. JONES. I desire to give notice that on next Wednesday, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, I desire to submit some remarks on former President Roosevelt's recent advocacy as a progressive rule of action in judicial matters the rule announced and followed by Pontius Pilate about nineteen hundred years ago.

MARSHAL FOR DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2434) providing for an increase of salary of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut, which was, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "three thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

VOTES ON CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in connection with an address by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, which has been printed recently as Senate Document No. 238, referring to certain statements and statistics contained in that speech, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD certain papers which I hold in my hand, and in that connection to make a brief statement.

In this address Dr. Butler refers to the vote last year in California adopting certain constitutional amendments, and delivers very severe strictures on the proceedings because of the alleged small vote that was cast for them. This is the address which was printed as Senate Document No. 238. He says, on page 14:

It has, however, escaped attention that the total vote cast for and against these revolutionary proposals was about 60 per cent of the vote cast for President in 1908 or that cast for governor in 1910. Apparently the number of people in California who are interested in their form of government are only about six-tenths of the number that were interested in who should be President of the United States or who should be governor of the State. Of the 23 amendments that were presented to the people of California on one and the same ballot, some half dozen were genuine constitutional amendments; the rest were atmost without exception matters of legislation, some of them very trifling.

half dozen were genuine constitutional amendments; the rest were atmost without exception matters of legislation, some of them very trilling.

If you have not already seen it, I want to show you the document that was sent by the secretary of the State of California to every registered voter in the State. [Here the speaker exhibited a large sheet closely printed on both sides.] You will observe that the State officials who got up this amazing document did not expect it to be read by anybody. It is solidly printed in small type on both sides of one sheet, and there is the trilling little matter of a supplement with three or four amendments on a separate sheet. Here are printed the questions that were submitted not to the Court of Appeals of California, not to the professors of political science in the State university, not even to the legislature of the State, but to the voters! I submit that the whole proceeding is ridiculous. Look at these pieces of paper. In 1908, 386,000 voted for President in California; in 1910, 385,000 voted for governor. The highest vote cast, on October 10 last, for any of these amendments was cast in regard to the amendment relating to women's suffrage. The total vote on that amendment was 246,000; 140,000 fewer than were polled three years before for President and 139,000 fewer than were polled three years before for governor. Women's suffrage was carried in California by an affirmative vote of 125,000, or 2,000 less than Mr. Bryan received in 1908, when he lost the State by nearly 90,000 majority.

Is it not obvious, then, that we are changing our form of government in the United States by a minority vote?

I ask leave, without reading it, to print in the Record as a

I ask leave, without reading it, to print in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a certified statement of the secretary state of New York giving the vote cast for and against 13 amendments to the constitution of New York from 1905 to 1909; also a brief statement showing the nature of the amendments, the total vote for President, governor, justice of the court of appeals in elections nearest to these, from which it appears that while Dr. Butler denounces the process of adopting constitutional amendments in California because only six-tenths of those voting for President and governor voted upon the constitutional amendments, in his own State of New York only one-third of those voting for President and one-fourth of those voting for justice of the court of appeals voted upon the con-stitutional amendments. This certainly shows that if the new measures adopted in California, which this writer says are "sweeping away our fundamental guaranties," "destroying our fundamental principles," and "pulling up our institutions by the root," are to be discredited because only six-tenths of the voters voted upon the question, then surely every constitutional amendment adopted in the State of New York from 1905 to 1909 by a much smaller percentage of the vote must be likewise discredited. And the same thing applies everywhere to every constitution or constitutional amendment submitted to the constitution or constitutional amendment submitted people. Strange to say, one alternative which Dr. Butler suggests for this is not a larger electorate and more voters, but the constitution should be left to "the that the amendment of the constitution should be left to "the professors of political science in the State University." That suggestion is certainly an original one, and can not even be found in the lore of the ancient world which Dr. Butler speaks of. He says, on page 14:

Here are printed the questions which were submitted, not to the Court of Appeals of California, not to the professors of political science in the State University, not even to the legislature, but to the

You will notice the contempt with which he speaks of submitting a matter to the voters He does not seem to favor suffrage by the people. On page 15 he says:

It was no less a person than Daniel Webster who said that "our American mode of government does not draw any power from tumultuous assemblages."

To which Dr. Butler adds:

This is true whether the tumultuous assemblage shouts and cries aloud on a sand lot or whether the tumultuous assemblage goes through the form of voting at the polls.

Voting at the polls seems to be a mere matter of form with Dr. Butler, and certainly it has been a mere matter of empty form with the people of many of our cities and States. In the recent primary in New York, which elected delegates to a State convention of which Dr. Butler is slated to be chairman, the citizens did not even have the chance to go through the form

Dr. Butler's whole address is on the thesis that the people are not competent to govern themselves. He is quite picturesque in his mode of argument against direct legislation and the recall. It consists largely of a series of epithets, such as "revolutionists," "preposterous," "vicious," "ridiculous," "foolish," "stupid," "stupid folly," "outrage."

He shows a misconception of the entire matter when he says it is a proposition to "change the form of government." It is not, but is simply to improve the administration and operation of the form of government. He complains (p. 5) that the changes "are not brought forward as philosophic propositions to be examined and passed upon in principle" and are "not brought forward as a complete and conscious program." the contrary, the usual complaint is that the program is too philosophic and too conscious. He says it proposes a "socialistic democracy." This is a mistaken assumption, utterly without any ground. It contains none of the elements of socialism, This is a mistaken assumption, utterly withwhile the system which Dr. Butler defends leads directly and inevitably to socialism. He cites Madison, as follows (p. 4):

A republic is a government which derives all its powers directly from the great body of the people and is administered by persons holding their offices during pleasure, for a limited period, or during good behavior.

Holding office "during the pleasure" of "the great body of the people" is the principle of the recall completely included in this definition by Madison of a republic. In the same paragraph (pp. 14-15) Dr. Butler asserts that the constitutional amendments adopted in California "revolutionized the Government," and that they are largely "matters of legislation, some of them very trifling"; that there were too few voters and that there were too many.

Dr. Butler's speech is a delightful effort, full of literary charm, sprightly wit, and interesting abuse. It is true that it overflows with inaccuracies, misstatements, and bulls; but then allowance ought to be made for the fact that Dr. Butler has had little experience with affairs, and has spent most of his time in an atmosphere where the one great goal and object was a large endowment from some "malefactor of great wealth" or a comfortable pension from the profits of watered steel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the papers referred to by the Senator from Washington, which he asks may be printed in the RECORD without reading, will be so printed.

The papers referred to are as follows:

Second Deputy Secretary of State.

REDEMPTION OF DISTRICT CERTIFICATE OF INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5246) to redeem a certain outstanding certificate of indebtedness issued by the late board of audit of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to receive and audit certificate of indebtedness No. 174 (sewer tax), issued by the late board of audit of the District of Columbia, dated August 1, 1874, of the sum of $42.50, for the redemption of which there is no existing law, and to pay to the holder the principal amount of said certificate, and a sufficient amount to pay the certificate aforesaid is hereby appropriated, one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amoundment was agreed to

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. LODGE. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of-

Mr. LODGE. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks for the regular order, which is the consideration of bills on the calendar under Rule VIII. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

The Secretary. The bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask that the bill go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over. Senate concurrent resolution No. 4, instructing the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co., was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be passed over.

DENTAL SURGEONS IN THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 290) to authorize the appointment of dental surgeons in the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.
Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, that bill has been on the calendar for two months, and I should like to have it taken up and disposed of at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah has made objection. Does the Senator from California move to take up the bill?

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 290, the objection of the Senator from Utah to the contrary notwith-

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will suggest that I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill, but I should like to have it explained. If the Senator will explain the bill, I will withdraw any objection to its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California to proceed to the consideration of the bill, and that motion is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I send to the desk the report of the committee on the bill and ask to have read the portions I have marked.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

quested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Department of the Nayy,
Washington, April 14, 1911.

My Dear Senator: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the Sth instant inclosing a bill (S. 290) to authorize the appointment of dental surgeons in the United States Nayy, and, on behalf of the committee, requesting the views and recommendation of the department relative thereto.

In reply I have the honor to inform you that legislation providing for the services of dentists in the Navy has, for a number of years, been consistently recommended.

The necessity and desirability of being able to avail of the services of such skilled practitioners, especially for the care and cure of dental disorders among the enlisted men, is unquestionable. Moreover, the enlisted men are often prevented either by reason of expense or the remoteness of their station from securing adequate attention in this respect, which is a most important one from the viewpoint of their efficiency on board ship.

There is inclosed a copy of the annual report of the Surgeon General of the Navy for the fiscal year 1909, wherein, at pages 35-39, will be found an exposition of the need for dental surgeons, such as may be provided for by the enactment of the proposed legislation, which is commended to the favorable consideration of the committee and which has the indorsement of the department.

Faithfully, yours,

The Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate

provided for by the enactment of the proposed legislation, which is commended to the favorable consideration of the committee and which has the indorsement of the department.

Faithfully, yours,

Geo. von L. Meyere,

The Chairman Committee on Navar. Appaires,

United States Senate.

The bill provides for the appointment of 30 dental surgeons for service in the Navy with the title of acting assistant surgeon, and with the revocable rank of lieutenant, junior grade. After three years' service acting assistant dental surgeons become eligible, subject to physical and professional examinations, to appointment to the grade of assistant dental surgeon with the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, and after a further service of three years 4 of the 30 assistant dental surgeon with the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, and after a further service of the years 1 of the trank of lieutenant; after a further service of the years 1 of the trank of lieutenant; after a further service of the years 1 of the trank of lieutenant commander.

The pay and allowances are the same as provided for officers of corresponding grades in the Corps of Surgeons, and a clause reenacts the act of May 4, 1898, which equalizes the pay and allowances of acting assistant and assistant surgeons. As but one dental surgeon would attain the rank of lieutenant commander, which rank is required under existing law to entitle a staff officer to retired pay for age, provision is made for the retirement in the grade of lieutenant and lieutenant, junior grade. In the Sixty-first Congress, third session, the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives reported for passage an identical bill, and in "The grades of permanent rank attainable under the provisions of the bill are limited to the three lowest grades of the Staff Corps of the Army and Navy, and in this respect conforms with the views were adopted by the Committees on Milliary Affairs of both the Senate and the House of Representatives, as shown by Senate Report No. 130, Sixtleth Congress.

"The enactm

The evidence which has been brought to the attention of your committee seems to be conclusive of the necessity for the appointment of dental surgeons under such conditions as will attract to the service men of character, ability, and experience, and this end we believe the present bill will accomplish. We therefore recommend that the bill pass.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I move to strike out section 11.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas offers the amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The Secretary. On page 5 it is proposed to strike out section 11, in the following words:

Sec. 11. That all officers authorized by this act shall be eligible to re-tirement in the same manner and under the same conditions as officers of the Medical Corps of the Navy: Provided, That section 1445 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be applicable to the officers herein authorized: And provided further, That the dentist now employed at the Naval Academy shall not be displaced by the operation of this act.

Mr. BRISTOW. That strikes out the provision for the retirement of these dentists as officers of the Navy. Dentistry is purely a civil employment. I think the retired lists of both the Army and the Navy are becoming excessive and soon will become burdensome. There is no more occasion for retiring a dentist of the Navy as a naval officer than there is of retiring any other civil employee of the Navy Department as a naval officer. It is purely a civil employment.

Senate Document No. 449 shows the number of retired naval officers that we now have. There are on the retired list 210 rear admirals, costing the Government more than a million dollars a year. Then comes a list of the inferior officers,

My principal objection to the bill is that it provides a lot of civil employees who are made officers of the Navy, and thereby makes them eligible to be retired at the age of 62. A dentist may be retired when he is 62 years old. Then he will set up a dentist's office somewhere and proceed to do business for the remainder of his life, meanwhile drawing a compensation from the Government. It seems to me it is indefensible.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas is mistaken in charging that these men will retire as officers of the Navy. They are simply enlisted men. There are 49 vocathe Navy. They are simply emisted men. There are 45 vocations in the Navy of enlisted men. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, which reported favorably to the Senate a similar bill, and it has become a law. That bill provided for just twice the number of dentists in the Army that this bill provides for in the Navy. The Army bill provided for 60 and this bill provides for 30.

An enlisted man must serve 30 years in the Navy before he is eligible to retirement; and if this bill becomes a law these dentists will come in as enlisted men. There are 49 vocations in the Navy, from gunner and chief gunner to cook of the forecastle, coal passer, coal heaver, and so forth. Those men have to serve 30 years before they are eligible to retirement. They are not retired at 62 years of age. There are only 320 of the enlisted men of the Navy who have been retired, and they range in ages from 60 to 78 and 80 and 82.

Mr. BRISTOW. I call the attention of the Senator from California to section 11 of the bill, which I seek to strike out. That section provides-

That all officers authorized by this act shall be eligible to retirement in the same manner and under the same conditions as officers of the Medical Corps of the Navy.

Whatever rank they have they are retired as officers of that rank.

Mr. PERKINS. These are enlisted men. Mr. BRISTOW. But they are retired as officers by the very provision which I seek to strike out—section 11.

Mr. LODGE. This is about the most important section in

Mr. President, I think section 11 is one of the most important features of the bill. We have in the Navy many persons following civilian occupations who are subject to retirement as in the Army. Chaplains, paymasters, members of the Medical Corps, are all, in the sense referred to by the Senator from Kansas, civilian employees. They are all eligible to retirement.

The necessity of a dental corps for the Navy is very great greater than in the Army, because by the conditions of the pro-fession the men are more separated than are the soldiers from places where they can secure the services of dentists. The need of dentists is very great, indeed, for the general health and hygiene of the men.

We have already done this for the Army. The object of the bill is simply to assure securing good men for the service. You can not get the best men, or men sufficiently good, unless you will make them the offer of retirement which will compensate for their comparatively small earnings,

It is very desirable, in order that we may have proper men in this corps, to give them suitable recognition. They all have to have years of training, and have to pass severe examinations. It is very desirable, therefore, to give them retirement and this very moderate rank of lieutenant to enable us to get such men as we ought to have. In the interest of the health and the comfort of the men it is most important that we should get the best possible dental service for the Navy, and I think this is a very reasonable and moderate bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the principal argument advanced for this bill seems to be that a similar bill was passed for the Army last year. The Senator from California has referred to my being a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. I was not a member of that committee at the time the bill was passed. If I had been I should have opposed it. The fact that something was done then that should not have been done does not justify us in creating an additional retired list of these civil employees.

I am in perfect accord with the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts as to the importance of providing the sailors with proper dental attendance. I think it is all right to make provision for dentists in the Navy. Provision is now being made. The dentists are being paid for the service they perform. It is a civil employment.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator is mistaken. It is performed by the enlisted surgeons and Hospital Corps.

Mr. BRISTOW. They are dentists.

Mr. PERKINS. They are operating under the name of den-

Mr. BRISTOW. There is a contract system by which dentists are now employed. If they are not being paid enough to get efficient dentists, they ought to be paid more; but we ought not to pad these retirement lists.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] says this is the most important provision in the bill. This is an instance of the continuous effort that is being made by civil employees to get upon the retired list. The Army is now costing the Government between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 a year in retired pay.

The naval officers alone are now drawing $2,800,000 a year as retired pay; and this is simply again padding the list with civil employees.

If the Senator thinks that under the contract system which now prevails dentists are not paid enough to get efficient men, he should provide for additional and better compensation for them. But to retire a civil employee at 62 years of age and put him on a pension for life and let him go out into the activities of professional business, as he will, is an imposition on the Treasury of the United States. I know retired military officers who, after they are retired, go into the practice of their regular profession, and some of them make a success. I think they are retired entirely too young. Twenty-five per cent of the Army officers are on the retired list to-day, and a larger percentage of the naval officers. According to the provisions of this bill these men at 62 will be retired.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President— The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do. Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Kansas, for the information of the Senate, state the compensation or pay of these dental officers while in active service?

Mr. BRISTOW. I am not advised as to what they receive. Mr. CUMMINS. Will some Senator who is familiar with the subject state how much each of these 30 officers will receive while in the active service?

Mr. PERKINS. Twenty-five of them will receive $2,000 a

Mr. CUMMINS. Without regard to grade or rank?
Mr. PERKINS. One dental surgeon, at $3,000 a year; 4 passed assistant dental surgeons, at $2,500; and 25 at $2,000 a year; making altogether $63,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. The question, then, would seem to be whether it would be practicable to secure competent dentists for $2,000 a year without the additional hope of pay that is involved in retirement. What does the Senator from Kansas think about that?

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, there are a great many dentists who earn very much more than that, and many who earn less. The compensation of a dentist depends not so much upon his efficiency as upon the locality where he transacts his business. If he is in a small community, where he does not have a great deal to do, his earnings will be small; if in a large community, where there are a great many people living, and people of wealth, his earnings will be very much greater.

Mr. PERKINS. If the Senator from Kansas will permit me, there are on the battleship Kansas—named for the State which the Senator in part represents-869 men, and adding officers and marines, there will be, say, 1,000. There are 2,944 officers on the active list and 901 officers and 320 enlisted men on the retired list. There are 45,500 enlisted men in the Navy. Does not the Senator think that they are entitled to have dentists?

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course I think they are entitled to have dentists, but I do not think that a dentist is entitled to be retired as an officer of the Navy, because he is not an officer of the Navy. He is there to transact civil business, and he ought to be paid a reasonable and liberal compensation for the service that he renders.

Mr. PERKINS. He can only be retired at three-quarters pay after 30 years' service.

Mr BRISTOW. There are a good many men being retired now who are in perfect health, and I am objecting to padding and increasing the retired list of the Army and Navy by civil employees.

Mr. LODGE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do. Mr. LODGE. It seems rather late to make the objection as to civil employees, when we have done the same thing in so many other cases in the Navy and in the Army. We had the contract-surgeon system in the Army and Navy. It was abancontract-surgeon system in the Army and Navy. It was abandoned because it was found to be expensive and they were an inferior class of men. It was given up because we could not get the sort of men we ought to have, and the other system was adopted because we got a better class of men by offering them this amount of security.

It seems to me that 62 years, after a man has been engaged in a profession which requires the very highest manual dex-terity, is not an age of extreme youth. It is a very moderate age for a Senator, but not so great an age, I think, for a surgeon.

I think it is well enough to retire him at 62.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I do not care to delay to any unreasonable time the consideration of the bill. I simply want to enter my protest, and I ask for a vote upon this amendment to cut out the provision for the retirement of these dentists as naval officers.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to state that this bill has been recommended by the past four administrations. The Surgeon General of the Navy in each administration has recommended the passage of this or a similar bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas. [Putting the mendment offered by the Constraint of the Vice President. The vice President. The Senator from Kansas demands the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is rejected.

Mr. BRISTOW. I move to insert in line 12, on page 5, after the word "retirement," the words "at the age of 70 years."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment. Mr. BRISTOW. It increases the retirement age from 62

to 70.

The Secretary. On page 5, line 12, after the word "retirement," insert "at the age of 70 years."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask for a roll call on this amendment.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. CULBERSON. Let the amendment be read again.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 5, line 12, after the word "retirement," insert the words "at the age of 70 years," so that if amended it will read:

Sec. 11. That all officers authorized by this act shall be eligible to retirement at the age of 70 years in the same manner and under the same conditions as officers of the Medical Corps of the Navy: Pro-

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have just one observation make. There has been a great deal of discussion with respect to the retirement of civil-service employees at a certain age and providing some compensation for them after that time. There has never been a suggestion that the general civil-service employees should be retired under 70 years of age, and there is no reason why a person in the Navy pursuing a purely civil employment should be retired at a less age than by the consensus of opinion is applied to general civil-service employees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY IN THE GOVERNMENT SERVICE (H. DOC. NO. 670).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

On the 17th of January last I sent a message to the Congress describing the work of the commission appointed by me under authority of the acts of June 25, 1910, and March 3, 1911, granting appropriations to enable me to inquire into the methods of transacting the public business of the various executive departments and other governmental establishments, and to make report as to improved efficiency and greater economy to be obtained in the expenditure of money for the maintenance of the Government. By way of illustrating the utility of the commission, and the work which they were engaged upon, I referred to a number of reports which they had filed, recommending changes in organization of the departments and bureaus of the Government, the avoidance of duplication of functions and services, and the installation of labor-saving devices and improved office methods. All of the recommendations looked to savings of considerable amounts. With the message of February 5, 1912, I transmitted to the Congress the reports on the centralization of distribution of Government documents, on the use of window envelopes, and on the use of a photographic process for copying records.

A number of the reports of the commission had not then been commented on by the heads of the departments that would be affected by the changes recommended, and therefore I did not feel justified at that time in recommending to the Congress the statutory amendments necessary to carry out the recommendations of the commission. Since then, however, I have received the recommendations of the heads of departments, and I transmit this message for the purpose of expressing my approval of the changes recommended by the commission and of laying before the Congress the reports prepared by the commission.

LOCAL OFFICES SHOULD BE IN THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE.

I have several times called attention to the advantages to be derived from placing in the classified service the local officers under the Departments of the Treasury, of the Post Office, of Justice, of the Interior, and of Commerce and Labor. message submitted to the Congress on January 17 I referred to the loss occasioned to the Government because of the fact that in many cases two persons are paid for doing work that could easily be done by one. In the meantime I have caused an inquiry to be made as to the amount in money of this loss. The results of this inquiry are that the loss amounts to at least $10,000,000 annually. For example, it appears that a very substantial economy would result from putting experienced and trained officers in charge of the first and second class post offices instead of selecting the postmasters in accordance with the present practice. As the annual operating expenses of the first and second class offices aggregate the enormous sum of more than $80,000,000, undoubtedly if the postmasters of these offices were embraced in the classified service, and required to devote all their time to the public service, the annual savings would eventually represent many millions of dollars. The saving in salaries alone, not taking into account any saving due to increased efficiency of operation, would amount to about $4,500.000. At the present time the salaries of postmasters of the first and second class amount to $6,076,900, while the salaries of assistant postmasters of the same classes amount to $2,820,000. If the position of postmaster were placed in the classified service and those officers were given salaries equal to 20 per cent more than the salaries now given to the assistant postmasters, the latter position being no longer required, there would be a saving in salaries to the Government of $4,512,900. In the case of postmasters at offices of the third class a large annual saving could be made.

PENSION AGENCIES.

An annual saving of nearly $62,000 could be made if the position of pension agent were placed in the classified service, since the work now done by a pension agent at a salary of $4,000 and a chief clerk at a salary ranging between $1,400 and $2,250 could easily be done by one person in the permanent classified service at a salary varying from $2,100 to $3,000. Greater economy and efficiency would result from the abolition of the pension agencies and from the adoption of a plan in accordance with which pensions would be paid by the Pension Office in Washington.

DISTRICT LAND OFFICES.

What is true in the matter of payment of pensions is also true in the service under the General Land Office. The field service of this office could be more efficiently and economically operated if it were provided by law that the office of receiver of district land offices be abolished and the duties transferred to the register, assisted by a bonded clerk, and the register placed in the classified service. It has several times been estimated that more than $200,000 would be saved annually and the efficiency of the service greatly increased by the adoption of such a plan.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND CUSTOMS OFFICES.

Large expenditures are made for salaries of political appointees in the internal-revenue and customs services. In both services a direct saving in salaries, and an indirect economy through increased efficiency, would follow a transfer of such offices to the classified service.

OTHER LOCAL OFFICES.

In the other field services the saving which would result from the classification of the local officers under the departments is not as marked or probably capable of as exact estimation as in those mentioned, but there is no doubt that substantial savings would follow. It is not to be doubted that where no saving would result the classification of the local officers would increase the efficiency of the service. It would be desirable also to place all marshals, deputy marshals, and assistant attorneys in the classified service, although but little direct economy would result. Supervising inspectors in the Steamboat-Inspection Service and the members of the field service in the Bureau of Fisheries should be placed in the classified service.

COMMISSION'S REPORT ON LOCAL OFFICES,

The report on methods of appointment submitted to me by the commission, which covers fully the subject of appointments by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and recommends that various local officers, such as postmasters, collectors of internal revenue, etc., and heads of bureaus in the departmental service, be included in the classified service, is transmitted herewith (Appendix No. 1). The report and recommendations are approved by me.

LEGISLATION NEEDED TO ESTABLISH THE MERIT SYSTEM.

In the interest of an efficient and economical administration of the vast business of the Government, I urge the necessity for the inauguration of this important reform, and recommend that the necessary amendments be made to the laws governing appointments, such amendments to take effect not later than July 1, 1913, so that there may be secured to the people the benefits to be derived from a conduct of their affairs by officers selected on a merit basis and devoting their time and talents solely to the duties of their offices.

CONSOLIDATION OF LIGHTHOUSE AND LIFE-SAVING SERVICES.

The commission's report (Appendix No. 2) recommends that the Life-Saving Service of the Department of the Treasury be discontinued as a separate organization and that the maintenance and operation of the life-saving stations of the country be made one of the duties of the Bureau of Lighthouses of the Department of Commerce and Labor. I concur in this recommendation and urge that the necessary legislation for carrying it into effect be enacted.

Both of these services are organized and maintained for the same general purpose—the protection of life and property endangered along the coasts and other navigable waters. Both maintain stations along the coast, which are located for the most part in close proximity. Both have substantially the same business problems to meet in locating, constructing, and maintaining these stations; in recruiting the personnel; in manufacturing or purchasing equipment; in purchasing, housing in depots, and distributing supplies; in operating a field-inspection service; in maintaining telephonic and other means of communication; in disbursing funds; in keeping proper books of accounts; and in rendering reports showing financial and other transactions. The maintenance of two separate services, as at present, means a duplication of organization in respect to all of these operations. The recommendation of the commission does not contemplate any essential change in the work of the lifesaving stations; it is for the transfer of the business management of these institutions to the Bureau of Lighthouses. That bureau, being fully organized for the administration of stations of this character, will be able to direct and manage these stations with comparatively little addition to its present force and equipment. The commission estimates that, in addition to the advantage that will be obtained through having these two services operated by the same organization, a direct economy will be secured of at least $100,000 annually, and that the saving will greatly exceed this sum after the first year.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The report of the commission on the Revenue-Cutter Service (Appendix No. 3) represents a detailed investigation of the history, organization, and activities of this branch of the Government service and its relations to other services. The conclusion is reached that all of the duties now being performed by this service can be performed with equal efficiency by other services and that a great economy will result by having these duties so performed. The commission accordingly recommends that the service be abolished as a distinct organization; that its equipment be distributed among other services requiring the use of marine craft; and that provision be made for the performance of the work now being done by it by such other services.

With these fundamental recommendations of the commission I am in full accord, and I recommend that the necessary legislation be enacted to put them into effect.

At the present time the Revenue-Cutter Service is organized as a Naval Establishment. The country is, in effect, maintaining two navies, and is using one of these navies for the performance of duties of a civil character. The maintenance of two separate naval establishments entails unnecessary expense and is not in the interest of either efficiency or economy. In so far as the duties of the Revenue-Cutter Service are of a naval character, or are such as can readily be performed by the regular Naval Establishment, they should be performed by such establishment; in so far as they are of a purely civil character, use should be made of services organized and conducted upon a civil basis.

In respect to the distribution of the equipment and duties of the Revenue-Cutter Service among other branches of the Government, the recommendation of the commission looks to the transfer to the Navy Department of the vessels which are adapted to deep-sea cruising and the discharge by the Naval Establishment of most of the duties now performed by the Revenue-Cutter Service upon the high seas. In memoranda submitted on the report of the commission, copies of which are submitted with such report, on the one hand the Secretary of the Navy raises the question as to whether these duties can be performed by the regular Naval Establishment without detracting from its military efficiency, while on the other hand the Secretary of Commerce and Labor raises the question whether certain of these duties can not be performed by the Lighthouse Service if that service is provided with vessels suitable for the purpose.

In view of these suggestions, I recommend that, in the enactment of legislation providing for the abolition of the Revenue-Cutter Service, provision be made for the transfer of all the vessels and equipment of the Revenue-Cutter Service from the Treasury Department to the Department of Commerce and Labor; that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be directed to assign such vessels and equipment to the Lighthouse Establishment, Bureau of Fisheries, and other services under his jurisdiction requiring the use of vessels, as, in his judgment, is for the best interest of the public service, and that authority be given to him to turn over to the Navy such vessels as he may find, upon investigation, not to be required by his department and which by their character are fitted to serve as useful auxiliaries to the Naval Establishment.

In thus recommending that the Revenue-Cutter Service as a separate establishment be abolished, I desire to make plain that such action does not carry with it the discontinuance of the rendering of any valuable and proper service now being rendered by that organization. On the contrary, I am persuaded that all such services will continue to be performed under the system recommended by me with equal or greater efficiency.

It should be noted that the adoption of the recommendation here made will result in bringing under one general administration all of the work of the Government having to do with the protection of life and property at sea. This will result not only in greatly increased efficiency, but in a large saving. The Lighthouse Establishment is compelled by the nature of the work to maintain and operate a large fleet of vessels and supplementary administrative divisions, depots, inspection services, etc., to attend to matters pertaining to their business management. It is thus fully prepared to take over and operate the additional vessels that may be assigned to it and to perform the additional duties with which it may be intrusted at an added expense that will be small in comparison with that now entailed in maintaining an independent service on a military basis.

A further benefit of no little importance that will also be secured will be that of relieving the Department of the Treasury of duties which are in no ways germane to the primary function of that department.

THE CONSOLIDATION OF AUDITING OFFICES.

The report upon the organization and methods of work of the accounting offices of the Treasury (Appendix No. 4) recommends that the offices of the six auditors be consolidated under one auditor, and that the auditors of customs accounts located at the principal ports, and known as naval officers, be made assistants to the auditors. An increase in the efficiency of the Treasury audit will be one result of the carrying out of these recommendations, and the saving of expense when the consolidation has been fully completed will amount to at least $200,000 a year, based upon current appropriations. The present organization, under which six independent auditors are engaged in the one work of final audit of the Government accounts, is certainly one that can produce only diversity of practice and procedure, inefficient use of personnel and equipment, and delay and uncertainty of requirements from which the public as well as officers of the Government must suffer.

In my opinion a change in law to carry into effect these recommendations of the commission, which have my approval, will be in the interest of the public service.

THE RETURNS OFFICE.

The report upon the "Returns Office" of the Department of the Interior (Appendix No. 5) recommends the abolition of that office and that provision for public inspection of Government contracts be made through the office of the auditors of the Treasury, in which offices the originals of all contracts are filed. It also recommends the substitution of a certificate for the affidavit required to be attached to the contracts of the Departments of War, the Navy, and the Interior, and an amendment of the statute which now requires all the contracts of those departments to be in writing. I transmit letters from the Secretaries of the departments referred to, concurring in the conclusions and recommendations of the commission. I approve the report and commend it to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

GOVERNMENT EXPENSES FOR TRAVEL.

The report upon "Travel expenditures" of officers and employees of the Government (Appendix No. 6) presents a view of existing conditions that can lead to but one conclusionunder the existing laws, and regulations and practices pursuant thereto, the allowances for travel are as varied as there are ex-ecutive departments. The same classes of officers and em-ployees are receiving different rates of allowances, depending only upon the department or bureau in which they are em-Under similar conditions there should be uniformity. The report recommends that all allowances in the form of mileage be discontinued and that actual cost of transportation be paid; that in lieu of payment of actual cost of other expenses, commonly known as subsistence, which would include lodging, a scale of per diem allowances be established by the President for the several classes of officers and employees. It is also recommended by the commission that all accounts for reimbursement of traveling expenses shall be certified as to correctness in lieu of the requirement of law in many cases that the verification be by affidavit. The latter procedure is troublesome and expensive, and the penalty for a false certification is fully as valuable in its deterrent effect as the penalty for making a false affidavit.

With the report are the comments of the War and the Navy Departments, made at my request. The report of the commission has my approval, and the suggestions therein for a change in the law on the subject are submitted with a request for action in accordance therewith.

HANDLING AND FILING OF CORRESPONDENCE.

The handling and filing of correspondence constitutes one of the business processes of the Government to which, as pointed out in my message of January 17, the commission has paid especial attention. The investigations of existing conditions have brought out clearly that, in many cases, present methods are inefficient and entail large, unnecessary costs. The features of present practices which stand out most prominently as entailing large, unnecessary labor and expense pertain to the briefing, press-copying, and recording and indexing of communications. A statement has been prepared giving the results of an investigation of the salary cost entailed in performing these operations in the several departments at Washington. It is the opinion of the commission that the operations of briefing and press-copying letters can be entirely eliminated, and that the recording and indexing of incoming and outgoing letters can be reduced at least 50 per cent.

Though the commission is making independent investigations of methods followed in handling and filing correspondence in certain bureaus and services, the results of which will be embodied in reports describing such methods, pointing out wherein they are defective, and recommending changes to make them conform to the most approved practices, the general policy pursued is that of working in close cooperation with the departments and services through the means of joint committees. To the end that these committees might all work as nearly as possible along uniform lines, and that the departments and establishments might have before them the conclusions reached by the commission relative to fundamental principles and the best practices in respect to the performance of this class of work, the commission has prepared, and I have sent to the heads of departments a memorandum setting forth the principles which should govern in the matter of handling and filing of correspondence. This memorandum also contains suggestions for the use of labor-saving devices in preparing and mailing letters. I am transmitting herewith a copy of this memorandum. (Appendix No. 7.)

On the basis of this memorandum active efforts are now being made in all of the departments for the improvement of the methods of handling and filing of correspondence. These efforts methods of handling and filing of correspondence. These efforts have resulted in radical changes in existing methods and the effecting of large economies. The flat-filing system has been substituted for the old cumbrous folded and indorsement system. Carbon copies of letters have been substituted for press copies. The briefing of documents has been entirely discontinued in a number of services, and in others the maintenance of book records of incoming and outgoing communications has been discontinued. The effort is being made to make correspondence fleg solf-indoxing, and thus avoid the pressent for been discontinued. The effort is being made to make cor-respondence files self-indexing, and thus avoid the necessity for making and using secondary finding devices. This work can only be intelligently prosecuted as the result of painstaking and detail investigation of the special conditions to be met in each particular service. Many months will, therefore, be re-quired to carry out this work throughout the entire Government. It is of the utmost importance that the work should be prosecuted under a general supervision or direction such as is furnished by the present commission.

DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS.

Attention is called to the report of the commission, transmitted to the Congress with my message of February 5, and to the supplementary statement sent herewith (Appendix No. 8) on the centralization of distribution of Government publications. By adopting this recommendation it is conservatively estimated that $242,000 can be saved. This is exclusive of the estimated that $22,200 can be saved. This is exclusive of the saving which could be made by handling the congressional documents in the same manner. An account kept for 31 days with the volume of this business of handling congressional documents showed an average of 21 tons per day. These documents were first taken from the Printing Office to the Capitol, then from the Capitol to the post office, then hauled back to the Union Station, the latter being but a short distance from the Printing Office. An up-to-date plant at the Printing Office which could handle all this would entail an increased capital outlay for permanent equipment of only about $75,000. The recommendation for centralizing the distribution of documents from the departments, if acted on, will affect the appropriations of seven departments, five independent establishments, and the Washington post office.

I may say in connection with this report and recommendation that the House of Representatives, in passing the agricultural appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1913, instead of reducing the cost of distributing Government publications in the Department of Agriculture by $137,000, has increased to the extent of $13,260 the amount appropriated for salaries for the Division of Publications over the appropriation for the current year.

OUTLINES OF ORGANIZATION.

The outlines of organization of the Government, which were transmitted with the message of January 17, have been sent to each of the departments, with a request that orders issue which will require that the outline be kept up to date. (Appendix No. 9.) This will not only make available at all times the information needed by Congress or the administration when called for, and assist materially in the preparation of estimates of appropriations, but will make unnecessary the publication of the Official Register, thereby saving approximately $45,000 for each

CONCLUSION.

In submitting these reports, with recommendations, I will state that in my opinion each of the foregoing recommendations, if acted on, will contribute largely to increase efficiency. Directly and indirectly the changes proposed will result in the saving of many millions of dollars of public funds. This will | leave the Congress free to determine whether the amount thus saved shall be utilized to reduce taxation or to provide funds with which to extend activities already carried on and to enter on beneficial projects which otherwise could not be undertaken for lack of funds.

Again I urge upon the Congress the desirability of providing whatever funds can be used effectively to carry forward with all possible vigor the work now well begun. The $200,000 required for the prosecution of the inquiry during the ensuing year, and the $50,000 estimated for the publication of results, are inconsiderable in comparison with the economies which can be realized.

The next business on the calendar was the resolution (S. Res.

176) requesting the President to make certain inquiries of the Governments of Great Britain and France, touching the arbitra-

Governments of Great Britain and France, touching the arbitration of justiciable controversies or disputes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that that resolution may be indefinitely postponed, as the treaties therein referred to have been disposed of. I believe that is agreeable to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who offered the resolution.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the resolution was directed toward the then proposed treaties with Great Britain and France. Those treaties have already been disposed of, and the resolution may be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be taken from the calendar and action thereon will be indefinitely postponed.

The bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States was announced

Mr. SMOOT. Would the Senator from Idaho object to the consideration of the bill, to the extent at least to enable a brief statement to be made as to what the bill provides for and what the purpose of it is?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I thought the Senator from Utah was going to ask that the printing bill be taken up to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. At 4 o'clock.
Mr. HEYBURN. Well, this bill can not be considered between now and 4 o'clock.
Mr. SMOOT. Then, I shall not ask for its present considered by the constant of the con sideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. It covers a wide scope of consideration.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.
The bill (S. 256) affecting the sale and disposal of public or Indian lands in town sites, and for other purposes, was annonnced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 4762) to amend an act approved February 6, 1905, entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' and to amend an act approved March 8, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' and to amend an act approved March 2, 1903, entitled 'An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands,' and to provide for the more efficient administration of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on behalf of another Senator, I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

ALICE V. HOUGHTON.

The bill (S. 5137) for the relief of Alice V. Houghton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Alice V. Houghton $3,500 for injuries received while employed in the Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C., January 31, 1911.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I call for the reading of the report in that case. It is brief, and I think the Senate ought to act upon the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before that is done, I will ask the Senator from South Dakota if he recalls what Senator heretofore asked that that matter should be postponed until the other House had acted upon it?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It was the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] who made that request in my absence the other day. After the report is read I think the Senate will, perhaps, be willing to pass the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no disposition to antagonize the bill, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will state that the reason I asked that the bill go over was that I was informed that Alice V. Houghton was not satisfied with the amount that was reported by the Senate committee; that there was a bill introduced in the other House carrying a larger amount, and that she wanted that considered before the Senate bill was considered; but as the chairman of the committee desires that the Senate bill be acted upon because it is the sense of the Claims Committee of the Senate, I have no objection whatever.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I call for the reading of the report of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the report as requested.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota withdraw his request for the reading of the report?

Mr. CRAWFORD. At the suggestion of some Senators, withdraw the request for the reading of the report, and I will say that I am willing to accept the proposed amendment of the Senator from Kansas

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," it is proposed to strike out "three thousand five" and insert "four thousand two," and at the end of the bill it is proposed to strike out the period, insert a comma, and add "said amount to be paid in monthly installments of $50 each, and not otherwise, for the period of seven years: Provided, That no sum of money due or to become due to the said Alice V. Houghton under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of the said Alice V. Houghton," so as to make the bill read:

as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alice V. Houghton the sum of $4,200, for injuries received while employed in the Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C., January 31, 1911, said amount to be paid in monthly installments of $50 each, and not otherwise, for the period of seven years: Provided, That no sum of money due or to become due to the said Alice V. Houghton under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of the said Alice V. Houghton.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if the Committee on Claims has passed upon the amendment he now offers?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not as a committee; no.
Mr. BRISTOW. The committee did not. I simply took the gross amount and added whatever interest would have accumulated on the deferred payments, so that the total amount would be the same as if it were paid in a lump sum at this time plus whatever interest would accrue during this period. I do that for the purpose of protecting this girl, who was mutilated by this accident, from physicians and others who might seek to get exorbitant fees, and that she may herself be the beneficiary of the appropriation from the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say that I have informa-tion indirectly from the lady that she feels under obligations to pay at least a reasonable fee to her physicians; so much so that she feels she wants to discharge that indebtedness just as quickly as possible. I am also informed that if the appropriation is not sufficient to pay the expenses attached to her illness and give her a reasonable amount to live on hereafter until she can get further employment the employees of the Census Bureau are going to take up a subscription for her and give her an amount greater than the sum named in the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah will remember that the Congress last year appropriated about $1,800, all told, for this beneficiary.

Mr. SMOOT. Nineteen hundred dollars. Mr. BRISTOW. Nineteen hundred dollars; and I am advised that she did not receive a cent of it herself, but that it all went to the physicians and hospital attendants who had waited upon her. I want the girl who was scalped to get this money; not a lot of people who rendered service which at the time appeared to be very philanthropic, whereas in fact now some of them have brought in bills for $10 a visit and $100 for each operation that was attempted to be performed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am partly in sympathy with the statement of the Senator. I know that such bills have been presented, but I am informed that the physicians who waited upon this lady during the time of her illness, and who are waiting upon her even now, have rendered no bills of an exorbitant nature. She would like to have at least enough money to pay those physicians. I know that is her wish in the matter. I myself would like to see that she gets the money. But if this amendment-

Mr. CRAWFORD and Mr. HEYBURN addressed the Chair. The VICE PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas should be adopted, all she would ever receive would be $50 a month. Of course, she could turn that over to the physicians, and perhaps that would answer, although I know it is not satisfactory to the lady.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to know the amount of the physicians' bills. I do not understand that the physicians were scalped; I understand it was the claimant. I should like to know how much the claimant is to get. Some one should like to know how much the claimant is to get. Some one must know definitely.

Mr. SMOOT. Judging from the bills that have been filed, I do not think the lady will get very much of this money. . Mr. HEYBURN. Where are the bills? We should have the

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; the bills have been submitted to her. She has to pay the bills. The Government does not have to pay the bills, nor are we appropriating money for that purpose.

We are appropriating money for her.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, we are proposing to appropriate money to her use on behalf of a claim, and we want to know what the claim is.

Mr. SMOOT. The claim is that she was wounded while in the employment of the Government, in the Census Bureau. It is for that reason, and that alone, that the appropriation is sought to be made.

Mr. CRAWFORD and Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator yield? Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it may be in order for the Senate to have a brief statement about this situation from one of the members of the committee who was present at the time of the hearing, heard the testimony, and made an examination of the

This young lady was getting $840 a year. A little over a year ago, while at work with a tabulating machine, she stooped over to pick up some cards from the floor and one of the revolving shafts that ran along the wall caught her hair, and, her hair wrapping about this shaft, her entire scalp was literally torn from her head. The shock was so great for some time it was a question whether she would live. She was taken to a hospital, and in the attempt to make a grafting of skin and grow a new scalp a great deal of expense was necessarily in-curred at the hospital. With the small amount of flesh and blood vessels there it was extremely difficult to succeed in even making a start toward grafting the skin. The wound had to be kept fresh and dressed over and over again every day. Nurses and physicians had to be in constant attendance, and the wound was a most frightful one.

The Superintendent of the Census came before the Committee on Claims soon after the accident occurred and presented the facts, the unusual character of the expense, and the intense suffering occasioned, apparently by the neglect of the Government. At that time the first appropriation was provided for, and, as has been said, it was entirely used up in paying expenses which had been incurred. The young lady did not get

A few months ago the Superintendent of the Census again came before the committee and stated the present condition of the case, which is a very remarkable one. After trying all summer long, during the hot season, it was found impossible to make any progress whatever toward grafting skin and growing a new scalp. The expenses were large during all that time. When the weather got cooler, along in November last, the experiment proved successful. Since that time, while it requires constant care and is a slow operation, the skin is working its way up, and in the course of two or three months more the young lady will have a new scalp. But the adornment is entirely gone, and she has had a very terrible experience.

Here is the situation: Physicians and others interested in getting big fees for services in this matter are at work. They have been busy over in the House, where a bill was offered, I think, appropriating $25,000; and there is a whole clique of them carrying on a campaign here and getting the young lady's family interested in it, and trying to interview Senators and Representatives with the idea of taking care of some very large physicians' bills, and large expenses, and all that sort of thing.

It seems to me the duty of the Senate is very simple and plain, and that is to make reasonable provision for this young lady. Her indebtedness to her physicians and nurses and hospitals is a matter of her own affair, to be settled with them. We do not want a campaign carried on here with the object of providing a very large appropriation for the purpose of benefiting physicians and their friends, or the family and their friends. But it is the business of the Senate to do simply what is fair and just under the circumstances toward this young lady.

We reported this bill unanimously. The suggestion to hold it up was well meant; but it will simply afford an opportunity during the delay to carry on a campaign in the other branch of Congress for a larger appropriation and an unreasonable one.

I think the sooner we dispose of this matter by giving the relief the bill provides for, which is fair and reasonable, and fix it so that she will get the benefit of it, the better it will be for her.

If the money is appropriated in a lump sum you run the risk of avaricious people pressing their claims and sweeping it all away, and then, perhaps, in a few months coming back here and asking for something more on her account. It was because of that fact that I, as a member of the committee, felt like accepting the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, which provides for the payment of this appropriation to her in monthly installments extending over a number of years.

I will say to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn] that a bill was presented from one of the physicians of between two and three thousand dollars. There is a bill from another physician that is not yet presented, but about which I have heard, for a similar amount. These are very large bills to be rendered to a young girl getting $840 a year, whose father is an old man and whose people are in most moderate circumstances.

In view of that situation I am disposed to accept this amendment-provided there is no serious doubt as to the power of the Senate to grant it—calling for the payment of the allowance in installments. I think it ought to be safeguarded in such a way that she will get the benefit of it, and so that it may not be all swept up at once to pay the bills of people who make them high because they think the Government is going to pay them.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Has the hospital bill of twenty-eight hundred and some dollars been paid?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The hospital expenses were paid out of the allowance we made in March, 1911. There are some hospital

Mr. HEYBURN. That bill of some $2,800, according to my recollection, or something like that, was for about nine months' hospital service.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Probably nine months. I am not sure about the length of time.

Mr. HEYBURN. For a young woman who was receiving seven or eight hundred dollars a year? Evidently somebody was rather careless.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We paid $1,900 at that time; but I will say to the Senator that under the circumstances it was necessary for her to be at the hospital, and it was necessary for the hospital people to make rather unusual provision for her care on account of the very great difficulty in doing what they were undertaking to do, grafting skin upon almost the skull bone, and the constant attendance required from nurses and the repeated visits necessary from physicians.

Mr. HEYBURN. What would the poor girl have done had there been no Government of the United States to which to present a claim?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, this claim came before the Committee on Claims, of which I have the honor to be a member. The story of the accident, as told before the committee, was most shocking. The proposition before the committee was to make an appropriation of $3,500. I felt at the time that it was utterly and totally inadequate. a higher sum. However, I was voted down on that proposition; and the bill as it went out from the committee recom-mended the payment of $3,500. I feel that that sum is utterly inadequate. This was one of the most horrible things that one can well imagine. This young woman, comely in appearance, but 28 years old, was working for the Government, sitting in front of a tabulating machine. In the course of her duty she dropped some cards on the floor, and in her effort to reach them she leaned down, and a whirling shaft, run by electricity in front of the desk and horizontal to her, caught her locks at the nape of the neck and curled them up until it carried away all over the scalp, and the forehead, and even carried away the eyebrows.

The result was that she was taken to a hospital, and there lingered for months, with scarcely a hope of recovery. Finally the skin began to grow. The grafting of the skin on the scalp was accomplished with great difficulty, as has been said by the Senator, for the fact of being so near the bone made it almost impossible. However, it has now started to grow. The young lady has suffered tortures and torment almost beyond parallel, and at the same time has sustained a nervous shock that may endure for her life.

Inasmuch as this young woman was in the discharge of her duty, working at a machine supplied by the great Government of the United States, with a whirling shaft with projecting spindles in front of it, unguarded and unprotected, making it perfectly natural and likely that her hair or skirt might be gathered up in it, I feel that it becomes the duty of the United States Government to be more than simply just and decent: States Government to be more than simply just and decent; it becomes its duty to be liberal in this matter.

As has been said, this young woman's scalp may grow; but the crowning glory of a woman, her locks, will never be restored. Who would sacrifice his scalp and his hair for the pittance that is offered-$4,000?

I know there is pending in the House of Representatives a bill proposing to pay this young woman $25,000. I believe that is extortionate, and perhaps it never will be agreed to. But, Mr. President, to half satisfy the demands of justice, to half satisfy the demands of this great Government to this young woman, I move to strike out, in line 6 of the bill, the words "three thousand five hundred" and substitute therefor the words "seven thousand five hundred." [Manifestations of applause in the calleries.] red." [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]
The VICE PRESIDENT. Demonstrations in the galleries are not permitted. An amendment is already pending.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I move this, then, as an amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will note where the amendment would properly come in. The Chair is informed that an amendment is pending-the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow]. Does the Senator offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I offer it, then, as an amendment to the amendment. In line 6, I move to strike out the words "three thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "seven thousand five hundred."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I make the point of order that, instead of being an amendment to the amendment, it is an amendment to the original bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that, as stated by the Senator from New Jersey, an amendment to the amendment is in order in the right place. If the Senator from New Jersey will send the amendment to the Secretary, the Secretary will note the proper place for its insertion.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the same result can be reached by proposing to amend by inserting the sum of $75 a month where the amendment of the Senator from Kansas proposes $50 a month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey can be proposed as an amendment to the amendment rather than to the text of the bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I call the Chair's attention to another rule that I think will permit the Senator's amendment to be offered at this time. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow] is practically to strike out that provision of the bill and to insert an entirely different one. The friends of the provision have a right to perfect it before a motion goes to its life, which would be the case if the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas should be adopted. It seems to me the Senator's amendment is in order to the original bill before a vote is taken upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the easiest matter in the world to get at what is desired. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow] moves, on line 6, to strike out the words "three thousand five," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "four thousand two," so as to read "four thousand two hundred dollars." The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Martine] now moves to strike out the words "four thousand two"—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], it seems to the Chair, properly disposes of the matter. The Senator from Arkansas raises the point that the motion of the Senator from Kansas is a motion to strike out and insert, and that under those circumstances it is proper for the Senate to first perfect the matter which is to be stricken out. On that point the Chair rules with the Senator from Arkansas. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey as an amendment to the original proposition.

The Secretary. On page 1, line 6, before the word "dollars," strike out the words "three thousand five hundred" and in lieu of those words insert "seven thousand five hundred."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have only a word to say in reference to the matter that is under consideration. Whether or not the Government was to blame in this case-and I doubt very much whether the Government was to blame-I think that some reasonable compensation should be given to this young

What I particularly desired to say was that I think it is unfortunate that charges should be made that there is a raid being inaugurated on the Treasury in this case for the purpose of paying hospitals and physicians. It may be that some physicians have rendered extravagant bills, but before I will agree to that I should like to know what those bills are and under what circumstances they were presented. Physicians do a great deal of charitable work, hospitals do a great deal of charitable work, and it may be that this is a case where physicians ought not to be compensated at all, but to make a broad

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator permit the Chair to interrupt him?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 4239) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside, but the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is here.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. What became of the bill that was before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? Mr. HEYBURN. I suppose it is to be taken up after this case is disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I will call the bill up afterwards.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had about concluded what I have to say. It was simply to make the suggestion that I think it was somewhat unfortunate that a broad charge should have been made against some hospital or hospitals and against certain physicians so far as their services were concerned. I apprehend that this was a case requiring a great deal of skill and very likely the expenditure of a large amount of money.

I am content to vote an adequate appropriation for this young woman. I do not want it to go entirely from her possession into the possession of either hospitals or physicians. pathy with that proposition; and I only wanted to enter my protest against an accusation against the profession that I once belonged to and against hospitals for which I have a profound respect, believing that neither physicians nor hospitals as a rule would exact any unusual or improper amount from a patient such as this young lady has been and is. That is all.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire has in mind a remark which I made, I wish to say that I had not the slightest intention to make unfair reflections upon either hospitals or physicians. I have no reason to believe that the charges by the hospital people are not reasonable. I did think, however, that a bill for over $2,000 for medical services presented to a girl getting only $840 a year looked upon its face to be very large, and coupled with it there is apparently a great deal of activity in the direction of getting an excessive appropriation in this matter. My remarks were not intended to cast a reflection upon anyone and only to call attention to that situation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I am very much in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas. I had occasion during the last few months to give rather careful consideration of the subject of lump-sum payments as contrasted with periodical payments, and I think the experience in dealing with this subject for the past 25 years has shown that a periodical payment is far preferable to a lump-sum payment, because when a lump sum is paid to the ordinary person sustaining an injury of this character it is usually dissipated in some way in a short time. Enough appears already to show. that if $3,500 was appropriated to this young lady in all probability it would be dissipated in a very brief period. By making an appropriation of $50 a month we make it quite certain that she is going to have the benefit of it for a period of seven years. If we make a lump-sum payment, we are not at all certain that

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President—
Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.
Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am quite impressed with that thought. I would suggest, however, that it be made $75 a month for seven years and then a lump sum of $1,000 that she may use for purposes of her own.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This case is a pathetic one. It appeals to me quite as much as it does to the Senator from New Jersey. But it shows the unwisdom of attempting to deal with cases of this character separately, because our sympathy, where the special case is presented, is bound to run away with our wisdom. expect within a short time-within the next year or twothat we will adopt for the Government of the United States an adequate compensation law by which we will provide for definite compensation to be paid periodically to employees of the Government whenever they sustain personal injuries in the employ of the Government.

think, upon reflection, the Senator from New Jersey will see that it would be going entirely beyond what we ought to do to provide for the payment of $7,500 in every case of an injury of this character.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But I will modify my proposition, and I suggest this in harmony with your thought: Seventy-five dollars a month for seven years, and then a lump sum of $1,000, with which she may do as she pleases, to satisfy all demands upon her purse.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. Mr. President, I think the proposition of the Senator from Kansas is a fair one. It is a proposition that we would be willing to apply to any employee. It is a proposition that we would be willing to put into a general law governing all employees.

Of course when a particular case is presented us with all its distressing and appealing circumstances we are apt to think we ought to make an appropriation of a large sum; but the case ought to be dealt with as though we were passing a general law to govern all cases. When we come to deal with this subject hereafter I undertake to say that it will be somewhat awkward to have a precedent of this kind before us, because obviously, as it seems to me, we could not afford to pass a general law providing for payments upon that scale to all employees who were injured.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I think that may be true; but I feel that this is an extraordinary case. It is not an ordinary case, and I believe that in the lines of justice, satisfying our own conscience and satisfying the public sympathy, we would be readily justified in giving the sum I propose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, as suggested by the Senator from Kansas, that is in excess of any compensation allowed under the compensation laws of any country in the world so far as I know, and I think we are going far enough when we adopt his suggestion.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say, in view of the remarks made by the Senator from New Jersey, that the Government was not to blame for this lady's misfortune. The shaft referred to was protected, and the truth is that the accident was due to carelessness on her part, but carelessness which was not specially negligence. Take the desks here that have an extension out beyond the edge of the step and suppose that within a few inches of the lower shelf a shaft runs clear out next to the outside of that extension and the lady was at work here [indicating] and some cards fell off the desk and went in under the board that protected the shaft. The girl got off her seat and got in under her desk and the electrical effect of the whirling shaft drew the hair in under and it was wrapped around and tore off her scalp. She did not think it was dangerous to put her head so close to that shaft in under the board, There was ample protection, but she did that thing unthought-edly, of course. She was doing her duty and following those cards, and the accident happened.

I would not charge that against her so as to lessen the damages any whatever, but there was no gross carelessness on the part of the Government, because no one who examined it would have thought that the shaft was so exposed that it would endanger anybody who was working in the room.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me there?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator does not intentionally wish to make this case harder for this young lady than the facts would justify, but I do not think that is quite a fair statement. The shaft ran at right angles with the machine and along next to the wall at the floor. They undertook to protect it not with a board but with some rods, with little spaces between them that extended along horizontally just above the revolving shaft. Those protecting rods did not protect. She had been working there for a long time and never having any experience of that kind before I do not think the question of contributory negligence would be a fair conclusion. In stooping to pick up the cards her head came near the floor and her hair was caught between the rods and wrapped around the shaft.

I have not felt on examining the facts that there was any ground for charging her with contributory negligence, and the question of negligence on the part of the Government may be closed, yet they did not effectively protect the people from that revolving shaft, because they simply had some rods with spaces between them above the shaft.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say that my understanding was from the statement of the Director of the Census that it was a board. They may have been rods, but I understood him to say it was a board, and he thought it was amply protected.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do. Mr. GRONNA. I simply want to ask the Senator if the shaft

Mr. BRISTOW. It was inclosed. There is a misunderstanding between the chairman and myself as to what the testimony was. I understood it to be inclosed or covered with a board. The chairman says it was a rod and not a board. I may be mistaken, but that is my understanding.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I had a personal interview with the Director of the Census about the matter, and I went into the details with reference to how it was protected, and I state that it was done by what they called protecting rods.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator's memory would be better than mine, since he has given personal inspection, and of course I stand corrected, and very gladly. I did not wish to convey the idea that I would oppose giving this young lady proper compensation for the damage, but I did not want the impression to get out that the Government had been grossly negligent, because I do not think it has been. I think that rod may have remained there for a hundred years and no one else would have ever been injured by it. It was the action caused by this young lady's hair being loose and the electrical conditions of the atmosphere at that time; her head being brought in contact with the rod, there was an electric attraction and the accident occurred.

The Committee on Claims has a very large number of cases similar to this. Hundreds of them come before the committee, as the chairman has stated.

Mr. ROOT. Similar to this?

Mr. BRISTOW. Not similar, but for personal damages where death occurs and limbs are broken with the kind of accidents that happen. They do not happen in Washington, and there is for her. But I do not understand that she is on the pay roll now.

not that personal interest worked up by local advertising and agitation that there is in this case. I feel that we ought to treat this young lady generously, but not excessively—not any different from what we would treat anybody else, whether the accident occurred in Seattle, or Portland, Me., or Washington, or Panama, as far as that is concerned.

It seems to me that the amendment to the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Jersey would make a very bad precedent to follow. The Government has already paid this young lady $1,900. Unfortunately the claimants absorbed it. I think $1,900 was abundant to pay all the medical attention that a girl working for $840 a year ought to have for an accident of this kind. Now we are undertaking to make a provision for her. She will soon be able to earn another living and will be able to earn it just as well after she recovers as she was before the accident happened.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is a question. nerve shock has been argued as a matter of great consequence.

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course there was a nerve shock, and nerve shocks occur when a leg is torn off or an arm is torn off. Such things happen in Government service frequently. Every month we appropriate money to pay for damages incurred through personal accidents. I do not think we ought to pay this young lady more than we pay other people who have suffered from accidents equally as severe. The difference between this accident and others is that she is recovering and she will be able to go out and earn a living. She has the use of her hands, the use of her eyes, the use of her ears, and she can go about and support herself.

Mr. GALLINGER. And she will be given a place in the Government service now.

Mr. BRISTOW. Doubtless she will be able to do good service, and a place ought to be given her.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose, if the Senator will permit me, to Mr. GALLINGER. I rose, if the Senator will permit me, to ask the Senator, as likely the Senator has absolute information on the point, whether or not it is true that the $1,900 were paid to the hospital and to physicians. It is easy to say that; but does the Senator know that such is the fact?

Mr. BRISTOW. The Director of the Census said that it was, and some representative of the young lady, who called at my office, said it was all paid out for expenses.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am glad to know the Senator has the information, because outside statements, of course, are often made without authority.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. If the Senator will permit me one moment, the report of the Committee on Claims, submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Crawford] will give some light on the question of expenses. It goes on to say:

some light on the question of expenses. It goes on to say:

Her father is an old man in very moderate circumstances, wholly unable to pay the bills necessarily incurred by her at the hospital and for physicians and nurses.

Her actual hospital expenses and expense for nurses, which have been carefully examined by the director, he says have been necessary and are reasonable. Nevertheless, these expenses are $2,800, and she is unable to pay for the services of the physicians who have attended her.
She received the injury while on duty as an employee of the Government and without negligence on her part. She was receiving a salary of $840 per year. In view of the unusually large but necessary expenses incurred by her at the hospital and for necessary medical attendance, it is the judgment of the committee that the amount named in the bill is reasonable.

Now, I do not feel That gives the amount of her expenses. that we need worry our souls about establishing a precedent. We are not going to have a woman with her scalp torn off every day in the week, or every month in the year, or one year in a hundred hardly. It will teach, at least, the managers of great plants to so guard the spindles and shafts that such an accident will be impossible.

Sir, you can not go to a great machine shop or plant in the land where there is a whirling gear or a belt that the public are passing by, not employees but the public, that is not guarded by a shield. I noticed but last Saturday in the navy yard here that wherever there is a condition of beveled gearing or a whirling pulley the public are passing by it is sheltered over by a shield either of metal or a framework.

I would be quite willing to accept $75 a month for seven years with a cash bonus of a thousand dollars. I think that will relieve the situation, and the Senator and myself will go home and sleep better and our consciences will be clearer in consequence of it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota whether this young woman has been receiving any pay from the Government since the accident?

Mr. CRAWFORD. As I understand it, a part of the $1,900 was given to her, as an equivalent of a year's salary for which she rendered no service, but it is included in the appropriation of $1,900 we are talking about, which has already been made

Mr. WORKS. It seems to me, in considering this matter, we should consider the rights of the young woman entirely apart from the amount to be paid to the physicians. If the physicians have performed their services and the Government is justly liable to pay on account of the accident, then, it seems to me, that the physicians are entitled to be considered in any amount that will be provided by the bill. If they have received their full compensation, of course that should be the end of it; but if, on the other hand, they are justly entitled to more money than they have received-and I think we should determine whether they are or not-I believe that amount should be provided for the doctors themselves independent of any amount due to the young woman herself.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WORKS. Yes, sir.
Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will permit me, I think it is very doubtful if we are in a position to take up the matter of the physicians' bills in a bill that is intended simply to give relief to this young woman. These physicians' bills are going on now to a greater or less extent; they will continue for a couple of months yet I understand; and I think that matter should stand upon its own basis, if there is any ground for undertaking to give relief to the physicians for attending this Her right to the appropriation ought not to be involved by bringing into it a question that we desire really to keep out of it in order to give her the benefit of the appropriation which we are making.

Mr. WORKS. I think it is quite important to determine in that view of it whether the Government is justly liable to pay anything on account of this accident. That seems to be a disputed question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If we concede that it is a disputed question, it is hardly a question that should bar her under the facts from relief. It may be a disputed question in connection with the question whether we should consider the physicians.

Mr. WORKS. I assume, Mr. President, that this young lady, if she is honest, would desire to pay her physicians and not allow them to go unpaid.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is quite true, but I think

WORKS. I think if the Government is liable at all it would be to enable her to carry out her own obligation by paying what is justly due.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the Senator will agree with me that the amount of the physicians' bills might be quite different, if they considered that the Government was going to pay them, than bills for those same services would be if they were looking to this young lady alone for payment.

Mr. WORKS. That is undoubtedly true, but-

Mr. CRAWFORD. We wish to keep that question out of the consideration of this bill.

Mr. WORKS. I presume the Committee on Claims would be able to determine what is justly due to the doctors. We are certainly not bound to pay what they may claim even against the Government. It does seem to me we ought to make some disposition of this matter in a way that would settle all these difficulties if it is possible to do so. I see no reason why it may not be done. It is quite possible that by the skill of the physicians who were employed in this matter the Government has been saved a good deal of money which it might otherwise have been its duty to pay. This woman may, by care and at-tention given by the physicians, be able to go back to her work and earn her own living, while she might not have been able to do it but for those services. It seems to me there is some sense of obligation on the part of the Senate toward the physicians if they have accomplished that result, and it does not appear to me to be quite the right thing to leave the physicians entirely out of consideration, and say, "We will settle that question with them after we have determined what we will do for the young lady herself."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to suggest to the Senator from California that if he undertakes to adjust the compensation which physicians and hospital attendants should have as payment from the Government for every one who is injured in the Government service he will find that it is a very difficult and perplexing thing. I think the policy of the Government in permitting individuals who are injured to settle the hills for the mitting individuals who are injured to settle the bills for the hospital expenses and the bills of their own physicians the same as if they had any other employment, and let the Government treat the question of damage which the employee himself received, and not undertake to step in between the employee and his physician, whoever the employee may be, anywhere, and adjust the conditions between them is certainly the wisest course. That is the course which the Government is pursuing in similar cases, and it seems to me that it is the wisest course.

Mr. WORKS. It may seem so to the Senator from Kansas, but taking his view of it, the amendment he offers is simply equivalent to saying, "This young lady can never pay her doctors' bills, because it would be utterly impossible to pay such sums as they are probably justly entitled to out of the payment of $50 per month.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator if this young lady in the course of two or three months is fully recovered, so that in the possession of her faculties she can go out and resume her former position, or get some other position, and in addition to what she earns in her employment she receives for the period of seven years this payment of $50 a month, it seems we are only acting wisely if we allow the adjustment of a set-tlement of her doctors' bills and other expenses between her and these people. I realize particularly, so far as the Committee on Claims is concerned, that with these cases coming up from the shops, the navy yards, the Isthmian Canal, and every-where else for appropriations, if in every case when we are adjusting a claim we must go out and then try the issue and estimate how much we are to pay the doctors, and then in addition to that in the vast multitude of war claims and claims for what not we are to consider the equities of the lawyers down here in Washington and adjusting their claims and protecting them, our troubles have only begun; we will never get through.

Mr. WORKS. I sympathize with the Committee on Claims. but I fail to realize that that is any reason why we should not be just in this particular case.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I am going to vote with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Martine] in his proposal to increase the amount to be paid, but I think the Committee or Claims has done its duty. I agree with the general proposition made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], but I think this shocking and dreadful case will involve us in no danger of an embarrassing precedent. We are proceeding upon the theory that it is just that the Government pay. I think, applying the ordinary rules for assessing the amount which should be paid for injuries in this case, if we pay at all, the sum named by the Senator from New Jersey is not too large. It is now more than a year during which this young woman has been enduring the most dreadful sufferings. She is only now beginning to be on the road to recovery; she must suffer long before she can be restored; her restoration can not be complete; she will be disfigured for life. The case is one which could not be found in any schedule the Senator from Utah has It is quite unlike anything that appears in the schedules of the workmen's compensation bill; and I do not think that we are going too far or going beyond the limits of justice and that reasonable sympathy that we ought to show in giving the sum of $7,500, payable monthly, so that it would be of the greatest benefit to this unfortunate employee of the Government

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, my only reason for speaking on this case is the fact that some friends of mine have mentioned the circumstances in connection with it to me. In that degree I have some acquaintance with it.

It seems to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey is a solution of this matter in a spirit of fairness and justice all around. I understand this lady has been the recipient of attention and courtesies and treatment of the physicians that have been marked and unusual. She feels under great obligation to compensate them, so far as she can, for their attention and skill and devotion to her, even if she has to make sacrifices. If the $50 provided by the amendment of the Senator from Kansas were given, I doubt not but that she would expend most of it in trying, in gratitude, to give some compensation to these physicians whose skill has been so beneficial to her.

It is utterly impossible for this lady to live on $50 a month. She is now undergoing treatment; physicians continue to be very attentive to her; and it seems to me if we recognize the obligation to make any compensation, if we have any spirit of justice and sympathy, to provide for her less than $75 a month would be dealing in a parsimonious and unsympathetic way. That is not the manner in which the United States Government ought to deal with cases like this. Then to require her to economize, to save the pittance we give here monthly to provide for herself, in order that she may in her gratitude pay the physicians who have treated her, and she not to have this to live on, seems to me unjust and ungenerous on the part of the United States Government.

It seems to me the Senator from New Jersey has solved the Pay her $1,000 at once, and she can use that to compensate the physicians who have given time and skill and un-Then give her $75 a month to take care usual attention to her. of her for seven years. That would seem to me to be just and proper and not any excessive generosity or extravagance on the part of this Government.

This lady has suffered intensely. She is under treatment now; she has no means of support; and if there is anything that appeals to me it is her case, that has been presented to me by persons whom I know and in whom I have the utmost confidence. I think the Senate should give this meed of justice, this evidence of sympathy, and this amount to take proper care The Senator from New Jersey, as suggested by the Senator from New York, has offered a solution that appeals to me strongly as just in all respects.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I can fully understand the feeling of sympathy that is expressed by Senators who favor this amendment, but I want to call attention to the fact that under a statute we passed several years ago in relation to employees, an engineer, fireman, brakeman, or other employee down on the Isthmus of Panama may have his scalp torn off, his legs and his arms torn off, and yet we will give him or, in case of horrible death, we will give to his family, just one year's compensation at the rate which he was earning at the time of his death. The injury done might be just as frightful as this, and yet under the statute—and our committee report over and over again on personal injuries—we give one year's compensation; sometimes it is $1,200, sometimes it is $2,500. In view of our attitude toward those employees and injuries of that character received there, it seems to me that we are doing what is a fairly liberal thing toward this lady when we give her $4,200 in addition to the $1,900 which she has already received.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?
Mr. SWANSON. I have the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota to a fact which he, I think, will remember, which is that I introduced a bill providing $5,000 for a young man who lost his leg on the Isthmus of Panama. It was a fearful case; his suffering was intense, and I understand that he has an irritable stomach now, which gives him constant pain. The Committee on Claims reported compensation to the extent of one year's salary, which, I think, was perhaps $900.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Under the statute.
Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps $1,200; I have forgotten the amount. I accepted it, however, as the best that could be done.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We carry out that rule—
Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—
Mr. CRAWFORD. I thought the Senator from Virginia had concluded. I beg his pardon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I also beg his pardon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia had concluded, the Chair thought, and the Senator from South Dakota had taken the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. I had not concluded; but the Senator from South Dakota asked me a question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I beg the Senator's pardon. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair misunderstood the Senator from Virginia. Then he still has the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I wish to say, in reply to the question asked, that I recognize the necessity of the Senate being very conservative in passing general legislation affecting all cases. It might open up opportunities for excessive payments frequently; and it is but proper and right that in general legislation of this character there should be some limitation on the Government. But this is a special case, with no general law covering it. If, however, there were a general law and there were special cases of hardship such as this case, I as a Senator would vote to give just compensation for suffering or distress where there is obligation on the part of the Govern-

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to this general situation, and see if he does not feel that we are either unduly liberal toward this young lady or exceedingly unjust toward thousands and thousands of men and women now in the Government service. I recall a to commend itself-I will not say that, but it does commend case which occurred in the gun shop only a few months ago, where a young employee, in the prime of life, one of the most skillful and one of the best men in their employ, and with an earning capacity which I think brought about $2,500 a year to his family, met with a death more horrible than was this accident, because it was caused by the bursting of the steam pipes, and he was practically par boiled; his agonies and sufferings were beyond description; and yet we allowed his widow just one year's compensation, which, as I recall, was between $2,400 and $2,500.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator—
Mr. CRAWFORD. We have those cases, if the Senator will pardon me, to decide—

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—
Mr. CRAWFORD. I am going to put the interrogation point right here, Is it fair to settle with that vast multitude under a statute giving them one year's compensation and then give this young lady $7,500?

Mr. SWANSON. In reply to the Senator, I will say that I think the committee were very derelict if a bill had been sent to them for the relief of the widow of that person and they did not give the widow more than one year's compensation of her husband. If I were on the committee I would have agreed to report a bill favorably to pay her more, but because that person was inadequately paid, was not properly treated, is no reason why this lady should have an additional injustice applied to her.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, then I will say to the Senator from Virginia that what we should do would be to repeal the statute under which we have been acting for several years, and under which we have settled such claims with employees of the Government in the machine shops, on the Isthmus of Panama and elsewhere, and in every case we have followed the statute.

Mr. SWANSON. There are many persons who receive in-juries that are fairly and fully paid under the general com-pensation act which covers them. There are other cases where they are not paid, special cases deserving special legislation; and when a Senator introduces a bill in such a case, and it goes to the Committee on Claims, I think that committee ought to report such a bill carrying more money than the general statute provides for, and I would take pleasure in voting for it. I do not think that injustice in one case is a reason why we should be unjust, unfair, and illiberal in another.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have listened with some attention to this discussion, because it is altogether out of order, measured by the proceedings that take place in another tribunal when matters of this kind are under consid-The rules by which a rightful case is evolved have been adjusted in such a way that there is little controversy left about the means by which what is just in such a matter can be

The first question would be the question of liability, the question of whether or not this young lady had been guilty of such contributory negligence as to deprive her of the right to recover at all. That seems to have been waived by the committee and liability conceded. The next inquiry would be the extent of compensatory damages, it being conceded that there was no element of oppression or gross negligence that would justify the infliction of punitory damages. The doctors' bills and other bills necessarily incurred in the restoration to a state of health constitute one of the conceded elements of liability in all such cases, and the pain suffered, the loss of time, and the diminished capacity for labor—all those things enter into the amount of damages up to the point of compensation.

Now, the amount mentioned by the Senator from New Jersey will not attain to that sum; it will not amount to compensation for the loss of time and for the pain and suffering and the expense of medical attendance; so that, even if we should allow that sum, we are still far short of compensating the claimant in this case for the loss that it is admitted was inflicted upon her by the negligent arrangement of machinery in the place she was set to work.

I think that the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas that the sum should be paid to her in such manner as that she would certainly get the benefit of all of it is an admirable suggestion; but I think it is a little bit short of what justice requires when he limits the sum to $50 a month. I think the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey is entirely proper. I think $75 a month for seven years is as little as we could fairly and considerately offer to her; and I think the proposition to add a thousand dollars to take care of present liabilities and necessities is not excessive. I think that solution of the matter ought itself to me, and I believe it could fairly commend itself to other fair-minded persons who have no interest in this case except the public interest. I think that we could well agree upon that; and in every case of similar facts and similar hardships we could very readily agree without running any risk of bankrupting the Treasury or making a wasteful disposition of the public money.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from South Dakota. He has been a member of the Committee on Claims a number of years, and has always voted for certain amounts in specific cases. Suppose that, instead of getting well, this young lady had died from the results of that wound and had left a widowed mother to receive the compensation, how much would have been granted?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Eight hundred and forty dollars-year's compensation.

Then, you would grant only $840 in the Mr. McCUMBER. case of death; but if the person is not injured severely enough to die, but lives and is capable of going to work again in a few months, you would make the compensation nine times as much as you would in the case of death?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the proposition.
Mr. McCUMBER. If a man who had a wife and family to support should die because of accident in the Government service and he was receiving a salary of $1,200 a year, you would grant the widow $1,200.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We have been acting, I will say, Mr. President, under the statute which provides for a year's com-We have made an exception in this case because of pensation. the special appeal made to us by the Director of the Census and on presentation of the facts with reference to the very unusual character of the accident and the unusual expense.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator, and join with him earnestly in his sympathy, and would be in favor of granting a pretty liberal amount to this young lady-perhaps a much more liberal amount than is now granted under the general law in cases of this kind; but I agree with the Senator that it is hardly equitable and just to establish the principle that you will allow nearly ten times as much in case the injured person recovers as you would in the case of death. That seems to be the ridiculous position in which those are placed who are asking more in a case where the injured person succeeds in regaining health than they do in cases of death. I have always supposed that death was about as bad a punishment as could ordinarily be inflicted, and that it was worth something to live, but under this theory it seems to me that we are taking the opposite view.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President-

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Just a word first

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I think——
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota

asks the Senator from Virginia to delay a moment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, in the Committee on Claims we have not been proceeding on the theory that we were trying personal-injury cases, treating questions of contributory negligence and applying measures of damages as we would do in a court where there was an action between a private plaintiff and a defendant corporation. The Government can not be sued. It can settle with claimants as a matter of grace or under some law which it has itself provided, and for the government of the committee generally we have a law which has been passed giving one year's compensation. That law we have been following almost without exception; in fact, I do not recall a case in which we have made an exception in addition to the one here. Did the Senator from Virginia desire to ask me a question?

Mr. SWANSON. The suggestion I wanted to make was as to the distinction between compensation for injuries resulting in death and those not so serious in character. If this young lady had died any appropriation made on account of the injury to her would have been of no benefit to her; it would have given her no comfort, no consolation, and no benefit; and if she had no one dependent on her there would have been no benefit in that direction; but this bill is intended as a benefit and a compensation to take care of her. For a long time no recovery of damages was allowed in the case of death.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator from Virginia-

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to say further, that frequently the law limits the amount that can be recovered in case of death, because it goes to other parties and does not help the injured party, and in cases of injury where the person survives greater damages are often allowed, for he needs to be provided for and taken care of and supported. Now, if we are to give anything to this lady we ought certainly to give enough to properly take care of her. She is still under treatment, and in view of the present high cost of living and of the expenses incident to life, $75 a month is certainly no very generous gift on the part of the Government.

I hope the Senator from South Dakota will pardon me, but I was simply equalizing the time he had taken from me, Mr. CRAWFORD. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Now, Mr. President, to show the situation here, if we are going to establish a precedent like this we had better repeal the statute under which we have been proceeding. a case. The Senator from Delaware offered a bill for the relief of a young man whose right foot was torn off in one of the Government establishments in Washington. His good right foot is gone, and he will go through the rest of his journey in this world with his left foot alone. What did we do for him? We paid for an artificial foot and we gave him one year's compensation, amounting to $720.

I sympathize with this young lady, and we will give her money enough so that she can get a very handsome wig, and she will get a position somewhere in a few months. She was earning only $840 a year. That was her earning capacity. Very likely she will enjoy good health, and she may be just as good looking when she gets that handsome wig as she is now, presuming that she is a handsome girl. I feel sorry for her, but why should we in the case of the boy who lost his right foot follow the statute and give him only $720 and in the case of this girl give her $7,500 in addition to $1,900 we have already given her?

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to ask the Senator does he not recognize, in a case of this kind, that there is a vast difference between the basis of damages which would be employed by a jury and a court in computing damages to a man for a personal injury, such as he has spoken of, and an injury to a woman or a girl, such as is described in this report?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly; I think—
Mr. CHILTON. One moment. I think we all recognize that. How old was this girl?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Twenty-eight years.

Mr. CHILTON. Twenty-eight years. Of course that does make some difference; but in any case of a girl of marriageable age who has had her scalp torn off and must go through the rest of her life without her hair, does not the Senator think that makes a difference and itself makes a precedent?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that the Committee on Claims have not undertaken to follow the decisions of the court regarding injuries to feelings or anything of that kind as bearing on the question of damages.

Mr. CHILTON. One word further

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from South Dakota permit the Senator from West Virginia to proceed one step further?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly. Mr. CHILTON. I want to understand this case, because I was unable to hear part of the colleguy on the other side on account of the confusion in the Senate. I want to get the matter straight. As I understand, the first element in a damage suit, or one of the grounds of liability on the defendant, is that he must furnish a safe place for the employee to work. Senator think that it is a safe place to work where a girl's hair can be caught in machinery, and she is scalped?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that when they put the shaft down along the floor and the wall and put protecting rods along there, I do not think they contemplated that girls were going to be crawling along there on their knees with their heads down close enough to that revolving shaft for their locks to get caught in it. am not able to find any serious lapse on the part of the Government in that respect, and, under the circumstances, she having been in search of some cards which she had dropped, I do not think it would be fair to charge her with contributory negligence; but I will say to the Senator that in considering personal-injury cases arising on the Isthmus of Panama and in the gun shops we are allowing a year's compensation without drawing any distinction as to whether or not the place of employment was safe and without making any allowance for the question of contributory negligence or the question of comparative negligence. We are not considering them at all. We are following a statute which provides that in case of the loss of life or the loss of an arm or a leg or the permanent injury to a public employee while in the discharge of his duty, he shall receive, if he lives, one year's compensation, and if he is killed his family shall receive one year's compensation.

That is a solemn enactment of the Congress of the United States to guide us in the settlement of these claims on the part of these employees. We have been following it. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] criticizes us for doing so, but I supposed that that statute was enacted for us to follow; I supposed that it was placed on the statute book for the purpose of enabling these claims to be settled, and so I have been following it. This case is the only exception, and, on account of the serious and unusual emergency presented, we thought when we gave her $1,900 at one time and now have brought in a bill appropriating $3,500 more we are acting quite liberally, in comparison with what we have been doing for hundreds and hundreds of others who have sustained very grave and serious injury.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, to many it may seem rather ungenerous to offer any opposition to an enlarged appropriation in this case, but having been a member of the Committee on Claims which passed upon this particular claim, it seems to me that it is proper for me to state my understanding of the situation and the reason for casting my vote for the amount reported by the committee.

I did not understand at that time that it was charged by anybody that the Government had been negligent in the arrangement of the shaft which caused the injury. standing of the case is that whoever introduced the bill for the relief of this young lady and presented the matter to the committee made a recommendation for $5,000.

It occurred to us at that time that whoever was presenting the claim for this young lady would certainly make it large enough in offering the proposition to the Congress. Further, my understanding of the testimony at that time was that the proponents of the measure conceded that the larger the amount we appropriated the larger the amount that would go to the doctors; that in any event the claimant would receive not to exceed about twenty-five hundred or $3,000. Therefore we recommended the appropriation of the amount, believing, as I said, that the young girl was obtaining all that she had asked, or that her friends had asked for her, after the amount of the doctors' bills had been deducted.

It is also conceded that the doctors have presented and will present their bills upon the basis of the amount that is allowed this young lady by the Congress.

I quite agree with the Senator from California [Mr. Works] that this young lady owes her doctors a certain obligation, and being an honorable young lady, she will want to pay them. But the amount of the bills that will be presented will be very much larger if we allow a larger sum here than if we allow what we think she is actually entitled to, as governed by the amount that she or her friends asked for at the time.

It was for this reason that I voted to report the amount that I did, believing that I was conceding practically all that she asked for. I did it, not because I felt that the Government was legally bound to pay anything, or that there was any fault on the part of the Government in this particular case, but because the accident that had occurred to her was almost a monstrous one, and the extra amount allowed her would probably keep her until such a time as she could return to her work in the employ of the Government.

My understanding is that she can return to her old place in the Government as soon as she is able to do so, and that this amount of money will tide her over and carry her past the point of necessity. If not, if her recovery shall be delayed or shall be prevented, there is nothing in the world to bar her from coming back to Congress and asking for another appropriation.

So I say, Mr. President, it occurs to me that under the circumstances we have done all we have been asked to do by the friends of this young lady in granting the original amount. This notion of paying it in monthly installments was not brought before the committee, and I confess that I like it. think it is a very wholesome provision, and I shall not seriously object to the larger amount. But I feel, as I say, that I ought to explain why I voted the way I did. I believed then, and I believe now, that I was doing everything that any of the friends of this young lady would have asked at that time, considering the condition in which the doctors' bills were. One of the witnesses, who seemed to understand the matter, felt that outrageous bills had been offered by the doctors in this particular case, and that they were depending upon the Government's allowance in order to get their pay.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I feel that it is sad and most unfortunate for the glory and manhood and dignity of this great Senate that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Crawford] should have made the suggestion of a wig for this young woman. Think of it. I realize, of course, that she might wear a wig. So she might use a cork leg; she might use a pair of false teeth, or a glass eye. But, great heavens; what a spectacle!

I trust the Senator will withdraw that suggestion before it ever gets into cold type as the suggestion of the distinguished Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I favor the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Martine].

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Crawford] seems to be very much embarrassed because we have a general statute covering the amount which may be allowed in this or similar cases. That establishes a general rule, and perhaps should be a guide to the committee. But it is not necessarily a guide to the United States Senate. We do not need to be embarrassed because of the fact that we may be, for the time, setting aside that statute. We did that about two weeks ago in this Chamber. We had a general statute providing that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia should receive annual salaries of $5,000 each. In the face of that statute we passed an appropriation bill increasing their salaries for the ensuing year to $6,000 each.

It seems to me that if we can increase the salaries of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in the face of a general statute upon the subject, it ought not to embarrass us to allow this young woman a few hundred dollars more because of the fact that there is a general statute limiting the amount which the Government sees fit to pay.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene] does not for a moment get the impression that anyone doubts the power of the Senate to pass this measure if it sees fit to do so. What we have been trying to call attention to is what is apparently an unfair discrimination between this case and hundreds of cases that the Senate has acted upon heretofore upon the recommendation of the committee, appealing just as strongly as this, perhaps, to sympathy, and yet where the measure was the statute.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if we have been unfair in the past, that is no reason why we should be unfair now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have been deeply interested in this case. My sympathy went out toward the young lady. A number of her friends told me that her suffering had been such that her mind was affected. I called on the doctor and saked if that was the case. He told me it was not asked if that was the case. He told me it was not.

I want to say that I fully believe that as soon as the young lady recovers her health—and I understand it is not going to be long before she does—she will go back to work as a Government employee. The Director of the Census told me not longer than two days ago that he would be perfectly willing to take her back, and that she will be again employed in that bureau just as quickly as she is physically able to resume her duties.

Mr. President, I have been on the Claims Committee now for nearly 10 years. I remember the late Senator Allison and other Senators pleading for an appropriation of $1,500 for Florence Lambert, a girl who had been working in the navy yard priming cartridges. The primers exploded, tearing off a part of her face; she lost an eye, and lost one of her arms. I want to say that that bill has never yet become a law, and that woman to-day is in a worse condition than Miss Houghton is—and God knows both of them are in bad shape.

I know that the committee considered this matter from the standpoint of what effect it will have upon future legislation. I fully agree with the chairman of the committee that in the amount that has been recommended they have gone beyond any case that has been passed by the committee in the way of relief. I say this simply because I believe that no matter how our sympathies go out in this case, there will be hundreds of others, and that we ought at least to take into consideration what we have done in the past and what we intend to do in the future.

I believe the amendment that the committee have offered ought to be sustained by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Martine] to substitute "$7,500" for "$4,200," as offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW].

Mr. SWANSON. That is not the amendment, Mr. President, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I press my substitute for that amendment, which is in the hands of the Secretary.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, the substitute offered by the Senator from New Jersey is to strike out "$4,200," the aggregate amount proposed by the Senator from Kansas, where it comes in, either in the amendment or in the bill, and insert

"$1,000," and then-

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Chair may state it, there are really two separate amendments that have been presented by the Senator from Kansas. One was as to the amount; the other was to add at the end of the bill a new provision as to how it should be paid. The first proposition is whether the amount shall be $4,200 or $7,500. Afterwards there will come up the proposition as to how that sum shall be paid.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understood, the Senator from New Jersey modified the amendment that he offered so as to appropriate $1,000 at once, and $7,500 in the aggregate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposition offered by the Senator from Kansas is not really a motion to strike out and insert, as the Chair noticed by looking it over afterwards, but is practically two amendments. The first to change the amount of the appropriation; the second to add at the end of the bill a provision as to how the money shall be paid out.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is all right. Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the amount mentioned in the modified amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Martine] aggregates $7,300. Is it the proposition substitute $7,300 for $4,200 where it appears in the $7,500.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. My proposition was $7,500. I proposed to substitute an amendment making it $7,500. to the manner of payment, $75 a month for seven years and a lump sum of $1,200 would make the $7,500.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I thought that was the object. Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I find myself somewhat in the attitude of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend]. Like him, I did not vote for any amount with the idea that there was any case of negligence against the Government. I believe if Senators will read the report of the committee, while it is stated there that the young lady herself was not negligent to any considerable degree, the facts stated will show that there was no negligence on the part of the Government.

It is one thing to sympathize with people in distress or people who are injured. It is another and a different thing for us to vote away the public money because of that sympathy. So many cases have come before the committee, just as meritorious as this case, where we have not the right, because of the law, to give an amount corresponding at all to the amount embedied in the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], that I can not vote for that amendment.

I shall therefore vote for the bill as it came from the committee, with the feeling that even then we were somewhat influenced, but not as much as has been apparent on the floor of the Senate, by those who are not on the committee, and are not so familiar as are the members of the committee with the circumstances of this case.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I will take the time of the Senate for only a moment to explain my position.

I dislike to yield to anyone in the matter of liberality or sympathy. But having been for some time a member of the Committee on Claims, I feel that I am bound to sustain the report of that committee at this time.

There comes to me now a case that seems to me to appeal quite as strongly to our sympathy as this one; and yet the party injured received only a very small sum, comparatively speaking, and the bill became a law. We referred the case to a sub-complitee. As I remember that case it was something like this:

A mechanic was sent into a piece of machinery to repair it. When he was ready to come out there was to be a signal given, and then the machinery was to be started. Without any fault on his part the machinery was started by a false signal, and the man was almost torn to pieces. It is true that he lived; he is alive now. But I presume his expenses and suffering were half a dozen times, and probably twenty times, more than those in the case under consideration.

That was a case where the Government was absolutely at ult. No question was raised but that a great wrong was done and this man suffered through no fault of his, but through the absolute fault of an officer in charge of the machinery.

I wish the Senators who are advocating this additional sum were members of the Committee on Claims. They would find coming before that committee, almost every week, claims of this While I, for one, would like to give to this young woman all that is asked-she has suffered enough, and, of course, none of us would want to suffer anything like what she has suffered for a very much larger sum than we can give her-I feel compelled to forego the factor of sympathy and pity and sustain | 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

the report of my committee. I simply make these few remarks as to my reasons for so doing.

Mr. BRISTOW: Mr. President, I want to make a suggestion. It is proposed by the amendment to the amendment to pay this young lady more money than she was receiving when she was employed. It is proposed to pay her $75 a month for seven years, when she was earning only $70 a month. It seems to me that is an amazing proposition for Senators to urge. be able to go to work in three months, so we are advised. It is proposed now to pay her for seven years more than she was earning, having paid her already nineteen hundred dollars.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? Does he not take into consideration the suffering and the disfigurement this young woman has undergone?

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say, Mr. President, that the United States Government is not able to pay the young lady for her suffering. The United States Government can not pay a man for the loss of a leg or the loss of an arm. That can not be done. There is not enough property in the United States to pay the Senator from Ohio for the loss of a foot, or a leg, or an arm, or an eye. We can not settle these claims upon that basis.

Mr. POMERENE. Does not the Senator appreciate that in all suits at law in cases of personal injuries those very elements are taken into consideration?

Mr. BRISTOW. The element as to the damage to the earning power of the party injured is taken into consideration. If you lose a hand, the value of that hand in earning a living is taken into consideration. If you consider this case from that stand-point, the young lady will be able within six months to earn as much as she ever earned; and from the standpoint suggested by the Senator from Ohio the young lady would not be entitled to the appropriation which the committee recommends, because she is not disabled from earning a living.

BRISTOW 1.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected, there being on a division—ayes 16, noes 17.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas now offers, to follow the last clause of the bill, the amendment which the Secretary will state.

The Secretary. It is proposed, at the end of the bill, to Said amount to be paid in monthly installments of $50 each, and not otherwise, for the period of seven years: Provided, That no sum of money due or to become due to the said Alice V. Houghton under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of the said Alice V. Houghton.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY TO HILL COUNTY, MONT.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. President, I hope the Senator will with-Mr. MYERS. hold that motion for a moment. I should like to have about two minutes of the time of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; I withhold the motion for that purpose

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5817) granting to the county of Hill, in the State of Montana, the jail building and fixtures now upon the abandoned Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation, in the State of Montana.

This is a bill which I tried to get unanimous consent to consider day before yesterday. At that time the Senator from New York [Mr. Root] objected. I have since talked to him, and he has withdrawn his objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 5,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 4, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we bless Thy holy name for every social, political, and religious movement looking to the betterment of mankind and the solidarity of the human race into one family; that wrongs may be righted, injustice removed, and the evils which beset us be eradicated; that all Thy children may enjoy the God-given rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of Impress us as individuals and as a Nation that if we shall enjoy the respect of others we must respect ourselves by living to the highest ideals illustrated in the life and teachings of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BUEONIC PLAGUE, TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 479) which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House of Representatives a duplicate copy of the bill (S. 2819) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1809 and 1900, the same having been lost or destroyed since its reference to the Committee on Claims of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

THE DEAD OF THE BATTLESHIP "MAINE."

Mr. FORNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the patriotic and eloquent oration de-livered by Rev. Father J. P. Chidwick, former chaplain of the battleship Maine, at the burial ceremony of the recently recovered bodies of that ship.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the oration of the chaplain of the battleship Maine delivered at the ceremony in commemoration of the recently recovered bodies of that ship. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am under the impression that somebody has already requested leave to insert all of those proceedings in the RECORD. I think they have not been inserted, and I shall not object.

Mr. FORNES. If it has been inserted, I do not care to have the privilege of inserting it now; but I do not think it has been, because I have just received a copy of it.

Mr. MANN. I am quite sure that somebody made a request of that kind the other day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

The address is as follows:

The eloquence of to-day is not that of words or action, not anything that I might say, not even this splendid, patriotic, imposing national demonstration. It is the eloquence of silence, of that sad, solemn, impressive silence which surrounds the sacred remains which lie before us telling of the awful tragedy in which the Maine and herew met their fate, of the service which their sacrifice rendered to God, humanity, and country, of the 14 long years in which a silent crew in a stricken ship, sunk while in the interests of our flag, lay in a foreign harbor, exiles from their own and beloved land.

These 14 years have been momentous in their history. In their setting, sparkling like jewels rich and rare in beauty and value, are the freedom of Cuba, the exaltation of our own heart-cherished country, the extension of her territory for beneficent purposes, the enlargement of her influence in the councils of the world for the enrichment of the happiness of the human race, and Spain's more flourishing and happy condition. History, which traces movements as well as records events, which searches for forces as well as notes results, while making no unjustifiable accusation, no unwarranted assertion, will not fail to bestow upon the heroes of the Maine her tribute of affectionate remembrance for their share in this new epoch of freedom and happiness and will proclaim their sacrifice to be a glory to their country and a blessing to mankind.

Even as at daydawn a streak of light is seen to rest upon the horizon which sinks back again into darkness—which is not day, but which foretells the day—so shall be regarded this event which we recall. It appears in the history of these past 14 years, not the day, but the forerunner and strong influence by which this day was made to throw her splendor far and wide. For years we closed our ears to cries piteously made to us for relief; for years we closed our ears to cries piteously made to us for relief; for years we closed our ears to cries piteously made and quiet. The silence broken only by the occasional cries and pulling of oars of passing boatmen. Our men asleep in their hammocks. They lay calmily, peacefully, in the hands of God, we trust, to Whom we commend their spirits. Suddenly the fateful flash, the loud report, the bursting forth of flames, the bodies of men with fragments of the ship states of the sile of the property of the bursting forth of flames, the bodies of men with fragments of the ship states of the flat of the property of the bursting forth of flames, the bodies of men with fragments of the ship states of the flat of the property of the bursting forth of flames, the bodies of men with fragments of the bursting flat of the flat of the property of the flat of the property of the flat of the property of the flat of the flat of the property of the flat of the property of the flat of the property of liberty-loving people love freedom, not only for themselves but also for others.

The last remains of her crew are now before us. You receive them, in the name of the Nation, as beroes who have added luster to our country's honor. Never has this beautiful city of our Nation's capital witnessed a more imposing and solemn pageant. But it is not only here that this honor is paid. There is not a city, town, or village in our broad land but at this moment turns toward this demonstration and in sympathy bows head and heart in prayer. And it is well that this honor is accorded. Our men went to their post of duty aware of this danger, but glad to serve their flag. They were prepared for any action which might be required of them. And although they were stricken in their sleep, and had not a chance to pull the lock string of even one of their guns, they died in the interests of the people, at the post of duty to which their people called them, and they descreve all the glory which you have given them, all that you give to those who die in the shock and shriek of battle.

A few minutes more and you will bear away these precious bodies to that honored bivouac of the dead which our Nation reserves for those who die as martyrs to her sacred cause. You will lay them side by side with the bodies of those who were their companious in life that they may be their comrades in death. The sod of their own native land will inclose them and the kind hearts and gentle hands of their own will care for them.

The silent company about them will be of the same noide mold as themselves. Every grave about them will tell a story similar to their own. There they will lie in the shadow of their Nation's Capitol, surrounded with their Nation's glory. The warm blood of the Nation's heart will consecrate their memory as long as the Nation shall live. There those who knew them and loved them as their own in life, as husband, father, son, or brother, can come flushed with pride upon the honor which is theirs and feel a compensation for the weeds of ing which they wear and for the frall bodies which tell the story how the toll of years has reduced and robbed them of health and pleasure. There on the day of our national remembrance our people will wander down the narrow aisles between the green tents and lay upon the resting places their tributes of prayer and affection, of gratitude and love. There the children of the future generations will feed the fires of their patriotism and learn the lesson of devotion to country even unto death. Their angels will keep vigil with the angel of our country awaiting the day of resurcction where deeds well done will be the vestment of immortality.

But shall we turn from the graves without a thought of the parents, the widows, and the orphans, whose bleeding hearts and broken lives tell of their contribution to the Nation with the deaths of their beloved? What have we done for them? What shall we do for them? Has the fact that their duty was dangerous, that they were called to a dangerous post by people, no influence to raise their deaths above those who die only in the discharge of duty? If they died not in actual battle, died they in less honor or glory? What means this magnificent national demonstration? What means the present assembly of both branches of our National Legislature? What means the vast assemblage, this pomp, this pageant? Are these the tributes to those whose deaths have served only the ordinary purposes of their calling? What means the pomp, this pageant? Are these the tributes to those whose deaths have served only the ordinary purposes of their calling? What means the demonstration of sympathy and affection throughout the land? The monument our people are erecting? Is there an event in the 14 years which have elapsed since the catastrophe which has entered more deeply into the sympathy and affection of our people? Was there an event which in these 14 years has had a greater effect upon subsequent of these heroes have served so extraordinary and so glorious a purpose, have we been acting as generously youd the bine.

STRIKE AT LAWRENCE, MASS. (H. DOC. NO. 671).

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 471.

Resolved, That there shall be printed 2,000 copies of the hearings before the Committee on Rules on the investigation of the strike at Lawrence, Mass.; of which 500 shall be for the use of the said committee and 1,500 for the use of the House of Representatives; 1,000 copies to be distributed through the document room, and 500 copies to be placed in the folding room.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I also ask for the reading of -the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Finley, from the Committee on Printing, makes the following report (No. 491), to accompany House resolution 471:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the House resolution (H. Res. 471) providing for the printing of hearings before the Committee on Rules on the investigation of the strike at Lawrence, Mass., reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

The estimated cost will be $300.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice that that provides for 500 copies to go to the folding room. Why does not the gentleman make it 400 copies and send 1,100 to the document room? It is impossible to distribute 500 copies pro rata from the folding room.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry], and it is my opinion that this is a very good distribution, namely, 1,000 copies in the document room and 500 in the fold-

Mr. MANN. Five hundred copies can not be distributed pro rata from the folding room. That is the only thing I have reference to.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not think it will make any difference. The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the reso-Intion. The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to. HOOKWORM AND SOIL POLLUTION.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 380.

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 5,000 copies of a wall chart on hookworm and soil pollution, and that the same be distributed through the folding room of the House of Representatives.

With the following amendments:

Line 1, after the word "Resolved," insert the words "by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring)."
Line 2, after the word "copies," msert the words "on manila paper."

Mr. FINLEY. I ask for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Finley, from the Committee on Printing, makes the following report (No. 402), to accompany House resolution 380:

The Committee on Printing having had under consideration the House resolution (H. Res. 380) providing for the printing of a wall chart on hookworm and soil pollution, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to with the following amendments: On line 2, after the word "copies," insert the words "on manila paper": and in line 1, after the word "Resoluci," insert the words "by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring)," and change the title so as to read "Concurrent resolution."

The estimated cost will be $3,047.83.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amended concurrent resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to. The title was amended to read: "House concurrent resolution 46, to provide for the printing of wall chart on hookworm and soil pollution."

The resolution as amended reads as follows:

House concurrent resolution 46.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 5,000 copies on manila paper of a wall chart on hookworm and soil pollution, and that the same be distributed through the folding room of the House of Representatives

CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARY HANSARD.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 93, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 93 (H. Rept. 490).

Senate joint resolution 93 (H. Rept. 490).

Joint resolution authorizing the Librarian of Congress to furnish a copy of the daily and bound Congressional Recomb to the undersecretary of state for external affairs of Canada in exchange for a copy of the Parliamentary Hansard.

Resolved, etc., That the Librarian of Congress is hereby authorized to furnish a copy of the daily and bound Congressional Record to the undersecretary of state for external affairs of Canada in exchange for a copy of the Parliamentary Hansard, and that the Public Printer is hereby directed to honor the requisition of the Librarian of Congress for such copy. The Parliamentary Hansard so received shall be the property of the Department of State.

*The SPEAKER. This is not a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. This is not a privileged resolution, and the gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING PANAMA HEARINGS, INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer for present consideration the privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 468.

Resolved, That there be printed as a House document 700 copies of the Panama hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for the use of the House document room.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask for the reading of the report. The report was read, as follows:

Report No. 493 to accompany House resolution 468.

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the House resolution (H. Res. 468) providing for the printing of Panama Canal hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

The estimated cost will be $500.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF FEBRUARY 12, 1912.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution, not privileged, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 256.

Joint resolution to print 30,600 copies of the message of the President of February 12, 1912.

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 30,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States of date February 12, 1912, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture submitting a report on the Mexican cotton-boll weevil, together with said report (S. Doc. 305), of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 15.000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, to be distributed through the document room, and 10,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read. The Clerk read as follows:

Report No. 494 to accompany House joint resolution 256.

Report No. 494 to accompany House joint resolution 256.

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 256) providing for the printing of 30,000 copies of the message of the President of February 12, 1912, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to with the following amendments: On line 9, strike out all after the word "five" and insert the following: "Of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, to be distributed through the Senate document room, and 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, to be distributed through the House document room." Second, strike out the enacting clause and in its place insert the following: "Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring)," and amend the title so as to read "Concurrent resolution." The estimated cost will be $4,690.98.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question? I understand this is for printing the report of the Secretary of Agriculture upon the cotton-boll weevil.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman is correct.
Mr. BARTLETT. Why put it in the document room? Why not put it in the folding room, where Members from sections which this investigation affects can have them at their disposal and send them out, and where those Members who may not desire to use them-

Mr. FINLEY. I will say this to the gentleman, the difficulty about it is that to place it in the folding room would give Members from Maine, for instance, copies of these bulletins that would be of no use to them.

Mr. BARTLETT. To place them in the document room puts them at the disposal of the quickest and most alert man in or out of Congress to go and get them.

Mr. FINLEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken. Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think I am.

Mr. FINLEY. I am pretty sure the gentleman is. The gentleman from Louisiana is the author of the resolution.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from South Carolina will yield-

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. That the very object we have in view in placing them in the document room is to carry out just the intent I know my friend from Georgia has, that Members from those States that are interested in this matter should have the distribution of them. Otherwise there will be an allotment, and they will go to all the Members from all the States alike, although a few States, or comparatively few, taking the whole number into consideration, are interested in this matter.

Mr. BARTLETT. Putting them in the folding room puts them under the control of Members of the House—

Mr. WICKLIFFE. That would necessitate an allotment, would it not?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. Mr. WICKLIFFE. That is the very thing that we thought best to obviate.

Mr. BARTLETT. - The gentleman can see that the first man there might get 500.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. We have undertaken to make the number large, so that all can be satisfied. The gentleman's objection goes more to the number than the method of procedure in distribution.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have not objected, but I have made a suggestion about the matter.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. I appreciate the gentleman's suggestion. Mr. BARTLETT. In my opinion it would be better to place these in the folding room and those gentlemen who do not desire to use them need not do so.

Mr. FINLEY. It will be a matter of vigilance on the part of interested Members to go and get their allotment.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. So it would amount to the same thing in the end, so far as that goes. Mr. BARTLETT. No; if it goes to the document room you might call for 500 copies and get them.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. On the other hand, you could go to a Member from Maine or California and get him to give up his allotment, and it will amount to the same thing so far as being objectionable on that score,

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not going to object to the resolution, nor do I desire to object to the suggestion made by the author of the resolution, but I do think in this and all other resolutions providing for the publication of important documents, and this is an important one, information on which all the cottonraising States, especially those who have not yet been visited by the boll weevil but who are expecting in the next year or the year after to be afflicted with it, are interested—such States as Georgia, Alabama, Arkansas, and Louisiana-

Mr. FINLEY. I think the gentleman from Georgia will find the officials in charge of the document room are disposed to treat all Members fairly.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not at all afraid of the fairness of the gentlemen in the document room, but I have had some sort of experience in the matter that the important documents are gone before we can get them. I do not offer any amendment in deference to the suggestion of my friend from Louisiana.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. I thank the gentleman from Georgia. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a moment ago we passed a resolution changing a joint resolution to a concurrent resolution. I think this is possibly the reverse. I believe this was introduced as a joint resolution, and now it proposes to change it to a concurrent resolution. I suggest to the gentleman that it makes difficulties all along the line. Each bill or resolution when introduced bears a number. It is a House bill, a resolu-tion, a concurrent resolution, a House joint resolution, or a simple House resolution, and they are numbered in the index under the numbers. Where will this appear hereafter? A man looks at it and sees it is introduced as a concurrent resolution. It goes out of the House as a joint resolution or vice versa.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Will the gentleman yield on that point right there? It was originally introduced as a joint resolution, following the precedent in 1905 in reference to a similar publication or, rather, with reference to the same subject matter.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing that part of it. I suggest to the gentleman that instead of amending the joint resolution that was introduced that the committee report as a substitute for that joint resolution a concurrent resolution, which will have a new number, so we can keep it straight.

Mr. FINLEY. Well, I will say to the gentleman that the practice has been both ways, and this has been done before.

Mr. MANN. It was done a few moments ago. It never was done before since I have been in the House, I think, except on the Senate concurrent resolution which we changed to a joint resolution, which went back to the Senate. The Lord only knew whether it was a concurrent resolution or a joint resolution, and the gentleman has passed a new Senate joint resolution on account of that difficulty. It is a simple matter.

Mr. FINLEY. I think the gentleman is underestimating the knowledge of the Lord, and perhaps the knowledge of his intelligent sons. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. But nobody can tell where it will be in the index under the number. The gentleman can easily ask to have it reported as a new concurrent resolution as a substitute and pass it now.

Mr. FINLEY. Well, I think there will be no trouble about that. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 5 strike out all after the word "five" and insert the fol-of fine of strike to be lowing:

"Of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, to be distributed through the Senate document room, and 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, to be distributed through the House document room.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. Is this a joint resolution?

Mr. FINLEY. This is a concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. Which is it to be when it gets through?

Mr. FINLEY. A concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution as amended.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FINLEY I ask that the title be amended.
The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended to conform to the character of the resolution.

The resolution as amended reads as follows: House concurrent resolution 47.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 30,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States of date February 12, 1912, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, submitting a report on the Mexican cotton-boll weevil, together with said report (S. Doc. No. 305), of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate to be distributed through the Senate document room, and 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives to be distributed through the House document room.

PRINTING OF UNITED STATES BUREAU OF EDUCATION BULLETIN NO. 14.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution. which I send to the Clerk's desk. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 435.

Resolved. That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 5,000 copies of the United States Bureau of Education Bulletin, 1911, No. 14, as issued by the United States Bureau of Education, and entitled "Provision for Exceptional Children in Public Schools," and all to be delivered to the superintendent of the document room of the House of Representatives for distribution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Finley, from the Committee on Printing, makes the following report (No. 495), to accompany House resolution 435:

The Committee on Printing, having under consideration the House resolution (H. Res. 435) providing for the printing of United States Bureau of Education Bulletin No. 14, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

The estimated cost will be $185.57.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 14918) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, with sundry Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in each of the amendments as read by the Clerk. The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

EFFICIENCY AND ECONOMY COMMISSION (H. DOC. 670).

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

APACHE INDIAN PRISONERS OF WAR AT FORT SILL, OKLA.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit, on the part of the Committee on Indian Affairs, a privileged report on House resolution 420, and ask for its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House resolution 420.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to this House at as early a date as may be convenient a report setting forth—

First. How many Apache Indians are now held as prisoners of war at the Fort Sill (Okia.) Reservation.

Second. How many of said Indians are males and how many are females.

Third How many of said resolved.

females.

Third. How many of said male Indians are under 40 years of age.
Fourth. How many of said Indians are known, at any time prior to their capture, to have been engaged in hostilities against the United States, or to have committed acts of violence against citizens or residents of the United States.

Fifth. The names, ages, present condition of health, and general conduct of the Indians coming under the terms of the last paragraph.
Sixth. The military necessity, if any, for continuing to hold said Apache Indians as prisoners of war.

Seventh. By what authority the said Apache Indians are now held as prisoners of war, and particularly by what authority those of said Indians who were born in captivity, and who have come of age while still in captivity, are so held.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the report is quite

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is but one clause of the report which should be read, in my judgment, and that will explain the rest of the report.

The SPEAKER. What clause is it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The first clause of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Stephens, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report (No. 480), to accompany House resolution 420:

The House Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred House resolution 420, calling for certain information relative to certain Apache Indians now under the charge of the War Department at Fort Sill, Okla., having had the same under consideration, begs leave to report that your committee had within its possession all the information called for by the said resolution, and therefore deems the passage of the resolution unnecessary and recommends that the same do lie on the table.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that the department has answered these questions seriatim and fully. If any gentleman desires to hear the answers I do not object to having them read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.
Mr. MANN. This is, I believe, the Palmer resolution that was up the other day in the House?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.
Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman state that all the information asked for is now included in the report of the War Department?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; it is all included, and it is answered seriatim. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask, Mr. Speaker, for the printing of the report also.

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary. That will be done.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 20728, the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman desire to make some arrangement as to general debate?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion I will ask unanimous consent that general debate be confined to two hours, one hour on a side, and that the time on this side be controlled by myself and the time on the other side by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that I think we ought to have about three hours on this side. I have had a number of requests for time and I hope the gentleman will consent to a longer time than two hours.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have had only one request on this side and that was for 30 minutes. I do not think I could agree to three hours on that side because we are desirous of getting the bill through on account of the press of business. Would it be satisfactory to the gentleman to close debate at 4 o'clock, the time to be equally divided?

Mr. MANN. Under the circumstances, will not the gentleman from Texas allow more time to this side, or consent to yield us a part of the gentleman's time, so that we can have at least two hours and a half on this side?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The objection to that would be that we do not know what gentlemen on that side intend to talk about. If they intend to talk about the bill that is one thing.

Mr. MANN. The remarks on this side are not to be confined to the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then we do not wish to handicap ourselves by having political speeches made on that side with on opportunity to reply to them.

Mr. MANN. We have no desire to handicap gentlemen on that side.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My understanding is the speeches on this side are not to be on the bill.

Mr. MANN. And yet I do not think that gentlemen on that side will want to answer them. Why not agree to two and a half hours on each side and then, if the gentlemen on that side do not want to use all of their time, general debate can be closed earlier. Certain gentlemen on this side have arranged to speak, and we have told them that undoubtedly they could have time. We would like at least two hours and a half.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask that general debate be

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask that general debate be closed at 4 o'clock, one-half of the time to be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from South Dakota

[Mr. Burke]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I will suggest to the gentleman that general debate be limited to four hours, with the understanding that under the five-minute rule the gen-tleman will be liberal in allowing debate. There are a number of propositions in the bill that I desire to discuss, and I think some other Members on this side desire also to discuss them. I hope there will be no disposition to shut off debate, so that we may discuss some of these propositions at greater length than we could if we were confined to the five minutes. I do not insist on any agreement to that effect; all I want is an assurance of the gentleman that he will not insist on closing debate.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask the gentleman if we can not agree to close general debate at 5 o'clock? That will give us four hours.

Mr. MANN. With the understanding that on one or two items in the bill the gentleman will be liberal under the fiveminute rule.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly. I understand that there are only two or three controverted items in the bill, and we are willing to grant liberal time on them. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my request be put.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas, pending his motion, asks unanimous consent that general debate extend until 5 minutes past 5, four hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke]. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Before that is agreed to, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if, in case the time is not all consumed in general debate, it is his intention to take the bill up under the five-minute rule to-day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the request the other The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that general debate shall not extend beyond 5 minutes past 5 this afternoon, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion of Mr. Stephens of Texas was then agreed to. Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BARNHART in the chair. The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for the fulfillment of treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, as a part of my remarks I desire to submit the report on the bill made by the Committee on Indian Affairs, which sets out the amendments and appropriations in the bill more fully and succinctly than I can state them. I ask that it be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. Stephens of Texas), as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred House bill 20728, submit the following report:

This bill earries appropriations aggregating $7,465,255, payable from the Federal Treasury, exclusive of appropriations aggregating $327,504.90, payable from Indian trust funds now on deposit in the Treasury. This is a reduction of $938,023.25 over the amount estimated for the next fiscal year, and a further reduction of $1,049,376 over the total amount carried for the Indian Service by the appropriation bill for the present fiscal year.

carried for the Indian Service by the appropriation bill for the present fiscal year.

The total appropriation for 1912 was $8,842,136.27.

The total estimate for 1913 is $8,730,783.15.

The largest items in this bill are:

As a general item for day and industrial schools, to be used exclusively for reservation schools, $1,450,000.

For nonreservation schools, including repairs and improvements to school plants, $1.644,605.

For fulfilling treaty items, $583,560.

For construction, lease, purchase, repairs, and improvements of school and agency buildings for reservation schools, for which it is to be used exclusively, $425,000.

For survey, resurvey, classification, and allotment of Indian lands, $215,000.

For industrial work, including payment of foresters in the protection $215,000.

For industrial work, including payment of foresters in the protection of Indian forests, payment of matrons, farmers, etc., $400,000.

For irrigation projects on Indian reservations, $833,700.

During the consideration of the entire bill your committee has held the most extensive hearings ever before held on an Indian appropriation bill, having had before it Commissioner Valentine and E. B. Meritt, law clerk, of the Indian Burcau; also Director Newell, of the Reclamation Service, the latter appearing with reference to irrigation projects.

Meritt, law clerk, of the Indian Burcau; also Director Newell, of the Reclamation Service, the latter appearing with reference to irrigation projects.

It has been the policy of your committee to go carefully into each item of expense and to require a full and complete justification therefor. Extensive hearings have been held on each item where any question arose in the minds of your committee that the Federal Government was expending money for which adequate returns were not received and where a saving might be made in the appropriation.

This bill, with but few exceptions, is the same as was passed in the last Congress.

After extensive hearings as to schools, your committee decided to adopt an amendment excluding children of less than one-fourth Indian blood where adequate school facilities exist in their own State, thus permitting Indian children now deprived of school facilities an opportunity to secure an education under the laws of the State wherein they live.

Extensive hearings were held as to the administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, and, after careful consideration, it is the opinion of the majority of your committee that the requirements specified in this bill as to future appropriations of money should be adopted. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated in the hearings that approximately $1,177,000 was expended for all purposes at the one agency at Muskogee, Okla. There being no Indians in Oklahoma for which rations are issued, this sum is thought by a majority of your committee to be entirely too large to be justified. Only $275,000 of the above amount was carried by the last appropriation bill. Only about $217,000 was used for equalization, leaving approximately $1,000,000 that was expended for salaries and expenses. The subcommittee of this committee interrogated Commissioner Valentine closely on this item, and it was the commissioner's opinion that a marked saving could be made in the administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes at that called. It was also developed in the Muskoge Agency and that the office was too highly organized and too expensive for the services rendered. It developed also in the hearings, and is a fact, that the rolls were closed March 4, 1907, hence no expensive for the services rendered. It developed also in the hearings, and is a fact, that the rolls were closed March 4, 1907, hence no expensive for the services rendered. It developed is in the hearings, and is a fact, that the unallotted lands of the Five Civilized Tribes have been wise of server for sale during the second of the property of immediately again offering the same for sale, and this feature of expense may be dispensed with.

We have eliminated the adjudication of all claims from this bill. We have eliminated the adjudication of all claims from this bill, and the bill as presented carries no unnecessary amounts of money known to us; on the other hand, we have appropriated as much money as we thought would meet the demands of the Indians for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have examined closely the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and all the information I could get relating to the appropriations carried in this bill, and of Indian lands, and I find that under an act of Congress of 1907 about 2,000,000 acres of land have been allotted to 13,000 Indians. Under that act each Indian was entitled to 320 acres of grassland and 160 acres of farming land, 40 acres of irrigable land, or an average of 153 acres per capita. The expenses of the allotment I find to be $215,000, or $16.70 per capita. I find 6,000 persons have been employed, according to the last report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in all the departments of this Indian Bureau, at an Affairs, in all the departments of this Indian Bureau, at an expense of $215,000. I find, further, that 6,000 employees have had control of 307,000 Indians, which is the entire number of Indians in the United States, including mixed bloods. Each employee has control of 51 Indians. I find by examination of reports from the Bureau of Indian Affairs that we have in the Indian schools 24,500 Indian pupils: that we have paid for education in the last fiscal year $3,519,605, or about $15 per capita. This per capita is high, for the reason that many of these schools are nonreservation schools, where we are appropriating guite a lot of money for transportation, board, and propriating quite a lot of money for transportation, board, and maintenance of pupils.

The reservation schools have appropriated for their special $1,450,000. The nonreservation schools are $1,644,605 per annum. The school buildings are of the value of For all educational purposes we are using annually $3,519,605, leaving for all other purposes $3,945,655, making a

The industrial work—that is, teaching Indian students agriculture and mechanical pursuits-amounted last fiscal year to about $400,000, making a grand total of $3,919,605, or nearly $4,000,000, out of the $7,000,000, in round numbers, for all the money used in the Indian Bureau for all Indian purposes.

I find that we have many excellent nonreservation Indian Among these are some excellent industrial schools, especially Carlisle and the Sherman Institute, and others that I will not undertake now to mention. Many of these schools are situated in the West, and I know that they are doing excellent work; but, Mr. Chairman, I believe that this Government should provide Indian day schools on the reservations and not build any more nonreservation schools. I do not subscribe to the doctrine that we should give a college education to Indian children, but we should give them common-school education; and this should be done in day schools on their reservations. This should be done at or near the home of the Indians, and could be done there for much less than the high estimate here of $15 for each Indian child educated off the reservation in boarding schools in some far-away State.

Mr. Chairman, I have given these facts and figures in order to meet the arguments of some men living in the East who have been taught all their lives to believe that the Indians have been wronged and robbed by our Government, I defy any man to show that any Government has ever used the efforts that this Government has used to civilize and make easy the mode of life of any of its wards. You will not find in the history of any nation where the aborigines have been as well treated and cared for as have the Indians of our country. Compare their present condition with the condition that they were in before the white people came to this country and organized this Government and you find that the criticisms of the eastern people and humanitarian societies are unjust and unfounded, and that the condition of the Indians at the present time is immeasurably better than before the palefaces came here. reason for the belief that the white man always robs the Indian; neither do I think that all good Indians are dead ones. The figures I have given here will, I hope, clearly bear out my contention.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr.

BURKE | to consume some of his time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything on this bill at this time. five-minute rule I shall discuss some of the provisions of the bill, and will only want to make a very brief statement now. In many respects the bill meets my approval. The appropriations are within the estimates. In fact, they are lower, I think, in practically every instance than the estimates. The amounts carried by the bill are substantially the amounts in the last Indian appropriation act. There is very little legislation in the bill. I think perhaps the most important legislative provision is one which prohibits the expenditure of public funds in the education of Indian children of less than one-quarter Indian bleed under certain conditions. I think it is good legislation.

I do, however, take exception to the report submitted by the committee with reference to the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, and particularly in reference to the discontinuance of what are known as the district agents. The report which has been read from the desk discloses that it is the report of the majority of the committee. The minority of the committee did not file minority views, because it is rather unusual for the minority to file views on an appropriation bill, but I want it distinctly understood that the minority do not concur with the views of the majority as set forth in the report, and that when we reach the portion of the bill where the items that are discussed in the report, with which we do not agree, are contained, I then propose to state my reasons, and I am sure other members of the minority of the committee will join in expressing their opposition to the position taken by the majority. I hope when that time comes we may have a full attendance in the House, so that the Members will understand what the propositions are that we differ about.

The most I want to do at the present time is to bring to the attention of this committee the fact that the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs are not unanimous in the con-clusions of this report, so far as the same refers to the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, and particularly with reference to the discontinuance of the district agents.

Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Jackson].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care at this time to anything upon this bill. As the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] has intimated, other members of the committee, as well as myself, may have something to say upon specific provisions of the bill in the five-minute debate.

At the present time I wish to say a few words concerning the so-called excise tax bill. My excuse for introducing that subject again is that the other day, when the constitutionality of this law was attacked, certain Members on the other side of the House seemed to resent it. The author of the bill, and of the House seemed to resent it. The author of the bill, and even the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] seemed not only to resent it, but to be somewhat annoyed by the fact that certain Members on this side of the House refrained from voting, or voted against that bill, because they said, on its face, the law showed that it was unconstitutional.

Mr. Chairman, during the discussion of that bill the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner] introduced an amendment proposing to exempt from the provisions of the tax the salaries of the Federal judges of the country and other judicial officers.

The amendment was not only rejected, but Members on that side of the aisle rejected it with certain glee and jocularity. They seemed to think it was funny that any Member of this House should question the right, as the gentleman from Illinois Mr. Foster] expressed it, to tax Federal judges. For that reason I am going to ask to have read, in my time, a certain document which I discovered of record in the files of the Supreme Court of this country. Before I do so, however, I wish to observe that this is not the first time that Congress has undertaken to tax the salaries of Federal judges and to retain in the Treasury a part of the compensation which Congress had voted them, and which Members will remember the Constitution provides shall not be diminished during the term of office of the Federal judges. On this occasion, when Congress before attempted this, the tax was not collected, because the Chief Justice of the United States, Justice Taney, wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury and directed that officer not to collect the tax, because it was unconstitutional, and also directed that that letter be spread upon the records of the court. thought perhaps some of our friends upon the other side of the aisle might be interested in what this eminent judicial authority of the Democratic Party had to say upon that question. desire also to read the concluding sentences of a decision in the Court of Claims, to be found in the Court of Claims Reports, volume 26, page 274, in which case the heirs of Justice Wayne of the Supreme Court of the United States recovered the amount of that tax paid by Chief Justice Wayne, without protest. The decision concludes as follows:

Another defense is set up that the application of the income tax to the salaries of Federal judges was not erroneous and that the deductions from such salaries were not illegal. In view of the opinion of the Attorney General in 1869 (13 Opin., 131) and of the protest of Chief Justice Taney, on file in the Supreme Court and read in the trial of the case, as well as the actual refund to all the judges except those in like condition of Mr. Justice Wayne, and the general acquiescence of the profession in that view of the law, we shall not at this late date enter upon the consideration of that question.

In other words, the Court of Claims held that it was so apparent and so evident to every one that such a tax would be unconstitutional that it would not be considered.

Mr. Chairman, the point about this is, and I think most of the lawyers of this House will agree with me, that a bill which upon its very face fixes a measure of taxation which is manifestly illegal and unconstitutional must be unconstitutional as a whole, and that this provision which has been insisted upon, upon the other side of the House, is liable to, and in all probability will, render the entire law unconstitutional. This may also be noticed as a fair sample of caucus legislation. Bills are not read in caucus or carefully considered, but passed by title or general understanding. now ask that the letter of Chief Justice Taney be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Extract from the minutes of the Supreme Court of the United States. December term, 1862. March 10, 1863.] ORDER OF COURT.

Ordered, Upon the request of the Chief Justice, that the following letter from him to the Secretary of the Treasury be entered on the records of the court:

WASHINGTON, February 16, 1863.

Sin: I find that the act of Congress of the last session imposing a tax of 3 per cent on the salaries of all officers in the employment of the United States has been construed in your department to embrace judicial officers, and the amount of the tax has been deducted from the salaries of the judges.

The first section of the third article of the Constitution provides that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges of both the Supreme and inferior courts shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office."

The act in question, as you interpret it, diminishes the compensation of every judge 3 per cent, and if it can be diminished to that extent by the name of a tax it may in the same way be reduced from time to time at the pleasure of the legislature.

The judiciary is one of the three great departments of the Government, created and established by the Constitution. Its duties and powers are specifically set forth and are of a character that requires it to be perfectly independent of the two other departments, and in order to place it beyond the reach and above even the suspicion of any such influence the power to reduce their compensation is expressly withheld from Congress and excepted from their powers of legislation.

Language could not be more plain, than that used in the Constitution. It is moreover one of its most isaportant and essential provisions, for the articles which limit the powers of the legislative and executive branches of the Government and those which provide safeguards for the protection of the citizen in his person and property would be of little value without a judiciary to uphold and maintain them which was free from every influence, direct or indirect, that might by possibility in times of political excitement warp their judgments.

Upon these grounds I regard an act of Congress retaining in the Treasury a portion of the compensation of the judges as unconstitutional and void, and I should not have troubled you with this letter if there was any mode by which the question could be decided in a judicial proceeding. But all of the judg

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Morrison having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bills of the following titles:

S. 252. An act to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau;

S. 5718. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to secure for the United States title to patented lands in the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes; S. 2434. An act providing for an increase of salary of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut; and

S. 3475. An act extending the time of payment to certain homesteaders on the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 19) relating to the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (8, 2819) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1890 and 1900.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I feel almost like making an apology to the members of the committee for rising to make even a few remarks on the frayed and tattered subject of the tariff. It is, however, the "old. old story." I only do so because I desire that there shall go into the record of the proceedings of this House a few observations on transportation and its relation to the rates of duty which should be collected on manufactured products at our ports of entry.

The president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., the leading independent producer of steel and iron in this country, states that if the steel schedule which passed this House of late should become a law that he will sell out his property and retire from business. He states that the question is altogether a matter of wages for the workingman, and that the American manufacturers can not compete with foreign makers of steel if duties are reduced below the rates of the Payne law. He states that under equal conditions steel can be made as cheaply in the United States as in any other country. He does not say that it is made as cheaply, nor does he say that it can be made as cheaply unless we can compel the American workingman to accept the same scale of wages paid abroad. He further states that if labor was as cheap here as abroad that he and his association in the great steel business of the country would ask no protection whatever.

DANGER FROM OUTSIDE COMPETITION CONSTANTLY INCREASING.

"Our plant," he says, "is only 100 miles from New York, and it costs as much to put our steel there as it does to bring it from Holland." He states emphatically that the present tariff rate is necessary to the prosperity of the steel business.

The point which I desire to bring to the attention of this House to-day is that with freight rates by rail and by water constantly decreasing there is a greater demand for protection from foreign competition than ever before, This need is in the very nature of things.

The distance which foreign goods must be carried and the cost of transportation over that distance alone serve to create a protective wall for the domestic producer. In late years these conditions of distance and transportation have absolutely changed. The railroad and the modern steamship have reduced the cost of transportation compared with that in the early part or even in the middle of the century just ended, while the tele-graph and the telephone have annihilated distance and time.

Merchandise from the interior of Europe, ordered by tele-phone, telegraph, and cable, transported from its place of production by trolley road, canalized rivers, or boats operated by steam or electricity, or by railway to the Atlantic, and thence by great steamships, built to carry hundreds of carloads at a single voyage, across the ocean, and again transported to the interior of the United States by the cheapest land transportation ever known to man, can be placed at the door of the consumer in the Mississippi Valley for a very small percentage of the cost of transporting the same at the middle of the last century.

CHEAP FREIGHTS HAVE DESTROYED NATURAL PROTECTION.

As a result the protection which distance and the cost of transportation afforded to the local producer has disappeared, and without a protective tariff established by the Government, he has as his direct competitor the low-priced labor of any and every part of the world. The cheap labor of the densely populated countries of Europe, the 140,000,000 low-priced workers of Russia, the 300,000,000 people of India, whose average wage is but a few cents per day, and the 400,000,000 workers of China are to-day as much the competitors of the workman of the United States as though they were located but just across the border. Modern methods of transportation and communication have brought these great masses of producers to our very doors, and without the protection which the tariff affords would place that cheap labor in as close competition with our own as it would have been a half century ago if located but a hundred miles away.

As an example of the reduction in cost of transportation may be cited the fact that the annual average freight rate on wheat from Chicago to Liverpool by the cheapest method of transportation in 1873 was 40 cents per bushel and in 1912 8 cents per bushel, or but one-fifth that of only a decade ago. Comparing conditions now with those of the early part of the last century, the reduction is still greater, and the cost of transportation at the present time may safely be said to be less than one-tenth of that then existing. An illustration of the reduction in cost of transportation through modern methods is found in the fact that the census of 1880 showed that the railways could transport a ton of wheat for a given distance as cheaply as a single bushel could be transported the same distance by horsepower, and railway rates have fallen practically one-half since that time. That high authority, the Encyclopedia Britan-nica, states in its 1903 edition that the mechanic in Liverpool may now pay with one day's wages the entire cost of transporting a year's supply of bread and meat for one man from Chicago to that city.

Originally the danger to domestic industries from foreign competition was much less than at the present time. Mer-chandise brought into any country from abroad must first be at the cost of transportation, and in times when the cost of transportation was great, and when goods were necessarily trans-ported by animal power and by sailing vessels only, this high cost of carriage was of itself a protection to the domestic producer in any country. True, the producer of merchandise just across the border line of a country had an enormous advantage over the producer a thousand or five thousand miles distant, but as only a small proportion of the producers were located near to the border line such countries did not find it necessary to establish high tariffs to protect their own producers or manufacturers.

These facts illustrate how completely modern methods have destroyed the protection which the local producer formerly had against foreign competitors and explain the reason why modern governments have found it necessary, one by one, to adopt the protective system, until now many men in the most ardent and chief remaining supporter of the nonprotective system, the United Kingdom, are seriously discussing the adoption of a protective tariff. This gradual destruction of the natural protection formerly afforded by distance and cost of transportation accounts for the fact that it has been found necessary to maintain the protective tariff on the various industries as they have developed, and that this necessity for maintaining protection for those industries has meantime been recognized by all other leading manufacturing countries of the world whose industries were developed even before those of the United States, except in the case of the United Kingdom, whose people are now clamoring for a return to protection of their long-established domestic industries. This reduction in cost of transportation is indeed one of the chief causes of the steady movement toward protection, which has characterized the history of the world during the last half century. The fact that, with improved methods of transportation and a narrowing of distances and cheapening of cost of transportation, the whole world has become the next-door neighbor of each community has compelled that community to establish tariff duties of a character which would reduce the competition offered by the cheap labor of those communities, against which distance no longer affords protec-

Practically all of the 500,000 miles of railway and 16,000,000 tons of steamship tonnage with which the world is now supplied have been created since the middle of the last century; the world's international commerce has quadrupled while the world's population was increasing but 50 per cent; and during that very period the nations of the world have, one by one, found it necessary to establish tariff protection to take the place of that protection which distance and high cost of transportation formerly afforded. [Applause.]

However full, with something more We fain the bag would cram, We sigh above our crowded nets For fish that nover swam. No bounty of indulgent heaven Our vain desires can stay. Self-love is still the tartar mill For grinding prayers alway.

The man who pleads for the "poor consumer" usually forgets that every man is a producer before he can be a consumerevery citizen except the pauper, the criminal, and the idle rich.

There were 270,000 wage earners in the iron and steel blast furnaces and rolling mills in 1910; multiply this by 5 to include wives and children. Are not these people consumers? One hundred and fifty thousand more in the smaller steel industry, with their families as well. Do they not consume?

The wages paid in this industry for 1910 was $180,000,000. In the woolen industry alone 168,000 wage earners with annual wages of $7,243,000. And so on through the whole list of industries, trades, professions, and callings, with the exception of the three undesirable classes which I have above enumerated. It makes up practically our whole body politic.

Every consumer is a producer, but he is a producer before he is a consumer, and the Republican Party, through the principle of the protective tariff, has ever had regard to the earning and purchasing power of the citizen to the just reward of his productivity, whether through capital or labor, to the end that he may have the means to buy the necessaries of life and more besides. I believe that upon wages and the proper distribution of wealth is based the hopes of our future civilization. Our civilization is not one of class and cast, but one that tends to lift all to a higher level.

American exports increase from month to month. Although this is a presidential year, a time usually clouded with business hesitation, yet our American exports for the eight months ending March 1, were greater in value than in any corresponding eight months of any preceding year. The total was $640,000,000 against $571,000,000 for the corresponding months of 1911, and as against $491,000,000 for the same months in 1910 and, also, as against $420,000,000 for the corresponding months in 1909. It is estimated that the total exports for this fiscal year will be more than $1,000,000,000.

President Taft's administration is credited with having originated our present foreign policy. He is entitled to the credit. We hear it called "dollar diplomacy," and the splendid results above noted are its justification. Every country on the globe recognizes the value of the "dollar diplomacy" as one of the most potent agencies for peace among the nations. It has come to be realized that there is no bond so strong or that can be relied upon so safely to keep nations from engaging in serious disputes or actual warfare as commercial bonds. Notwithstanding the mournful cries of agitators and disappointed men, our natural business growth has gone forward and the exports of the United States show a trend toward prosperity throughout the whole land. Trade is resuming its normal flow and the general effect on the average man who labors and toils will be excellent. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I am authorized by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], in his absence, to vield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] the balance of the time upon this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

THE RECALL OF JUDGES AND OF DECISIONS.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, one of the leaders of the Republican Progressive League has said that a firm belief in the recall of judges by the people is the true acid test of a progressive. I dispute an analysis determined by any such chemistry. I deny the application of the epigram and in its place I offer a truer maxim. A firm belief in the founda-tions of our Federal Constitution is the rock from which the liberal reformer defies the radical destroyer. The people of this country are the motive power of the ship of state, the Congress chosen by the people is its rudder, and the Constitution adopted by the people as the expression of its profoundest beliefs is its ballast.

The reactionaries of this Nation are hopelessly routed and now, as always in the world's history, a new line of cleavage has appeared between the forces which have put the old order to flight.

On one side of this new line of cleavage we find the men who wish to prune and pare and train and cultivate the tree of life. On the other side we find the men who believe that the tree is so old and so rotten that it must be pulled up by the roots and a new one planted.

SELF-LIMITED DEMOCRACY V. PURE DEMOCRACY.

The issue is squarely joined between those who believe in a self-limited democracy and those who believe in a pure democracy.

A self-limited democracy is one which declares that it will bind itself and fortify itself against its own hasty, unjust, or oppressive action by imposing on itself a constitution. It is a democracy which declares that its constitution shall be based on eternal truths and on a full recognition of the rights of every man to his life, his liberty, and his property. Such a Constitution we now possess and, hitherto, since this Government was formed, save during the period of our Civil War, all the people have submitted to its restrictions. But now comes forward a body of men who call themselves Socialists and who deny the right of individuals to hold property. Joined with the Socialists in the movement for fundamental constitutional changes are those radicals who believe in private property, but base their faith on a pure democracy.

Let us see what a pure democracy is. Let us see what a purely democratic government must provide as its machinery. A pure democracy is a government where the will of the majority must at each and every moment be the supreme law of the land. A purely democratic government must obliterate the line which separates a constitutional provision from a law by making it possible for a majority of the people to disregard either at any time. Such a government will naturally provide an Initiative by which any reasonable number of voters may propose a law or a constitutional provision and a Referendum by which a majority of the voters may accept or reject a law or a constitutional provision. It will naturally provide an Imperative Mandate by which the majority of the voters may command the President or any executive officer to do its will, and a Recall of the President and of all other legislative and executive officers who shall fail to obey the orders of the majority or who shall perform their duties in an unsatisfactory manner. urally provide for the Review or Recall of Judicial Decisions and for the Review of Jury Verdicts when the voters so desire.

It will naturally provide for the Recall of Judges and, perhaps, for the punishment of juries who disobey the majority or perform their duties in an unsatisfactory manner. It will naturally provide for proportional and minority representation and for a single chamber, instead of the Senate and House. It ought to abolish the veto power of the President, and it must give the franchise to all adults living in the United States-men and women, black and white, citizens and aliens. When all these changes are adopted there will be a pure democracy in the United States.

THE IMMEDIATE PROGRAM.

Of course, there is to-day in this country no group of men calling for the immediate adoption of this whole program, but large numbers of our citizens are demanding that its cardinal points shall forthwith be made the law of the land. The campaign for the Initiative, Referendum, and Recall is in full swing, and the Review of Judicial Decisions has but recently been added to the immediate program.

The Review of Judicial Decisions has never been tried in this

The Initiative is new and is now undergoing a trial in some of the States of the Union.

The Referendum has always existed here in one form or another, though not in the form now advocated.

Elective officers, including elective judges, have always been subject to the Recall in the sense only that the voters might always decline to reelect them. o-day I shall only discuss the question of the Recall of Judges by the people, and to some extent, the Review of Judicial Decisions by the people.

TENURE OF JUDGES.

Since the foundation of our Government life judges in this country have never been subject to recall by the people, and, except recently in a few States, elected judges have been subject thereto only to the limited degree which periodical elections afford. Various means, however, of removing judges by the legislature have been in force in the different States. Some States, like Massachusetts, provide that judges may be removed on address by the legislative and executive power acting jointly, and the removal may be made for any reason or for no reason at all. In Massachusetts the joint action of the governor, the council, the senate, and the house is necessary for a removal by address.

All States provide for the removal by impeachment of judges who have been guilty of misconduct. For an impeachment, the concurrent action of the senate and the house is required, but no action by the governor is necessary.

All judges of the United States hold office during good behavior and can be removed only by impeachment. Yet such is the ingenuity of the American people that ways and means have always been found to remove life judges and superfluous judges when absolutely necessary for the public welfare, even if those This end has judges have committed no impeachable offense. been accomplished by reducing the number of judges and subsequently increasing them again. It has been accomplished abolishing a court and simultaneously creating a new one with a different name, but with practically the same functions. In my own State of Massachusetts, in 1859, the Court of Common Pleas was abolished and the Superior Court established for the express purpose of making a change in judges. The same device has again been employed in Massachusetts much more recently. A clumsy and difficult mode of procedure, I grant you, but effective for all that.

SOURCE OF THE DEMAND FOR RECALL.

It is only a few years since Mr. Dooley convulsed the country with laughter when he said that perhaps trade might not follow the flag, but that the Supreme Court followed the election re-turns. We acknowledged the exaggeration, but we admitted the grain of truth, because we knew full well that irremovable judges, like other men, only to a lesser degree, are influenced by changes in the times and changes in public sentiment. What reversal of opinion has come over the people so that to-day men listen eagerly when they are told that our Federal judges care nothing for public opinion and always decide questions in a narrow and reactionary spirit?

We are living in an age of discontent, much of it justifiable, much of it the artful creation of the demagogue. When men are discontented and filled with anger they do not attack with discrimination, but they attack blindly in all directions. For several years past the people have been turning out of power those representatives whose views do not meet their views and have been substituting men who share the same opinions as their electors. This is as it should be. This is the true remedy that which my constituents believe, it is my sworn duty to follow my own judgment while I am still in Congress; but nevertheless the people in my district should turn me out of Congress if our difference in views is important.

Why is it that in the wave of change which has swept over England the British judges and the British courts have not been the subject of attack? Why should discontent manifest itself in one direction at home and in another direction abroad?

It is partly because the British court procedure has been reformed and ours is still archaic. But why blame our courts for the use of worn-out tools? It is our legislatures and our lawyers who have been remiss in supplying them with no new ones, and the people ought not to tolerate this remissness one day longer.

Far more significant than any question of difference in procedure between the two countries is the fact that our courts are charged with two great unpopular functions which the British courts escape.

American courts must declare void all laws, no matter bow popular, which violate any of the provisions of our fundamental law, the Constitution.

As if that function were not sufficient cause for unpopularity, the additional duty is imposed on our judges of issuing injunctions in labor disputes, and they are further charged with the necessity of themselves punishing for contempt of court, without a jury trial, all citizens who violate those injunctions.

The burden of unpopularity arising from the constitutional necessity must be borne; but Congress and the legislatures of the States can and, as I believe, ought to remove the burden of unpopularity arising from the denial of a jury trial in proceedings for contempt to enforce injunctions.

Such are, for the most part, the motives which have led to a demand for the Recall of Judges by vote of the people.

AN "APPEAL TO BEASON."

Unfortunately, there is also a more sinister motive, confined however, I am confident, to a small minority of our people.

In California last autumn there was a campaign for the adoption in that State of the Recall of Judges by vote of the people.

The following article appeared in the Appeal to Reason, edited by Eugene V. Debs:

The fight at the polls this fall will center around the adoption of the initiative, referendum, and recall amendments to the constitution. Under the provisions of the recall amendment the judges of the Supreme Court of California can be retired. These are the men who will decide the fate of the kidnaped workers. Don't you see what it means, comrades, to have in the hands of an intelligent, militant working class the political power to recall the present capitalist judges and put on the bench our own men? Was there ever such an opportunity for effective work? No; not since socialism first raised its crimson banner on the shores of Morgan's country. The election for governor and State officers of California does not occur till 1914. But with the recall at our command we can put our own men in office without waiting for a regular election.

Can this mean anything except that Debs's object was to use the recall of judges for the purpose of securing the acquittal of the McNamara brothers? Few Socialists would knowingly lend their approval to such a motive.

THE CHARGES AGAINST THE JUDGES.

Whatever the causes may have been which breathed the breath of life into the movement for the Recall of Judges by the people, here are the principal counts in the indictment: That the courts, when they interpret the law, favor property rather than mankind; that the judges must necessarily become involved in politics, and often become the tools of their political allies; and that the judges are biased against all change in the existing order of things. Thank heaven a belief that judges act from corrupt motives has found no root in the American breast. The ermine is still glorious and unsmirched by the slime of the slanderer. Yet it has not escaped calumny. No mortal man can escape that, be he as chaste as snow and as pure as ice.

Prof. Beard, of Columbia College, who has published what is probably the best compilation in favor of the Initiative, Referendum, and Recall, tells us that judges must necessarily be drawn into politics, and Senator Jonathan Bourne, Jr., of Oregon, tells us that from one ocean to the other experience has taught us that some of them will be influenced by the wishes of the men to whom they owe their positions.

I believe that both Prof. Beard and Senator Bourne have in mind such judges as are elected or appointed for a fixed term of years. I am afraid that it is true that some weak judges, as the time for their reelection or reappointment approaches, may allow their eyes to wander to the political outlook of the moment instead of centering their regard wholly on the statute book. I feel that in such cases an unpopular litigant or a litigant with an unpopular cause might get something less than

For that reason I have no hesitation in pronouncing in favor and the only sure remedy. If I can not bring myself to believe of the Massachusetts judiciary system. Our judges, high or low, are all appointed for life by the governor of the State, and they never enter into politics. Why should they enter into politics? They have nothing to lose and nothing to gain by it. Of the Massachusetts system, more hereafter.

SENATOR OWEN'S INDICTMENT AND THE ANSWER.

In July, 1911, Senator Owen, of Oklahoma, chairman of the national committee of the Initiative and Referendum League of America, in order to prove his contention that the Supreme Court disregards the welfare of the people, presented a list of the specifications in his indictment.

He instanced certain taxation laws of certain States which have been set aside by the Supreme Court. The statute of Kansas imposing a special license tax on the Western Union Telegraph Co. is typical of this class of statute. It appears that the State of Kansas already fully taxed the Western Union Telegraph Co. for business done in Kansas, and this special license tax was an indirect endeavor to tax that company on business done in other States. Kansas, like many of the States of the Union, has been spending vast amounts of money, and it was not unnatural that its legislators should be willing to risk the constitutional question in an endeavor to compel outside business to assist in paying the bills of their own State. The Constitution does not permit the execution of such devices.

Senator Owen also tells us that the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution was adopted to guard the negro, but that it has been used to protect trusts and monopolies in imposing long hours of labor. The fourteenth amendment certainly was adopted primarily to guard the negro, but that part of the amendment to which Senator Owen refers was copied from the fifth amendment to the Constitution, adopted in 1791. The fourteenth amendment certainly never intended to give negroes greater rights than those accorded to white people.

The employers' liability act for the protection of employees was, as Senator Owen alleged, declared unconstitutional by five judges against four. The decision, however, related to the interference with State authority by the peculiar terms of the The act has since been react rather than to its essence. drafted and passed by Congress and the court has held it to be constitutional in its new form.

It is not true, as alleged by Senator Owen, that the arbitration act "passed as the result of the great strike in Chicago in 1894, was destroyed by the courts." A reference to the decision which he quotes shows that the arbitration act to which he refers was passed June 10, 1898, and that only one paragraph therein was declared unconstitutional. As a matter of fact this act, known as the Erdman Act, promises excellent results in the future.

It is not true that the interstate-commerce acts have been emasculated by the Supreme Court, and I can not understand how Senator Owen or anyone else can think so. The original interstate-commerce act and its amendments have brought the railroads under strict Government control.

It is true, as Senator Owen says, that in 1895 the income-tax law of 1894 was declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court, and the various States of the Union are now engaged in ratifying a proposed change in the Constitution designed to meet that decision.

No one denied the power of Congress to impose an income tax, provided that the amount of money to be drawn from each State in the Union should be in proportion to that State's population. No one denied the power of each State in the Union to impose within its own borders such an income tax as it might think fit.

But the income tax of 1894 was not apportioned among the States of the Union according to the population of each State. On the contrary, the amount to be raised in each State would be, roughly, in proportion to the total income of the citizens of that State.

The clauses in the Constitution on which the opponents of the tax relied read as follows: "Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their numbers," and No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken." It was not for the Supreme Court to consider the It was not for the Supreme Court to consider the merits of the law. The whole question at issue was as to whether an income tax is or is not a direct tax.

The Supreme Court decided that an income tax is a direct tax, and therefore declared the law of 1894 to be unconstitutional because it did not apportion the tax to the States according to their respective populations. I am not a lawyer, but it has always seemed to me that if an income tax is not a direct tax then nothing except a poll tax is a direct tax.

Justice Harlan dissented from the Supreme Court in the in-declares that Justice Harlan is a patriot and deserves the thanks of the country. I always admired the late Justice Harlan and I revere his memory, but I can not forbear to point out to Senator Owen that it was Justice Harlan who handed down the Kansas tax decision and the Arbitration Act decision which the Senator denounces in the same indictment.

SOME MODERN INSTANCES.

While Senator Owen is searching the records of the last 17 years to discover decisions of the Supreme Court with which to find fault, it is well to cite a few of its decisions which have upheld recent legislation. There is no need to go back 17 years. I shall confine myself to decisions fresh in all your memories, decisions handed down within the last two or three years. ' For examples, I call your attention to the decisions in favor of the Oklahoma Bank Act, the Oregon Initiative and Referendum Provision, the North Dakota Coal Rate Act, the United States Corporation Tax Act, the United States Safety-Appliance Act, and the United States Employers' Liability Act. Moreover, during the last few years there have been numerous decisions in cases arising under the Interstate Commerce Act and the Railroad Rate Act which have very much strengthened the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission in exercising its control over the railroads.

By a number of recent decisions of the Supreme Court the right of corporations to withhold their private books and papers from inspection by the authorities has been practically annulled,

I by no means deny that some cases have occurred in which the courts in some of our States have failed to construe constitutional provisions in the light of present-day conditions. Each and every one of these cases has been violently brought before the public, while the numberless cases in which the State courts have shown themselves fully alive to the expansion of modern thought have passed quite unnoticed.

Throughout this discussion it is well to remember that only that small percentage of laws which contain provisions of doubtful meaning or of doubtful constitutionality is likely to require interpretation by our Supreme Courts, State or National.

A SELF-CONTAINED REMEDY.

After all, a decision that a wise law is unconstitutional carries its own remedy with it. If the decision is correct, experience has shown either that the law will be amended or else that the Constitution will be altered in the prescribed manner. If, on the other hand, the decision is incorrect, other courts in other States will rule differently on the same question. A new law will be passed, substantially the same as the old one, and this time it will be found constitutional.

THE RECALL OF JUDGES WILL BE SLOW TO SHOW RESULTS.

I assume that we shall all agree that the Recall of Judges, if it should be adopted, would be slow to show evil results, even though every day it might be undermining our system of government. If the State were to dissolve the marriage tie, the results would by no means show at once. Most of us would continue to live with our wives as heretofore, but here and there, day by day, family life would be undermined by hastily contracted and quickly dissolved alliances until at last the whole rottenness of the system would be exposed. For 50 years after it joined the Union, the State of Rhode Island lived under a constitution or charter which practically could not be amended. It was a thoroughly vicious system, as all men can see to-day, yet the State lived under it for half a century before it resulted in the armed uprising of the people known to American history as Dorr's rebellion.

If, as I believe, the adoption of a provision for the Recall of Judges should put fear into the hearts of men who ought to be fearless, it by no means follows that all at once the entire bench would become cowards. The poison would be slow but sure. It might be many, many years before the public would realize that it was suffering from cowardly judges, that industry languished, perhaps, because capital had become timid, and that men's rights were but doubtfully assured. Even then it might be many more years before the people would surrender the power of Recall. Flatterers of the voters would prove to them that all which was needed was a few amendments, larger percentages of the population to sign the Recall petition, and changes of that sort. If the people once decide to assume the power to Recall the Judiciary, even if it prove to be a great error, yet they will not relinquish that power until the havoc which it has wrought is patent to every eye.

TIMID JUDGES.

The people believe that Congressmen are cowardly. extent that is the truth. How could it be otherwise? Can a married man, middle-aged or advanced in years, face with the dauntlessness of a hero the prospect of a return to private life, come-tax decision. For this act and for others Senator Owen | followed by an attempt to gather together the remnants of a shattered law practice? Unless he has means of his own, such courage is hardly to be expected. Can any Congressman, rich or poor, fail to quiver at the thought of the wound to his pride and self-esteem which defeat would entail? He who could descend the ladder of power without pain and without humiliation never could have climbed it at all.

How can we be otherwise than cowardly? If against our true beliefs we bow to the wishes of our electors, then they rightfully despise us. If, on the other hand, we fail to yield, then they rightfully defeat us. In politics, as in war, long life and courage do not often go hand in hand. If it were otherwise, courage would not be courage but rather policy.

Many of you have been judges. Most of you are of the caliber of which judges are made. Place my friend here at my left on the bench with a life tenure and he will be as brave and impartial and upright as a man can be. Place him on the bench for a long term of years and he will be a little less brave and a little less impartial, especially as election time or the time for reappointment draws near. Place him on the bench for a term of five years and he will be timid and yielding. Suspend the Recall over his head and he will ultimately become as timid as we Congressmen. The old traditions of the bench will support his independence for a while, but sooner or later the same causes which make us timid will produce a like effect on him.

Let us concede that in the nature of things Congressmen must be more or less yielding and more or less timid; do the people wish their judges reduced to this same level? "But," says the academic philosopher, "the people will make up their opinions according to a judge's full record. They will respect a courageous judge and will refuse to recall him."

Experience has taught all practical politicians that it is a great error to suppose that men will habitually vote for the candidates whom they respect. As a rule, men will vote for the candidates who will give them what they want, and men easily persuade themselves that that which they want ought in justice to be given to them. Furthermore, it is not true that men as a whole judge candidates by their entire records. Men forget, new voters come forward, and a candidate is only too likely to be judged by his most recent action. One of the most moving sights I ever saw in this Hall was at the expiration of the last Congress, when a venerable Democratic Member arose to bid us farewell. He had served his district and the people faithfully for 20 years, as we well knew. He had never been attacked by his constituents for any vote he ever cast except one, but that one vote was fatally fresh in the minds of the people. He had voted on the unpopular side on a question of the rules of the House, and it was feared that he might do so again. No political change had taken place in his district; but his former services were forgotten and he was defeated.

COMMON GROUND.

I suppose that we shall all agree that no plan for the selection or tenure of judges can be perfect. "To produce good without some admixture of ill is the prerogative of the Deity What we are all seeking is not a perfect system, but the best method by which we may obtain and retain just and impartial judges.

I suppose that we shall further agree that if the recall is once established as the law of the land it will not be possible to restrain its use. Those who believe that it will be used only as a last recourse will find that it can as readily be used as a first resource.

The contention that public business should be conducted on the same principles as private business, and that every corporation retains the right to recall its agents, appears to me hardly worth an answer. In the first place, the judge is not an agent, but, rather, a referee. In the second place, public business can never be conducted like private business for the simple : cason that it is not private business. In all private corporations men vote in proportion to the number of their shares. Does anyone suppose that such a system could be applied in matters of government?

Stripping the discussion of the Recall of Judges by the people of all minor issues and of all casuistry, two great questions First, ought judges to be more accountable to the people than they are now? Second, if greater accountability is desirable, will or will not its advantages be more than offset by an inferior type of judge on our benches?

OUGHT THE MAJORITY TO RULE WITHOUT RESTRAINT?

The theory that the majority of the people should have the right to recall judges who render decisions not to their liking, and the theory that the people should have the right to recall or overrule the decisions themselves, both rest on the assumption that the majority should have the right to govern in any way that it sees fit. Here is the fundamental error. The majority must govern, yet it must not govern for the majority alone, but for the whole people. In order that it may not sacrifice the rights of the minority, their rights are set forth and protected in the Constitution.

The United States Constitution prescribes the powers which shall vest in the National Government. It also enumerates certain powers which neither the National nor the State Governments are to possess. For instance, the Constitution forbids either the National or the State Governments to pass a law taking away any man's right to be tried by jury, if he is accused of crime.

It forbids the passage of a law taking away one man's property and giving it to another man or to any number of men.

It forbids the passage of a law permitting slavery.

It forbids the passage of a law depriving any man of his vote on account of his race.

It forbids the passage of a law impairing the obligation of a contract. For example, if the State of Massachusetts were to issue 4 per cent bonds to the people, then the State is forbidden to pass a subsequent law reducing the rate of interest to 3 per cent on the bonds already sold.

IS MANKIND JUST?

Most men will admit that all those provisions in the Constitution are just and sound. Many of you perhaps will say that the majority of the people would never at any time vote to set aside any judicial decision based on those principles. I am by no means so sure of that. Let us see.

Do the people always allow jury trials to men accused of crimes which arouse violent popular indignation? The record of lynchings participated in by entire communities would seem to show the contrary.

Are men always considerate of each other's property rights? If the question were put to the whole people to-day whether men of the Slavonic race, for instance, should have the right to vote, are you quite sure that the majority would not vote

If I recollect rightly, I have heard of States trying to repudiate their bonds. Suppose some small State should issue bonds for internal improvements at 4 per cent interest, and suppose that those bonds were taken by Wall Street capitalists. Suppose; furthermore, that times were to become hard and that this State needed money for its own citizens, are you perfectly sure that a majority of the people of that State, under the guise of a special tax or otherwise, might not vote to reduce that interest to 3 per cent? Even the fact that those bonds had been sold by the Wall Street capitalists to savings banks might not save them, and the poor depositors in the savings banks might well be the true sufferers.

Now, if a majority will do any or all of those things, will it not also overturn any decision of a court which tries to interfere, if the Recall or Review of Court Decisions is permitted? Will that majority tolerate any judge who stands in the way of its will if it has the right to recall him? Does not the whole history of the world show that unrestrained majorities are tyrannical and unjust? Ask the first Irishman you see whether he thinks the English majority has been just to the Irish

The fact is that in its very nature a constitution is a contract which the citizens of a country make with each other, promising each other to do certain things and not to do certain other things, until the contract or constitution shall be changed by amendment. And right here appears the fallacy of the argument that if the people are competent to adopt a constitution they must be competent to declare what they meant when they adopted it; in other words, they must be capable of interpreting This means that a majority of the people is the proper interpreter of the meaning of a contract or constitution made especially to secure the rights of the minority. In other words a majority which has made a law is to be empowered with the right to decide whether or not the provisions of its own law fall within the limitations previously agreed upon by the Con-That this position is untenable can be seen by reducing an illustration to a small scale.

A PACIFIC ISLAND—THE CONSTITUTION INTERPRETED BY VOTE OF THE PEOPLE,

Suppose five men live on an island in the Pacific, and suppose that they all raise cattle. Inevitably disputes will arise, and some sort of government must be formed to prevent blood-shed and destruction. They agree to fence off their lots and to keep their cattle within their own boundaries and not to slaughter or appropriate each other's animals. That agreement is a constitution.

The strongest man and the weakest man alike agree to it and all the men disarm. There comes a heavy storm and blows down one man's fences. His cattle escape, damage his neighbors' crops, and pasture on their lands. Thereupon his neighbors each slaughter one of the escaped animals for his own use. The owner of the cattle declares that his neighbors have violated the constitution by slaughtering his cattle. neighbors contend that he himself has violated the constitution by not keeping up his fences and that they have suffered damage thereby. "Moreover," they say, "we are a majority of the people and we decide that we have not violated the constitution." Whereupon the owner of the cattle would probably arm himself once more and hire one of the people to fight on his side. How much better it would have been if those five men in the first place had chosen the wisest man as judge and had agreed to regard his decisions as final. Perhaps you think that the majority of those people were entitled to interpret for themselves the constitution which they had adopted.

HAVE HUMAN BEINGS NO ABSOLUTE RIGHTS?

A little over half a century ago the world was startled by a doctrine which found great currency in many States of the Union. The dictum went forth that the negro had no rights which the white man was bound to respect. And now the doc-trine is gaining ground that the minority of the people have no rights which the majority may not vote to overthrow if it sees fit. That, in plain English, is the doctrine of the "Review of Judicial Decisions by the People."

The doctrine of the "Recall of the Judiciary by the People."

is not quite so extreme, because some courageous judges will be found who will face the recall and face a poverty-stricken and humiliating old age rather than render a decision, no matter how popular, which runs counter to the Constitution.

Just so a number of Republican Senators were found who had the courage to break away from the Republican Party and vote against the impeachment of Andrew Johnson. Nearly every student of history to-day recognizes that those Senators were in the right, yet no one of them was reelected to the Senate, and it is told that one of them ended his life as a crossing sweeper.

THE BILL OF RIGHTS.

There is no case arising under the Constitution to which there are not two parties. If the question in dispute rests on the constitutionality of a law, then there is a majority of the people on one side and a minority of the people on the other. To hold that the judge is the agent of that majority is to make of him an advocate, not a judge.

The Massachusetts Bill of Rights, adopted in 1780. declares: It is the right of every citizen to be tried by judges as free, impartial, and independent as the lot of humanity will admit.

But can a judge with the recall hanging over his head be as free, as impartial, and as independent as the lot of humanity

Will dependence on the majority lead to independence of the wishes and hopes of that majority?

Rufus Choate describes the duty of a judge in these words:

He shall know nothing about the parties, everything about the case. He shall do everything for justice; nothing for himself; nothing for his friend; nothing for his patron; nothing for his sovereign. If on one side is the executive power and the legislature and the people—the sources of his honor, the givers of his daily bread—and on the other an individual nameless and odious, his eye is to see neither, great nor small.

Do you believe that judges, with the sword of recall hanging over them, could possibly avoid being conscious of the probable political consequences to themselves arising out of unpopular decisions or out of decisions against powerful interests or against powerful counsel?

WHAT SORT OF JUDGES SHOULD WE GET UNDER THE RECALL SYSTEM?

In a certain city in Massachusetts it used to be said that no mayor could ever last long. If he enforced the liquor laws, he was defeated, and if he refrained from enforcing them, he met the same fate. Do you care to put your judges in that position? What sort of men do you think would consent to become judges under such conditions?

Let any lawyer of standing ask himself whether he would accept the position of judge under a recall system. Most of you will say "no." Failures at the bar might clutch at the you will say "no." Failures at the bar might clutch at the straw. Ambitious young lawyers might be candidates under this uncertain tenure. Probably most of these ambitious young lawyers would accept the office as an advertisement and a help toward building up the private practice to which they intend to return. How many successful men deeply learned in the laws would care to put aside their practice for the uncertain tenure of a judgeship?

The salary of a judge is small compared to that which the majority of our Federal judges could earn in private practice. Yet they have accepted the smaller salary because the appointment assures their future for life, modestly but very honorably.

Once establish the Recall and every able man before becoming a judge will carefully weigh the situation which will confront him. He will not fail to realize that he may be called upon to decide questions which involve the press, which involve elections, which involve religious questions, which involve powerful corporations, which involve employers and employed, which involve liquor laws, which involve cases for damages where the community is the defendant and some unpopular citizen the plaintiff.

No judge can escape such embarrassing cases, and no human being can deny that often a judge would be in danger of recall, no matter which way he should decide the cases brought before him. Will such a prospect as that attract the kind of man whom the people desire as judge? Says the casuist, "Do you mean to say that an honest and upright man will hesitate to accept a judicial office merely because he may some time be called on to face a fair trial by the citizens? Can he not trust the people to acquit him if he has done no wrong?" I mean to say exactly that. Every man within the I mean to say exactly that. Every man within the sound of my voice often does things which he feels to be right, knowing full well all the time that he might have the greatest difficulty in persuading a censorious world of the purity of his motives.

A "FAIR TRIAL BY THE CITIZENS,"

But would the Recall be a "fair trial by the citizens"? By no means. It would be a trial in which the accused must face not only his judges but at the same time another candidate for his position. Perhaps this other candidate might be more popular. Perhaps while the judge was secluded in his office the other candidate might have been continually building up his political strength with the new voters. A fair trial im-plies that the defendant may summon witnesses and crossexamine them. A fair trial implies that the defendant's side shall be heard by jurymen who shall listen attentively to the whole case. Under the Recall the accused has no such rights. He can not bring before the public the newspapers or magazines which have been breathing insinuations against him, He can not cross-examine his accusers. He can not compel voters to listen to his side of the case. He can not compel the newspapers to be just in their treatment of the evidence. No one can picture the situation of such a judge better than it was pictured on the floor of this House last May:

pictured on the floor of this House last May:

The recall is a political indictment found without evidence, charging no offense, moral or legal, presented to the entire community as a court. The defendant is stripped of all presumptions. He can not answer the charge, because no charge is necessary to convict him.

The answer is made that the recall simply affords the judge an opportunity to go before the people at another election.

Yes; but how does he go? Does he go as a clean-hearted, clear-headed candidate, resting his claims upon his ability as a judge or his honor as a man? Does he go with pride gathered as the fruits of a nisctul life? Does he go as the embodiment of courage and particitism? No; he goes with character dismantled by the attacks of those who would destroy him. He goes with his oath of office broken by the furtive whisperings of those who hold a grudge. He goes with his honor stained by the vulgar hands of the reckless accuser. He goes leaving his family at home in the shadow of disgrace. He goes, impugned, impeached, outraged, and dishonored, not so much to regain the worthless office, but to restore his shattered fame and recover his foreclosed honor.

How will it finally affect the character of our judiciary? What ultimate contribution will it make to the stability of good government?

Would the possibility of a trial of this kind attract to the

Would the possibility of a trial of this kind attract to the bench the kind of men whom we need?

THREE WORLD-WIDE MOVEMENTS.

In the last 150 years there have been three separate epochs when world-wide discontent and world-wide change have simultaneously manifested themselves.

In the first of these epochs occurred the uprising of Poland under Kosciuszko, the American Revolution, the French Revolution, and an entire change in the map of Europe.

The second of these epochs was marked by the revolution of 1848 in France, the uprisings of Garibaldi in Italy, of Kossuth in Austria-Hungary, the overthrow of the Sonderbund in Switzerland, and the Chartist upheaval in England. During this second epoch we Americans were engaged in a war with Mexico, which for a short space of time distracted the minds of the people. The spirit of discontent, however, manifested itself here, not only by the rapid growth of the movement against slavery, but by various other movements of a popular nature. For example, in a single decade seven States of the Union adopted the system of electing their judges, a policy previously unknown in this country.

The present epoch of change and discontent began with fundamental reforms in New Zealand. During the last 10 years Australia, Great Britain, Germany, and France have been struggling with the new problems. Revolutions and changes in forms of government have occurred in the last decade in Russia, Persia, Turkey, Portugal, and China.

It was during the first epoch of world-wide change that our National Constitution was adopted. Singularly enough both National Constitution was adopted. Singularly enough, both parties to the discussion of the question of the Recall of Judges by the people quote the sayings of the fathers who built that Constitution. Jefferson was our minister to France during the framing of the Constitution, so he had no part in the work. Nevertheless, both sides quote him to prove their respective

I am by no means one who thinks that all wisdom died with the fathers; neither am I one who believes that their wisdom can be lightly disregarded.

A son standing on his father's shoulders can see a greater distance than his sire, but the range of his vision is destroyed should he attempt to rely on his own stature alone. Wisdom is cumulative. Each age adds its wisdom and experience to the wisdom and experience of the ages that have gone before. How foolish, therefore, would our own age show itself to be were we to refuse consideration to the wisdom and experience of the fathers of the Constitution.

In the Constitutional Convention of 1787 a proviso was offered to make the Federal judges removable by the President on the application of the Senate and the House. But one State voted in favor of this proviso; so that to-day our Federal judges are appointed by the President for life and can only be removed by finding them guilty on impeachment. You may quote Jefferson as you choose. "The devil can quote scripture for his pur-

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman refers to people quoting Jefferson. Jefferson never suggested any idea that the appointment of a judge should be passed on by the people. He simply suggested that the judges should be appointed for definite periods, confirmed by two-thirds of the Senate in the first instance; and if the same judge was reappointed, that his confirmation should be by a vote of two-thirds of the House. He never suggested they should be elected by popular vote, or that their decisions should be submitted to the vote of the people.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It was in 1816 that he made that suggestion, was it not?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; about that time, after the decision in the case of Cohens v. Virginia, by Chief Justice Marshall.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The fact remains that even this modified method of removal by Congress was sustained in the Constitutional Convention by the vote of only one State. To be sure Senator Owen explains all this by telling us that the fathers who wrote the Constitution were reactionaries. The world has always thought otherwise.

The German historian, Von Holst, in his History of the Constitution of the United States, gives a most interesting account of the movement toward a pure democracy in the second epoch of discontent and change which I have specified. Speaking of this country in the middle of the last century, he says-I quote from the translation:

How strong this tendency to the radicalization of democracy was can best be seen by the many efforts, more or less successful, made in many States to apply even to the judicial office the principles of pure democracy.

He then quotes many of the arguments and speeches made for and against bringing the courts under popular control. The reasons urged on both sides are precisely the same arguments which are being formulated to-day. Even the terminology used is exactly the same. The so-called "Progressive Democracy" of Mississippi undertook to interrogate all candidates for judgeships as to what their decisions would be on the question of the right of that State to repudiate its debts.

Von Holst says:

With the utmost shamelessness it was declared to be a public right to pledge judicial candidates before their election to decide questions which might be brought before their court in a certain way, because, according to the genuine democratic principle, public opinion ought to be the law of the land.

The great German historian then points out that the Supreme Court had by no means stood still, as alleged, nor had it been a rock against which the waves of public opinion had broken in vain. Said Von Holst:

The truer comparison would be with a glacier, stiff and firm and yet moving forward, and, as it slides down, always adapting itself to the bed on which it lies. Slowly and quietly the Supreme Court had changed with the times.

Slowly, quietly, and surely will the Supreme Court always change with the times if its independence is respected. But should its independence be wrested from it, rashly and rapidly will it leap from innovation to innovation, hurriedly will it seek to reflect each irresponsible impulse of the hour, until the time will come when the world shall say that the greatest tribunal ever devised by the mind of mortal has become a victim to the folly of mankind.

SOME MASSACHUSETTS HISTORY.

While other States were being swept by the fire of pure democracy Massachusetts by no means escaped. A constitutional convention was called in Boston in 1853. Although the amendment providing that Massachusetts judges should be elected was voted down, nevertheless a proviso limiting their tenure to 10 years was carried. Fortunately, however, the people rejected the new constitution, and to-day Massachusetts judges, from the highest to the lowest, are still appointed for life by the governor of the Commonwealth. Massachusetts judges from the highest to the lowest can only be removed by impeachment or on address by the senate and house, if the governor and council give consent.

Have the events proved Massachusetts right or wrong in adhering to the practice of the fathers? If our system is wrong the fact must have appeared ere now. Men can not for over a century gather grapes from thorns nor figs from thistles. Question the next lawyer you see as to which State bench stands highest and hands down the best decisions. He will tell you that the Massachusetts bench stands first of all.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I interrupt the gentleman to suggest there that Mr. Bryce, in his American Commonwealth, puts the State of Michigan right alongside of Massachusetts?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Do you ever hear whispers that Massachusetts judges have unholy alliances with politicians or with corporations? No; because those judges are appointed for life and fear no man.

Ask yourselves whether such whispers have been unheard in the States where judges are elected for short terms in the interest of pure democracy. The movement for the Recall of Judges in those States answers the question.

No Republican platform and no Democratic platform in Massachusetts has ever demanded the Recall of Judges.

No Republican platform and no Democratic platform in Massachusetts has even demanded an elective judiciary. Could this, by any possibility, be the record if our system had proved a failure? In the past year it has fallen to the lot of our Democratic governor, Mr. Foss, to make many appointments to the Massachusetts bench. His selections have commended themselves to everyone. I read in a newspaper a little while ago of an interview between the governor and a certain Republican, who had called to congratulate him on his appointments of judges. In the course of the interview Gov. Foss explained that he had experienced great difficulty in getting the best men to serve. Do you think that his task would have been lighter if these men had been obliged to face the torture of a political canvass and an uncertain tenure?

Can it be that the people of Massachusetts are so different from the people in other States, or is it the fact, perchance, that our system is the true system? For myself, I feel that the movement to control the judiciary, begun in the middle of the last century under the guise of progress, has proved a step backward instead of a step ahead.

THE RECALL OF JUDGES BY ADDRESS OF THE LEGISLATURE.

Of late the Massachusetts constitutional provision for the removal of our life judges by address of the legislature has been quoted as a precedent for the Recall of Judges by the People. Yet no one, so far as I can find, has made a study of the question to see whether in Massachusetts this provision has worked well or worked badly or has simply been a useless vermiform appendix of our system. Habitually this Massachusetts constitutional provision has been misstated. Few people seem to be aware that it requires the consent of the governor, the consent of his council elected by the people, and the consent of both branches of the Massachusetts Legislature before a judge can be removed This method of relieving the Massachusetts bench by address. of undesirable judges has been resorted to but twice within the last 100 years and only five times in the history of the State.

In 1803 three judges were removed—two of them on conviction before the Supreme Court of extortion and the third on account of paralysis. The two extortionate judges could clearly and properly have been removed by impeachment, and probably the paralytic could have been removed by the same process if the legislature had so desired. Certainly that paralytic must have been neglectful of the duties of his office. Be that as it may, in one way or another, physically or mentally disabled judges have always been separated from the bench. I know of no one who maintains the contrary, so I doubt whether any new method of separation is required in such cases. To remove by process of impeachment a paralytic judge who refused to resign might perhaps seem severe, but it could be done. In the last analysis the Senate and the House are the sole judges as to what constitutes an impeachable offense.

The two cases of removal by address occurring in Massachusetts during the last 100 years are those of Judge Day and Judge Loring, both of them probate judges. Judge, Day was removed on address for misconduct and maladministration in office. Clearly he could have been removed as well by impeachment.

The most notorious case, however, is that of the removal of Judge Loring purely for political reasons. A full account of it can be found in the Diary of Richard H. Dana, one of the founders of the Free Soil Party.

Judge Loring held simultaneously the office of Massachusetts judge of probate and the office of United States commissioner. In 1854, when the abolition movement in Massachusetts was nearing its climax, Anthony Burns, a fugitive slave, was captured in Boston by the United States authorities. He was brought before Judge Loring, acting in his capacity as United States commissioner. Mobs gathered in the street, endeavoring to free Burns. Bloodshed took place, and the trial was conducted in a court room surrounded by United States artillerymen and marines. Dana became volunteer counsel for the fugitive slave. In his diary he tells us that Judge Loring treated the case with fairness. As the record was complete and the question of identity established, there was nothing for the judge to do except to surrender the slave to his master. When the legislature met an address was brought forward calling for the removal of Judge Loring from his position as judge of probate in Massachusetts. No contention was made that he was not a good judge of probate. Nothing was alleged against him, except that when acting as United States commissioner—an absolutely different office—he had performed an unpopular duty. Passions were aroused, feeling was at fever heat, and at first no one was found courageous enough to point out the impropriety of the proposed address. Dana's diary tells us how he asked his fellow abolitionists to help to stem the tide. It tells us how he went to Quincy and to Dexter, and how they agreed with him but would not help him. Finally, Dana took his popularity in his hands, went alone before the legislature, and opposed the Nevertheless it was adopted in the session of 1855. Henry J. Gardner, the Knownothing governor of Massachusetts, resting on his constitutional rights, refused to remove Judge Loring. The State went Knownothing again in the autumn elections, and Gov. Gardner was reelected and reelected once more the next year. An address against Judge Loring was again adopted in 1857 and again discountenanced by the governor. It was not until 1858 that Judge Loring was finally removed by Gov. Nathaniel P. Banks.

Such is the history of the most famous instance of removal on address by the Legislature of Massachusetts.

THE EXPERIENCE OF THE STATE OF MAINE.

Now, let us turn to the State of Maine, where the provision for removal of judges by the legislature is nearly the same as in Massachusetts. Throughout the history of the State of Maine only one judge was ever removed on the address of the legislature. Judge Davis was removed from the bench of that State entirely for political reasons. I condense a history of the case taken from the Monthly Law Reporter.

In January, 1856, owing to a question arising under the new constitution of the State of Maine, two individuals, Mr. Baker and Mr. Emery, simultaneously claimed to be sheriff of Cumberland County. Mr. Baker at the time held office as sheriff under an old commission which by its terms had not yet expired. Mr. Emery had, been appointed by the governor to supersede him. Mr. Baker claimed that the governor had exceeded his powers, inasmuch as by the terms of the new constitution, recently adopted by the people of Maine, sheriffs must be elected and not appointed. Mr. Emery maintained that the time for election had not arrived, and that meanwhile all officers remained as before under the power of the executive.

Judge Davis recognized Mr. Baker, the incumbent of the office, as the legal sheriff. For this act he was removed by the legislature nearly or quite on a party vote. The office so left vacant was not filled. The next year the political complexion of the Maine Legislature had been changed by the autumn elections and a new governor had been chosen. Thereupon Judge Davis was reappointed to his position.

CONCLUSION.

It is idle for anyone to assert or for anyone to deny that Abraham Lincoln would have been removed under a recall system in 1861 or 1862. Neither contention can be proved. It is well to remember, however, that a large majority of the people in 1860 voted for other candidates for the Presidency. Lincoln was the choice of a minority only, and we must not forget that men elected merely by a plurality of votes are peculiarly likely to be recalled as soon as anything goes wrong.

The northern forces were defeated repeatedly in 1861, 1862, and the spring of 1863. Men shook their heads and mistrusted the ability of the President. Under a recall system, can you doubt that a movement for the recall of Lincoln would have been inaugurated? That the movement would have been successful no one can say, although that is my opinion; but does anyone doubt that it would have been inaugurated? Could anything have been worse than to plunge the country into another presidential campaign in 1861 or 1862? Yet a minority can always force an election under the recall system, irrespective of what the wishes of the majority may be.

The recall advocates tell us that the device would seldom be used against judges. I am inclined to concede some force to that view. I should expect to see it used more often in the earlier years of its adoption, because throughout the Union to-day the bench is honored by many a judge who will courageously stand for the truth, unpopular as it may temporarily be.

Gradually the bench will change. Judges will be intimidated by the fate of their courageous associates. Men will not seek the bench as a career unless they are willing and ready to make their decisions conform, not to the law and to the Constitution, but to the wishes of each temporary majority. The recall will seldom be invoked against a bench of timeservers.

The enemies of the judiciary tell us that judges are frail, weak, erring men, like ourselves, and that their opinions are no better than our own. I grant you that judges, like all men, are by nature subject to frailty, weakness, and error. Is that a good reason for the adoption of a system which will magnify those defects? Should it not rather be the aim of our system to strengthen, to intrench, and to guard the judge against those infirmities which are the inheritances of every son of Adam?

No influence in office is so purifying as fixity of tenure. If anyone doubts that fact, let him take counsel with those administrators of our Government whose memory goes back beyond the time when our reformed civil-service system became a living reality. Subject a man in office to the necessity of watching the political barometer and you will find that one eye, if not both, will be watching the storm signals instead of the public service. Secure that same man in his position, provide for his support, and he will glance neither to the right nor to the left from the line of his duty.

In conclusion, I can not resist the temptation to borrow an illustration from Justice Wendell Phillips Stafford, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. In ancient Rome the tribunes of the people were charged with the duty of annulling laws which struck at fundamental rights. Demagogues and designing men, whose purposes had been thwarted, advised the Romans to do away with the tribunes. History tells us that the people were brought to a wise determination of the question by the relation of a fable. "Once upon a time," said the tribunes, "the wolves advised the sheep to get rid of their watchdogs because they interfered with the sheep going where they pleased and were really the only obstacle to a perfect understanding between the forest and fold." When, afterwards, the Roman people forgot this fable and gave up their tribunes, they lost their liberty, and they never regained it till they got their tribunes back.

The watchdog may anger the sheep and may restrain the sheep against their impulses, but he is their security and the protector of each one of them. Let the flock think twice before it exchanges the watchdog for the wolf.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has seven minutes re-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL]. Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there is pending in the Judiciary Committee of the House a bill (II. R. 8158) entitled:

To prevent graft by prohibiting the giving or receiving of gifts, employment, or compensation from certain corporations by Senators, Representatives, Delegates, or Resident Commissioners in the Commess of the United States, or Senators, Representatives, Delegates, or Resident Commissioners elect, and the judges and justices of the United States courts, and prescribing penalties therefor.

This bill was introduced during the present Congress at the last session, on April 29 (calendar day May 1), 1911. One similar has been introduced in the House for the last eight years. The intention of it is to remove a condition which I regard, and many other men who are patriotic in their motives and purposes regard, as unwholesome for legislation, and therefore against the best interests of the country. We all know there must be a pure source in order to get legislation that is pure. Laws will be made in the interest of the people and the people only when they are made by the representatives of the people uninfluenced by any improper motive. This bill has been approved by the Democracy of this House, time and time again, and opposed by the Republican side of the House just as often. Some years ago, when we were considering a codification of the criminal laws of the United States, this same bill in two sections—practically the same bill—was offered and voted upon, many Members taking part in the discussion. The Republican side voted solidly against it. All those who voted for the amendment were Democrats, and only three Members with Democratic commissions voted with the Republicans. I mention this merely as a matter of history, showing our alignment. The fact is the Democratic Party in this House has been committed to this legislation for a long time; and it seems to me if there ever was a nonpartisan question, one that any man as a Representative, be he Democrat or Republican, ought to consider purely in the interest of the people, it would be a question like

Our illustrious Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK 1, took the floor and engaged in the debate, favoring this amendment. Our distinguished leader on this side, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], also argued in its be-Quite a number of other distinguished gentlemen spoke in favor of the bill, all of them on the Demicratic side. A few Representatives upon the Republican side of the House opposed this amendment, some of them showing some feeling. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moon], who had charge of that bill, opposed the measure for three reasons. None of them, however, was against the principle involved nor the terms of One was that it had not been reported by the committee; one, that it was not offered as an amendment of a proper section in the criminal codification; and the other was that he did not want to bring in new legislation by amendment, but that, at the proper time, reported by a proper committee, it could be enacted. Is there a man here, is there a citizen in this country, who will not admit that the legislative department ought to be impartial-that the situation here should be one that is clean, one that is impartial, one where no improper influence could hold up its head and sit amongst us and use its influence upon the opinions of those who make the laws? Is it right that those who own the corporations and such interests as are affected by the tariff laws should not only be permitted to sit in this Congress-sent here by their constituents-but that while here they should act as the agents, officers, and the attorneys of and receive fees and compensation from those corporations? Ought an officer, an agent, or an attorney of a railroad to sit on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

I mention that committee to make the application plain. Well, in only a less degree, it applies to every Member who does not sit upon that committee, but who votes on the bill in the House. Ought the officers, the agents, the attorneys, and the employees of cotton mills, of the woolen mills, of the Steel Corporation, of the packing houses, of all the various, numberless corporations interested in legislation write and vote upon the bills affecting those interests? Should a Member be an officer, agent, or attorney of these and other corporations during his term of service? Should they continue to sit on the principal committees of this House, and in the Senate, and vote on the legislation of the country? If so, where is the interest of the people? Who will look after that? Every vote should be cast absolute for the benefit of the people and them. should be cast absolutely for the benefit of the people, and them only. It is the interest of the public that every person should have all of his or its just rights. No one can ask any more. If in legislation injustice is done to the cotton mill or to the woolen mill or to the corporation engaged in the steel business or in the packing business, if, I say, an injustice is done to anyone, it is against the interest of the people that you and I are sent here to serve. When we serve them we do justice to all and when we serve the interests we do an injustice to all the people. Am I talking to men who are responsive to the thought that I suggest? Is my position untenable? I know what the agents and the attorneys and the beneficiaries of the trusts say about it. In talking where they are ashamed to de-clare against it they say, "Oh, well, yes, we favor the prin-ciple—but," and that conjunction is the biggest part of what they have got to say about it. "We favor it—but." But what? Not in favor of putting it in practice; not in favor of stopping this wrongful system. The distinguished gentleman, the leader of the minority on one occasion at a former Congress when I was making some remarks in reference to the necessity for this legislation, said, "I do not believe there is a man in Congress in such employment."

It showed the innocence of his mind. If the Speaker should appoint a commission to investigate just what are the employments of Members-just what are the conditions in reference to the subject of this bill-the country would be astonished. I am not saying this as a censor; I am not saying it from the standpoint of one who rises and says, "I am better than thou." am saying it as a Member of this House, responsible as such to the House and to the country. The gentleman himself, no doubt, in the innocence of his mind, would also be astonished.

You can find, with respect to any bill that ever passes this House on any question affecting any of what we call "the interests," that it is reported and voted on by some Members who are engaged in employments prohibited by my measure. Not that they are dishonest; I do not claim that they are dishonest; but I mean men who are subject to the improper influence of "the interests." I will not say that they yield to improper influence, but I do say that you will find men who are in a position where that influence will act upon them if they will yield to it, and I say they have no right to be in that attitude; they have no such right-moral or political. But, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, they have the legal right, and the only protection the people have against such influence is the honor of the individual and collective membership of the Congress and their recognition of the proper ethics of their position.

One man may think a certain employment is right and another may think it is not, but in dealing with the great questions between "the interests" and the people the House and the Senate should occupy positions above suspicion. I say, Mr. Chairman, that no Member of this House or Senate ought to be permitted by law to be the officer or the agent or the attorney of or to receive a gift or a fee from any corporation or any other person interested in legislation.

Is that sound or unsound? If it is a sound proposition then wake up to your responsibilities and pass this bill.

Some men say, "Well, now, I have the right to take employment; it will not influence me." I have nothing to say against that. If any man wants to say that he desires to occupy a position that is remunerative to him and which in the minds of some people must put him in a questionable attitude, that is a matter with him, not with me. But as a citizen of this country, as a citizen of the great State of Texas, as a representative of the people who sent me here, I propose to say here and now, as I have said in the past, that no matter what desire the interests may have, and those who wish their employment, I insist that it is a public necessity to make a law which shall say they shall not do it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We took a vote on this question, I believe, on the 21st day of January, 1908. The Democrats were in the minority then; the Republicans were in an overwhelming majority. The vote stood 88 for my measure, all of them Democrats, and 109 against it, all Republicans but 3.

The Democrats in the House are now in the majority. have a committee considering this bill. The Democrats are in the majority on it. There has been a tremendous amount of work before that committee. It has been reported, and reported in the papers of my State, that the Randell antigraft bill had been voted down by the Committee on the Judiciary. I was informed by the committee, in session, that that is a mistake: they simply voted against displacing the anti-injunction bill and taking up this measure in its stead. If I had been a member of the committee, I would probably have voted that way myself. I simply mention this so as to disabuse the minds of those who care in reference to that report. It cuts no figure.

This matter is before the Committee on the Judiciary. speaking now with the express purpose of calling the attention of the Members of the House to this measure, which I regard as of prime importance. I am not here for the purpose of criticizing the committee. They have practically had the matter in hand only four months. It was not up for consideration at the last session. There were other things then that demanded their attention. I am not criticizing the committee. It will act as soon as it can, no doubt, and I am informed that it will act

But I am now-because I may not have an opportunity a few days later-calling the attention of the House to this important measure. I ask you, as Democrats, responsible to the country for the action of this House, to consider it, to stand by your guns and look squarely at this question. There are some Mem-bers here who were not Members of the former Congresses before which this measure was pending.

I appeal to Members on that side, not as Republicans, but as American representatives, sent here by American constituencies; I appeal to them to consider this bill as a nonpartisan measure and cease to make it a party matter—cease to stand up simply because the majority on that side is opposed to a reform like this—cease to act as a solid party blocking this legislation. We may have some trouble on this side. Men may think differently. They may be influenced by self-interest or they may be influenced by the arguments of those who are actuated by selfinterest. They may have a different complexion of mind from myself on this question. But, gentlemen of this House, I urge you, each and every one, to take this right home to your hearts. You know that we can not enact proper legislation unless the situation here is such that we can get an impartial consideration of every question. You know that the attorneys for the railroads ought not to make a railroad rate bill. You know that the attorneys and officers of the corporations that are asking for high protective tariffs ought not to make our tariff legislation. You know full well that those in the employment of the distillerles ought not to make the laws in reference to our internal revenue. You know that the packing houses ought not to have legislation affecting them made by men in their employment.

These interests are tremendous in their political power. But when they come and sit about the galleries here and look down on this House and over in the Senate they ought to be confronted with a statute. When they say, "I want to employ that man; I like the way he performs; I want him in my employment," they ought to be confronted with a statute which says, "You can not reach by your employment gifts or fees, under the laws of the land, any Member of Congress in either House. He can not be your agent or your attorney. He represents the people, and the people only. When he acts, he will act free from your influence."

Not only that, but those of us who are not in the employment of "the interests" have rights in the premises. Under present conditions practically every Member is subject to the general suspicion which may apply to so many. And I have no doubt that an investigation would show that the majority of the Members of this House and of the Congress are engaged in employments to-day which the passage of that bill would stop. believe it is true that nine-tenths, or perhaps a much larger percentage, of those employments are absolutely innocent in themselves; but the situation is there. There is the connection of the officer with the institution. There is the connection of the agent with his principal. There is the connection of the attorney with his client. Suppose a certain corporation that has some Member employed for some honorable service desires a certain amendment to a bill affecting it. Suppose that amendment is a proper one. Suppose the Member who is the attorney of that corporation or some corporation similarly affected votes for it. He is in a position where it can be charged that that vote was cast as the result of influence, when, as a matter of fact, it was not, and his vote represented his righteous judg-ment-about it. Some men will yield to such an influence, not ment-about it. Some may do it corruptly. Some men will yield to the influence of those with whom they are associated and to whom they are under obligation. Other men under similar circumstances will lean so far back on the question in order to be sure not to be influenced that they fail to be upright, while there are some who do not lean too far back or too far forward, but maintain their equilibrium. The fact that a situation is one that most people would regard as ordinarily having an improper influence on the human mind is a sufficient reason for removing that influence.

I believe that if the attention of each Member of Congress had been called especially to this measure, and he had been in a position where he felt it was his duty to consider it, to perfect it and to bring it out of committee and before the House, it would have been a law long ago. It is a measure that appeals to the fairness of everyone. It is a measure that appeals to the honor of the Congress. It is a measure that is just to everyone. It will do justice to those who otherwise are reflected upon by the present situation.

Thanking the members of the committee for their very courteous treatment of me in the hearings upon this matter, I urge them to consider this bill and to bring it out, I hope, in the form in which it has been introduced. I wish to say in this connection that I have no pride of authorship, so far as the wording of the bill is concerned. If the Judiciary Committee, in their wisdom see proper to make amendments, it is their business to do so if they favor the principle of the bill. I believe the members of that great committee are too big, too highminded, too brave, too honorable to report this bill adversely if they see proper to do so-without at the same time saying whether they favor the principle in the bill, or whether they are absolutely opposed to what this bill seeks to do. If they see proper to bring it back as it is I think it will be a wise thing to I believe the bill is all right. If they see proper to make any necessary amendments I should like to see them do it as soon as possible. If they will not report the bill favorably, then let them report it unfavorably, and let the House say how it stands on this measure. We will put it on the calendar and let the representatives of the people declare what they desire, and not bury the bill in the committee, as the Republicans have heretofore always done.

Mr. Chairman, thanking the committee for its very patient attention, and bespeaking for my measure the patriotic, careful, painstaking study of every Member, to the end that the right may be accomplished, that justice may be done, that legislation may be proper, and that the sources of legislation may be purified, I yield the floor, and yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I certainly appreciate the generosity of my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. Ste-PHENS], and I am sure that he exercised that generosity with full confidence that I would not abuse it. The big-hearted gentlemen from "the wild and woolly West," who have made the Committee on Indian Affairs illustrious ever since I have been in Congress, have always been good to me and permitted me almost every year to manifest my affection for "Lo, the poor Indian," by making a speech upon the Indian appropriation bill.

I wish to say further that my affection for the noble red man has been greatly intensified by the kind treatment of the gen-tlemen of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and by my acquaintance with such representative wild men as my illustrious colleague from Oklahoma, the Hon. Charlie Carter, and other high-class savages of his type. [Applause.]

It is true I have never talked about the subject under consideration, but I have given my aboriginal friends good advice about "stable finances," the "unstable character of doubtful whisky," the advantages of wearing clothes, and a great many other vital subjects.

At this time I wish to talk to them about the subject of transportation, which has come to be almost as important to them as to white folks.

By authority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I have reported to this House a bill looking to the regulation of charges on parcels carried by express companies, and the utilization of the system by rural routes. I will read the bill as reported and the report filed therewith:

the bill as reported and the report filed therewith:

That the rates hereinafter stated shall hereafter be the maximum rates to be applied either in first fixing rates by the express companies or in their correction or regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and no higher rates shall be charged and collected by express companies engaged in interstate commerce for receiving, transporting, and delivering packages or parcels not exceeding 11 pounds in weight and valued at not more than $50 between a point in one State, Territory, or District in the United States and another point in a different State, Territory, or District in the United States, whether the transportation occurs on the line of a single express company or on a through route or shipment operated by two or more connecting express companies:

"Between any two points in the United States more than 2,000 miles apart, 12 cents per pound.

"Between any two points not more than 1,200 miles apart, 7 cents per pound.

per pound.
"Between any two points not more than 800 miles apart, 5 cents per pound. "Between any two points not more than 600 miles apart, 4 cents per

Between any two points not more than 250 miles apart, 2 cents per

Provided, That no company shall be required to carry any package for less than 10 cents.

"Between any two points not more than 250 miles apart, 2 cents per pound.

"Provided, That no company shall be required to carry any package for less than 10 cents.

"Sec. 2. That any person delivering to any agent or office of any express company in the United States any parcel at the time under the law mailable on rural routes plainly addressed to any person or in care of any person on any rural mail route the initial post office of which is at or in the same town, village, or city with any express office of any express company, may pay in advance both the proper express charges and the United States postage required to carry such parcel on the rural mail route. On arrival at the terminal express office of the same or any connecting express company where originates the mail route to which the parcel is directed the agent at such office shall mail such parcel, paying the proper postage thereon. Likewise any person on any rural route, the initial post office of which is in the same town, city, or village with any express office, may, in addition to paying the postage appropriate on any parcel at the time under the law mailable on rural routes addressed and mailed to any person at any express office in the United States, pay to the rural letter carrier the proper express charges thereon to the point of destination, whereupon it shall be the duty of such rural letter carrier, upon his return to his initial post office, to deliver such parcel to the express office and prepay the express thereon.

"It shall be the duty of the postmasters and the express agents to execute receipts to conform to this provision.

"Sec. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any express company operating a single line or any number of express companies making a through route or shipment to charge more in the aggregate than the maximum price fixed for any distance set out in section 1 of this act or to fail or refuse to do any act or render any service p Federal, within the jurisdiction of which court such violation shall have occurred."

The purpose of this bill is to facilitate and perfect, at least to improve, the regulation of the express companies, and by requiring cooperation with rural routes give to the people in the rural communities the advantage of transportation, convenient, safe, and at reasonable prices for small parcels.

The progress of the act to regulate commerce was amended with a teve statement of the act to regulate commerce was amended with a teve statement of the act to regulate commerce was amended with a teve statement of the statement of the progress made up to this time in bringing them to practices and charges reasonable and agreeable to the people has been very unsatisfactory. So it was deemed essential to make some further efort at regulation. Your committee concluded that it would be wise to fix maximum rates adjudged by Congress to be reasonable and just as a guide to the express companies in the first instance and to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the second instance and to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the second instance and to the Interstate Commerce commission in the second instance and to the Interstate Commerce commission in the second instance and to the Interstate Commerce to the companies and innovation—but it is not revolutionary nor drastic nor even arbitrary. It is believed that the maximum rates faced in the bill are such as will prove remunerative to the express companies. In fact, this legislation is already producing its effect. It has come to the knowledge of the committee that since this bill was introduced the companies are giving their attention to improved methods and more companies are giving their attention to improved methods and more companies are giving their attention to improve methods and more companies are giving their attention to improve methods and more companies are giving their attention to improve methods and more companies are giving their properties of the properties of the pr ossage and paylor to any point on any express line in the united States.

The bill provides that the express agent and the postmaster shall execute proper receipts to conform to the provisions of the bill.

The committee hopes that the proposed legislation may find favor with Congress and may speedily become a law.

Last week several papers printed the following:

Practically dividing the country into sections, providing a specific tariff for each one, Chairman Adamson, of the House Committee on Interstate Commerce, will introduce a bill requiring express companies to carry a package weighing 11 penuds any distance for 12 cents.

If this bill is passed it will defeat the purpose of a provision in the post-office appropriation bill, which establishes an experimental parcel post in connection with the rural free-delivery system. Under the post-office bill an 11-pound package will be delivered for 25 cents.

I immediately wrote one of them the following letter and received prompt reply, acknowledging the injustice and promising correction.

DEAR SIR: I find in your last paper inclosed clipping. From the identity of language it was evidently taken from a very unfair and erroneous press report which I saw last week. It is evident, therefore, that it did not originate with you, although a little effort on your part would have enabled you to publish the exact truth. You are generally so fair and faithful in serving your readers that I am not inclined to scold you. The statement that I will introduce a bill not only contravenes the fact, but is misleading as to the character and intention of the legislation. The bill was introduced nearly a year ago, when there was no prospect of any report or action on parcel post, local or general, and was introduced pursuant to my efforts of 15 years on the Commerce Committee to regulate the charges of express companies.

on the Commerce Committee to regulate the charges of express companies.

It is untrue and misleading in that it also says that my bill "would defeat the parcel post planned for rural-mail routes." The contrary is true. The bill utilizes that service and encourages it. The inclosed statement correctly gives the grades of maximum charges by express companies of from 2 cents per pound for 2500 miles or less up to 12 cents per pound for 3,000 miles. Originally that was all there was in the bill, but when I learned that the Post Office Committee would report a parcel post for the rural-delivery routes, where there is no express company, I immediately proposed an amendment to the bill requiring the express company at the delivery office to mail a parcel addressed to a patron of a rural route, if, under the law, the parcel was mailable, and also to authorize the people on rural routes to have mailable packages delivered to the express company at the initial office, so that the two will connect and supplement each other. It must be clear to everybody that the general parcel post provided for in the post-office bill fixing blanket rates all over the country will be met by the express companies, which will simply cut the ahort rates enough to take the business away from the Post Office Department, but that cut will not be sufficient to relieve or satisfy the people. The large bulk of small parcels, inhe-tenths, if not ninety-nine one-hundredths, is short-distance business. Everything under five or six hundred miles is already carried by the express companies for less rates than those fixed in the post-office bill, and yet they are not low enough.

The people are entitled to have their small packages carried conveniently, speedily, safely, and cheaply. We have the power, and it is our duty, by regulation, to compel the transportation companies to do that. I am willing to do it. If we can establish the maximum rates named in my bill it will afford relief to everybody on the railroad. It would not be proper for our committee to make a report establishing a parcel post on rural-delivery routes. That is the province of the Post Office Committee. If it were proper, we would unhesitatingly do so. Therefore we can only provide, as in my bill, that such parcels as are mailable on rural routes can be transported on the rural routes in connection with the express companies. Instead of anything in my bill being antagonistic to parcel post, it may be that the Government will be compelled to resort to the parcel post as an instrument of controlling and regulating the transportation companies and driving them to do what they ought to do voluntarily in the first fastance. Transportation companies resist and litigates so stubbornly, causing interminable routes in a cordance with the distance and weight and make them lowed to the first and uncertainty can not dela

Mr. Chairman, I have carefully read the pending bill and the report thereon filed in this House by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Among all of its interesting provisions it is probably true that at this time the most important and engrossing feature is the proposition to establish parcel post, general and local. So far as the rural parcel post is concerned, there ought to be no hesitation nor probationary period nor experimental test. There is no railroad nor express company to serve the people in the rural districts; there are no facilities for carrying parcels. It is very inconvenient and expensive to quit work and go or send to town to carry or bring back small parcels. Those people keep up the roads which are traveled by the rural carriers employed by the Government. It does not involve the ownership of any railroad or express company or public road or instrumentalities of transportation for the Government to accommodate those people by carrying their parcels at a reasonable price. I am sorry the bill does not contain the Shackleford combination good roads rental bill, which requires the Government to pay $10 a mile per annum for the use of the country roads. I hope it will be offered and adopted as an amendment. We ought to provide, in conjunction with the mail, for carrying mailable parcels on all rural routes. Whether they are carried on the same vehicle as the mail or whether enough is charged to pay the expense thereof are details that can be worked out. I do not subscribe to the doctrine that the Post Office Department should be self-sustaining at the expense of efficiency and convenience. Efficient and convenient service to the people is the prime desideratum. With that object in view, of course, the system ought to be administered with scrupulous honesty and as economically as consistent with efficiency. Of course, the provision for a general parcel post is in response to a demand which originated in protest against the robber charges and practices of the express companies, which have been deaf to all remonstrances and defiant to all efforts to If the express companies had put in an honest and just and reasonable scale of rates and had promptly delivered packages and collected but once for each parcel, there never would have been a demand for a railroad parcel post. It has been six years now since the express companies were made subject to the "act to regulate commerce." If in the six years there has been any perceptible difference in their practices, the change has been for the worse. An investigation now going on has disclosed so many violations of the law that it would be has disclosed so many violations of the law that it would be impossible for the existing courts to try all of the cases if they were all prosecuted. The result has been to arouse the people to a storm of indignation, if not fury. Furious protest would be perfectly justifiable. The reason that the people demand a parcel post is that if that were adopted the department would be compelled to put it in regardless of the cost. There would be no uncertainty about it, and the express companies could not delay and nullify the enforcement of the act by protracted litigation. That is the reason it is urged. I presume the arbitrary limit of weight, fixed at 11 pounds, is adopted to conform to the foreign postage rate adopted by the Postal Union. Of course, those who insist on the parcel post fully understand that as the Government does not own the railroads in this country, as do the monarchical Governments which have the parcel post, it is necessary to contract with the railroads for the transportation of all mailable matter. Therefore it is doubtless understood that parcels can not be carried as rapidly and conveniently as first-class mail, for in that event the cost would be so high as to be prohibitive. Of course, in the classification of the mail, merchandise, in order to receive a low rate, would, as now, be handled and carried less rapidly than first class mail. So understanding the situation, it would not be expected that letters and papers going at first-class rate would be delayed to await the slower transportation and delivery of merchandise carried as third or fourth class mail. two or three errors, however, that have appeared in the discussion of this matter. One is, it is urged in order that the department may make money and extinguish the deficit in the I have no sympathy for such an argument. the Government ever goes into the business of transporting merchandise for the people, it should be solely for the convenience of the people, and should be resorted to for the sole, justifiable reason that private enterprise will not perform the service on honest and reasonable terms; and I would not have one cent of profits go into the Treasury for rendering that service. If from the necessity of the case it has to be done, let officiency be maintained at as low a cost as is consistent therewith. The objection most strongly urged to the service is the wrong one, and in my judgment has no application. It is that the service would injure local merchants by allowing their patrons easy access to other markets. In my judgment that is greatly exaggerated. Several times in my life I have heard men of prominence in different towns object to convenient train service for fear their citizens would go out and trade in other It is a very narrow and mistaken view. Easy communication works both ways. Its benefits are reciprocal. many goods things come in as go out. The general result is improvement, growth, and enlightenment. The fear that the people will spend their substance in riotous patronage of distant department stores is a pipe dream.

The usual countryman is a smart citizen and a shifty trader. It may be that the department stores will bait new customers with one or two honest deals, but at most the third tip will be The second or third deal will be a swindle, and it won't take many orders to satisfy the customers that their local merchants will give them the squarest deal—at least show them the goods before they buy, and give them a chance to refuse the goods and keep their money. A slight acquaintance with such mail bargains of the department stores as have come to my attention would be the surest possible guaranty of securing to all the local merchants the entire trade of their communities. That argument is a bugaboo that there is absolutely nothing in. Besides, an honest zone system would remove that danger. The only real valid argument against the parcel post is one never urged, to wit: The Government owns no railroads in this country and would find the operation of a parcel post very expensive, very inconvenient, and violative of our time-honored policy of noninterference with the business of transportation companies which pay taxes for the right to exist and do business, and which by the Constitution we have absolute power to regulate and control, both as to charges and practices, as completely as if the Government owned them all. The only valid argument for the parcel post is one that is also never mentioned by its advocates, and that is that the transportation companies will not render the service to the satisfaction of the people; that the Government can not effectively regulate them, and utterly fails to make them render reasonable service at reasonable prices to the people; and that therefore it is the duty of the Government, from the necessity of the case, regardless of cost or inconvenience, to put in the service and see that the people are accommodated. Now, I have been loath to discuss this subject or commit the seeming impropriety of intruding in any way upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I have been more reluctant because I have been serving on another committee which has jurisdiction over the transportation companies, and which has been trying to subject them to reasonable and just regulation. I confess that success has not yet been attained by us, but I do not acknowledge that it can not be done. I am still trying. If I believed that it would be impossible to do so, I would unhesitatingly vote to adopt a parcel post as a means of doing what the Government had failed otherwise to do-compel the transportation companies to do their duty. We desire to secure the passage of the bill reported, putting maximum rates upon parcels carried by express companies. We made the maximum rate for 3,000 miles the same as foreign postage rate on the theory that it would not be a hardship on the companies to carry across the continent an 11-pound package at the same price for carrying it across the continent and across the Pacific Ocean and across Asia; and we graded the charges down according to distance to 2 cents a pound for 250 miles or less, with a minimum charge of 10 cents. That bill ought to be passed. If it were passed it would give satisfaction to everybody who lives on a railroad. The bill also provides for the accommodation of all rural delivery patrons by requiring the express office to mail the packages when addressed to patrons of rural-delivery routes, and by authorizing patrons of rural-delivery routes to require rural carriers to deliver to the express companies packages to be expressed. The system provided by the bill would prove eminently satisfactory in my judgment. The only improvement I could think of would be to require the railroads to render the service instead of the express companies. That, of course, would eliminate the express companies from the business entirely; and if they resist this arrangement at all I am willing just to strike their names from the bill and substitute the railroads in their stead. The service in connection with the rural routes can be carried on just as well with the railroads as with the express companies. If, however, Members of Congress believe that we have failed and will continue to fail so to regulate the transportation companies as to secure satisfactory service for the people, and as a dernier resort believe it necessary to embark the Government in the transportation business by adopting a general parcel post, then I insist that it shall be a rational, practical, and satisfactory system. The plan proposed in the bill will not satisfy the people. Ninety per cent or more of the small parcels are carried short distances. It may be that $1.21 cents is cheap enough or too cheap to carry 11 pounds 3,000 miles, but for one such package transported there are many packages-scores of packages-transported less than a thousand miles—yea, less than 500 miles; most of them less than 200 miles. The great number of people who have small packages which ought to be carried for 25 cents for a short distance will not be satisfied to pay the high blanket rate in order to enable one man to have his package carried 3,000 miles at a low rate, Whatever system is adopted, whether in the Post Office Department or imposed on the express companies or railroads, should prescribe rates according to the distance and the size of the package.

Nothing else will satisfy the people; but the main practical fact to face is this: If we adopt that blanket rate for the entire country, the express companies will at once select and cut every rate with which they can afford to compete and take away all of the business from the Government, making just as little reduction as possible in order to secure the business, and still carry the business at rates exorbitantly high, so that even if this Congress adopts a blanket-rate parcel post, which will neither satisfy the people itself nor result in forcing the express companies to reduce their rates to a satisfactory basis. I shall feel it my duty to continue to work to compel either the express companies or the railroads to carry for the people small parcels at reasonable and just rates with safety and reasonable speed. I have never believed that the Post Office Department would carry much of the business for a long time even if we adopted a parcel post with low rates and zone distances, because the express companies, if they continue in business, will cut every rate on which they can make a profit by securing the business. Of course the Government could hold the business by excluding the express companies from competition. That would be unnecessary if the rates were graded and fixed so low that the express companies could not profitably underbid them. If they were fixed so high that the express companies could afford to underbid them, they should be allowed to do so. . The people would not consent for the Government to forbid the reduction in cost. It is contrary to our public policy to exclude anybody from doing business, and it would be treating the people wrong to prevent them from securing as cheap transportation as possible. I concede that if we can not secure for the people fair treatment from the transportation companies the Government may rightfully extend the limited parcel-post system already in vogue and reduce the rates so as to secure for the people the accommodation which can not otherwise be secured; but I contend that that is the only justification for it, and if we are driven to it let us make it effective by adjusting the rates and the service so as either to accommodate the people thereby or force the express companies to do their duty by reforming their rates and practices in order to hold the business. If we can not otherwise bring the transportation companies into correct conduct, then I believe it will be justifiable to use the Post Office Department as an instrument either to force them to do their duty or abandon the business

Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the Post Office appropriation bill reported to this House contains so many good things. It comes within 50 cents a month of paying $90 a month to carriers on standard rural routes—the amount I have been asking for them for several years. The bill provides the further reform, which I have been demanding so long, that carriers be paid for the additional distance when they are required to travel above 24 miles. A large number of them have been imposed upon by having to travel from 1 to 5 miles without pay. This bill puts an end to that injustice. Another reform is only partially provided for in the bill, but thereby a great improvement is effected. Under the old gradation of 2 miles some carriers have had their routes shortened a few hundred yards below a grade and been compelled to accept pay for 2 miles less; a great many of them have suffered injustice in that way. The pending bill reduces the grades to 1 mile. It ought to be a quarter of a mile, or, at least, the carrier ought to be paid for major fractions of a mile. In practice these two classes of injuries have been inflicted on carriers through the efforts of inspectors to make a showing for economy. I am constrained to believe that they misconstrued to some extent the economy doctrines of the department, for in a majority of the cases with which I am acquainted the carrier was deprived of a few dollars a month at the expense of the efficiency of the service, which I do not believe met with the approval of the people. In a great many cases of such injustice brought to the attention of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General he made prompt corrections. Under the changed conditions effected by this bill I hope the inspectors will be instructed to study and promote the efficiency of the service and the convenience of the people without trying to save money at the expense of either and at the cost of the carrier.

I approve the advance toward town and village delivery. is undoubtedly the duty of the Government to make more liberal provision for free delivery within the towns and villages. The rules on that subject have been entirely too rigid heretofore, depriving people of large towns and villages of the service because the receipts of the office did not amount to $10,000 per annum, although rural carriers passed in and out through every principal street delivering the mail in all of the rural districts.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Nye].

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, I was called out of the Chamber and heard but a portion of the address of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Randell]. I think no other member of the Committee on the Judiciary was present during his address, except the last two or three minutes, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham] was in the Chamber.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RANDELL of Texas.

Mr. NYE. Certainly.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I do not know how the gentleman can know that if he was not present.

Mr. NYE. I was here long enough to hear the gentleman from Texas say, if I understood him correctly, that he thought a majority, if not nearly all the Members of this House, if they were entirely free from all connection with the interests at home, either corporate or otherwise, would support his bill upon which he has spoken.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. If the gentleman will yield, I never said anything of that kind. The gentleman misunderstood me

Mr. NYE. I understood the gentleman to use language of that import.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I said I thought a large majority of this House and of Congress would have to quit some employment if this bill went into effect. I did not say anything about how they would vote.

Mr. NYE. The gentleman said something to the effect that the bill would have been acted upon before if it was not for the influences

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. If the gentleman will pardon me again, I said I believed that if Members of this House, each individually, had studied the bill and had seen proper to personally consider it, the bill long ago would have become a law, and I think so now.

I do not wish to misquote the gentleman at all. Mr. NYE. Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I know the gentleman does not.

Mr. NYE. I certainly understood the gentleman to say or to use language to the effect that the reason the bill had not been acted upon was due to the fact that the various interests which Members are more or less directly-not dishonestly but directly or indirectly influenced by at home had prevented such action.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. NYE. The reporter has the gentleman's remarks, and if I have misconstrued them the notes will show. I want to say that I am not so familiar with the bill as other members of the Judiciary Committee who have carefully studied it. I am in the minority on that committee; but my reading of the bill has given me the impression that it is entirely too drastic and impracticable to be seriously considered, and it may not be any breach of confidence to say that my understanding from members of the committee is that the author of the bill was not ready to consent to any such material amendment as most of the members of the committee think is proper.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The gentleman from Minnesota was present in the committee, and he will remember that, on the contrary, I explicitly told the members of the committee that I did not propose to personally agree to amendments that I did not like, but that I earnestly desired that they would make any amendment they saw proper and report the bill.

In view of the persistence of the gentleman in Mr. NYE. reference to his bill ever since I have been a member of the committee, it seems to me that it is better for the committee and the House, and better for the gentleman, if he would move to discharge the committee and bring before the House the merits of his bill rather than to indirectly reflect upon the membership of the committee and the House.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I disclaim any such effort. There was not a word in my speech reflecting on the Members of this House.

Mr. NYE. Indirectly I think that would be the effect of it. Mr. RANDELL of Texas. It would not indirectly; the gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if there is no further general debate I ask that the bill be read under the fiveminute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill,

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHARMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, purchase and use of irrigation tools and appliances, water rights, ditches, lands necessary for canals, pipe lines, and reservoirs for Indian reservations and allotments, and for drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods, $300,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on any Irrigation system or reclamation project for which specific appropriation is made in this act or for which public funds are or may be available under any other act of Congress: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit reasonable expenditures from this appropriation for preliminary surveys and investigations to determine the feasibility and estimated cost of new projects, for investigations and surveys for power and reservoir sites on Indian reservations in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the act of June 25, 1910, or to prevent the Burcau of Indian Afairs from having the benefit of consultation with englacers in other branches of the public service or carrying out existing agreements with the Reclamation Service; for pay of 1 chief inspector of irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $2,500; for traveling expenses of 2 inspectors of irrigation, at $3 per diem when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses authorized by law, and for incidental expenses of negotiation, inspection, and investigation, including telegraphing and expense of going to and from the seat of government and while remaining there under orders, $4,200; in all, $310,700: Provided also, That not to exceed 7 superintendents of irrigation, who shall be skilled irrigation engineers, may be employed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I hope the gentleman will give us any information he has which would lead us to continue this extravagant work of irrigation on the different Indian reservations. I understand that some of these projects have been commenced and others contemplated where the expenses will be very large and the benefits probably very small. It is a very easy matter for us to appropriate Indian money for irrigation projects, although this particular money, I believe, is appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States. Just what benefit is it to us to have these appropriations made? Why should not all the expense of the irrigation of a project be paid out of the funds belonging to the tribe which the project is intended to benefit if there is any benefit? I think it is time that we had some statement as to the irrigation projects under the Indian Service.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that all these reservations where this appropriation for irrigation is to be carried on is in the arid part of the West, and it is impossible to teach these Indians the art of agriculture and make them self-sustaining unless it is done by irrigation. No crops can be grown without water can be put on the ground, and it takes money to do this; and our Indian wards have no money, hence we must furnish it to them. The white people in the country where these Indians live farm by irrigation only, and we must adopt the same methods for the Indians. Congress in 1902 passed the reclamation act and adopted the same methods as are found necessary on the Indian reservations.

The irrigation reclamation act which we passed a few years ago provided that all of the funds derived from the sale of the public lands of the United States should be paid into the Treasury for the use and benefit of building irrigation plants, dams, and ditches and thus aiding the white home builders of the West. Then, if that was a good rule and a good law for the whites, it is certainly a better rule and a more just one for the Indians. That precedent having been established for the white man, I think is a full answer to the inquiry of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Let me ask if this appropriation is reimbursable?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This one is not, but some of these Indians have a surplus of lands, and it is proposed as soon as we get these Indian lands irrigated and the country opened up, and the lands become saleable, at the proper time to put the surplus Indian lands on the market and sell them, and if the Indians then have sufficient funds to reimburse the Government for this appropriation, Congress can do it. If they can not spare the money without pauperizing the Indians, then Congress will let them keep their money; but in most instances the word
"reimbursable" occurs in the acts providing for irrigation schemes. The committee was of the opinion that much of these lands would be of sufficient value when placed on the market and sold to white settlers to reimburse the Government, and we have adopted the policy of making the payments in such cases reimbursable.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. The reply of the gentleman from Texas to the gentleman from Illinois refers to irrigation generally, because as a matter of fact this particular item is a nonreimbursable item. I did not know as the gentleman from Texas made it clear to the gentleman from Illinois although the part of the gentleman's answer which related to the Indians without funds would answer it.

-Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly clear, and I knew that before I asked the question, that this appropriation is not reimbursable. The theory of carrying on an irrigation project is to increase the value of the land, at least to the extent of the cost of the irrigation project. If it does not increase the value of the land to the extent of the cost of the irrigation project, the project ought not to be carried on. Everyone will admit that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a fuller explanation. Otherwise I shall insist upon the point of order.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] has just stated, in reply to man from Texas [Mr. Stephens] has just stated, in reply to the question, I desire to add this: This bill, as all gentlemen who have read the bill know, has irrigation items running through it from the first leaf to the last leaf. Where the In-dians have money, we have, I think, uniformly, and I think without exception, provided that the irrigation project should be reimbursable. This particular item, however, is made to cover a class of cases where the Indians have no money, where they have little areas of land in a dry section of the West they have little areas of land in a dry section of the West, where we had hoped to make them self-supporting. In the case of the Indians living in a country where they have no rainfall, which is a Sahara, the Indian Office came before us and explained that for a nominal cost per acre, and for a reasonable sum they had found feasible projects where irrigation would be a success, and where the Indians would be benefited and made independent, where they are now helpless. The blessing of water on their lands would lift from the Federal Government the duty or the obligation of appropriating rations or annuities for them, and this item was made to cover that class of cases where they have no money and no means of sustenance; and if we did not do this, we would have to grant some other affirmative relief, which would be in the nature of a direct appropriation. Direct appropriations and lump-sum payments are not as a rule desirable or to the best interest of the Indians.

What I have said is undoubtedly subject to the general objection that always lies with reference to irrigation. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] well knows that in the last few years under the general reclamation project we have expended an enormous sum of money. I will ask the gentleman from Wyoming if he can tell me what is the exact amount?

Mr. MONDELL. It is something less than $60,000,000.

Mr. FERRIS. I think Mr. Newall stated to me that it was about $60,000,000.

Mr. MANN. A great deal more than the benefits will ever be.
Mr. FERRIS. I think perhaps that is so, but they have had to blaze the way, and it has taken money to get the experience to make irrigation a success. The Indian Office has an irrigation bureau, which has tried to follow along and perform the same service as the General Government is doing for the white citizens.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the gentleman from Oklahoma does not contend at all that the General Government ought to pay out of the Federal Treasury for irrigation projects for the benefit of the white citizens unless the Treasury is to be reimbursed when the land is to be disposed of. Upon what theory can the gentleman claim that it is our duty to irrigate lands which the Indians own and buy lands, because this covers that, for that purpose, and then pay that out of the General Treasury with no reimbursement? If the land is not benefited to the extent of the expenditure, the expenditure ought not to be made. If it is benefited to the extent of the expenditure, it is only fair that the Treasury shall be reimbursed.

that the Treasury shall be reimbursed.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the Treasury can not be reimbursed where there is nothing from which to reimburse it.

Mr. MANN. The land is there. When the land is sold, with the added value, if there be an added value by reason of the irrigation, why should not the Treasury be reimbursed?

Mr. FERRIS. Where they have large areas of land, and surplus land, that can be sold. It has been the intention of the committee to make it reimbursable, but I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there are many Indians in the United States who have little or no land and who have no trust funds to reimburse anything. It is for this class that this provision becomes necessary.

Mr. MANN. When the first irrigation projects came in—in the Indian bill—they were not made reimbursable, and I called the attention of the House to the fact that if money was to be expended from the Treasury to make lands worth more, that when that land was sold at a higher value the Treasury ought to be reimbursed, because we are under no obligation, out of the Treasury, at the expense of the general public, to increase the value of any man's land without any expectation of getting it back.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would say in reply to that, that what the gentleman says regarding the Indian question goes to the root of it. If the gentleman takes the position that it is not the duty of the Federal Government to do anything for the Indian, who was the original occupant of this country, then this bill should be pruned to a great extent; but I call his attention to the fact that when I came to Congress a few years ago we were appropriating $14,000,000 to $16,000,000 a year. This bill is carefully pruned down until it appropriates something over seven million, and it is impossible to leave a helpless and defenseless people without a dollar or an acre of land, and the Federal Government, I think, very justly has taken in hand the matter of trying to make the Indians independent. You can not make them independent by appropriating only annuities to them and issuing quarterly rations. The better plan would be to fix the land so that they themselves would work out their own salvation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I was about through, other than to say that the whole theory of the Government and of the Indian Committee and the Indian Office and the Indian Department, so far as I have been able to acquaint myself with it, has been along the line that the Federal Government was committed to the policy of taking care of its Indian wards. I think there can be no question about the advisability of this, or the justice of it, either, for that matter.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not think anybody can complain about what the Federal Government does for the Indians. If the Federal Government appropriated the same amount per capita for the whites that it does for the Indians out of the Treasury it would cost more than $2,000,000,000 a year.

Mr. FERRIS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think we ought to take an acre of Indian land, put $10 improvement on it and make it worth $20 and present that $10 to the Indians, and that we are not to get back?

Mr. FERRIS. If by doing that we can make the Indian a self-supporting and independent citizen and then turn him loose and let him go his own way as an independent, self-supporting citizen, I say, yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that never will happen. The gentleman talks about cutting down the Indian appropriation bill. The way it has been cut down is because we appropriated large sums of money to pay the principal or to capitalize the annuities and paid it directly out of the Treasury. Now, of course, in the end that results in cutting the appropriation, but this bill carries how much, in the neighborhood of $7,000,000 out of the Treasury

Mr. FERRIS. But some of this is reimbursable; a good deal,

Mr. MANN. It is part reimbursable, Mr. FERRIS. Part; yes.

Mr. MANN. And that is a considerable sum of money. Now, we propose to go ahead-of course, the office in the irrigation service in the department would never stop-go ahead and spend money out of the Treasury on the theory it makes the Indian lands worth more, and then when the land is worth more the Treasury does not get the benefit of it. The gentleman would not advocate that policy about anybody else, nor does anybody know how this money was expended last year unless the office

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit me, I can perhaps give him some information throwing some light on the subject. I agree fully with what the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] has said in reference to our duty toward the Indians of the country. Now, this appropriation is an appropriation carried entirely for and it is used mostly on small irrigation projects. First, it includes the salaries of the men who constitute the irrigation force in the Indian office, the chief engineer and the other officers and employees of that department. In the last Congress we put a limitation in the Indian appropriation bill in the House to the effect that hereafter no irrigation project should be commenced costing to exceed $25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized in my own right. I believe the point of order

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I was about to say the Senate amended it, so that the limitation, when the bill came back to the House, was raised to $50,000, but in conference it was agreed to make it $35,000, and that is now the law. In every irrigation project of any size we provide at the present time that the cost of it shall be reimbursable from the proceeds received from the sale of the surplus land belonging to the Indians. The gentleman says we have no information as to how the last appropriation was expended. I call his attention to a provision in the Indian appropriation act for 1911, which directed the Secretary of the Interior to furnish to the Speaker of the House or the Congress by the 1st of the following December a detailed itemized statement of the expenditures of this fund. That statement has been furnished as a document. I think it is Senate Document No. 689, first session Sixty-first

If the gentleman will take the hearings he will see that the estimate for the appropriation for this year is divided into amounts running from $1,000 up as high as $20,000. Many of the items are for the purpose of repairing the irrigation systems that we now have upon the reservations. This appropriation does not contemplate that any part of it shall be used in construction of any new project. No project of a large acreage is contemplated by it, and I will give the gentleman just a few of the items. Take, for instance-

For the development of an irrigation system by draining the land at some points and irrigating at others with the waters thus obtained on the Cahuilla Reservation, Cal., $3,000.

Then it goes on to state there are 152 Indians that will be benefited on this reservation, and explains why we ought to make that appropriation. Then there is an item-

For the development of an irrigation supply at Santa Rosa School, Cal., $3,000.

Then in another place at the Pala School-

For installation of a pumping plant and concrete pipe system, $5,000. Then another one-

For continuing the construction of concrete pipe lines, water lines, and pumping stations on the Morongo Reservation, $7,000.

And there are a number of small items which, in the aggregate are considerable, which I may say are required to keep in repair the projects that have heretofore been constructed, because we have been engaged in this kind of work for many years, and we have been making annual appropriations for new projects, but, as I said, this does not contemplate the construction of any large projects, and no project can be constructed costing more than $35,000 without direct authority of

Mr. MANN. I was fully aware of that when I read the item, will say to the gentleman, but does the gentleman contend that it is the duty of the Federal Government out of the Federal Treasury to pay for the expenses of repairs for these irrigation projects for the benefit of people who are using the irrigation projects?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Oh, not a dollar of money is expended on any irrigation project that anybody is benefited from directly other than the Indians. I do not suppose, if we have provided a plant so that water can be obtained for some Indians, if a white man came along he could not water his team, but so far as appropriation being used for the benefit of anybody but the Indians, there is no suggestion of it.

Mr. MANN. No; but here is the point: We can provide for an irrigation project for the benefit of the Indians so they can become self-supporting, and the first result of that is we have to repair the project at our expense. If, when we give them an irrigation project and put them upon lands to make them self-supporting and they can not maintain the project, when will they become self-supporting?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Well, that question, Mr.

Chairman, I am unable to answer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I wish to call attention to an item here for the construction of a small reservoir and improvements on the present irrigation system at the Soboba School, California, $1,000. The gentleman must take into consideration that $300,000 is not a great sum of money when you distribute it throughout the country in keeping up the repairs and building new reservoirs and sinking wells and other things to supply the Indians with water.

As far as there being a legal obligation, it is the same as the items that we appropriate for education. It is in the line of our policy of taking care of these people, who are wards of the Government. And I want to say further that both the committee as now constituted and the committee in the last Congress were very particular to ascertain whether or not we were expending money from the Federal Treasury that might properly be charged to the Indians where they had money and without violating any treaty obligations. And I think that we have covered practically all expenditures of any considerable amount in the bill, so that they are reimbursable.

Mr. MANN. Well, this item is not reimbursable.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; because there is nothing to reimburse it from.

Mr. MANN. Three hundred thousand dollars-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Two hundred and fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. Three hundred thousand dollars for this purpose; say, three hundred and ten altogether. Now, does the gentleman claim that when we construct an irrigation project for the benefit of the Indians we are bound after that to keep that project in repair out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Just as much, I will say, Mr. Chairman, as we are bound to keep a schoolhouse shingled that we build for the education of the Indian children.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman put the preparation of the land for permanent cultivation on the same basis as the building of a schoolhouse?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Precisely. Mr. MANN. If I thought that was the attitude of the committee, I would certainly make a point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It looks toward the education of the Indians along practical lines and tends toward making them self-supporting.

Mr. MANN. It is not for the education of the Indians, but it is to make the Indians self-supporting, or to make their land more valuable for sale. If they can not maintain the irrigation project, we ought not to give that to them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman should understand that these irrigation projects are not on individual allotments, but are upon reservations. In one instance we have an item that will be proposed as a committee amendment, carrying $5,000, if I remember aright, in order to provide water for the sheep and herds that belong to the Navajo Indians.

Mr. MANN. They need the water for the sheep and herds. They have the sheep and herds, and they are unwilling to pay for the water for them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They have nothing to pay it with.

Mr. MANN. They have the sheep and herds. The gentleman from South Dakota says it is to provide water for their sheep and herds, and it must be paid for by the General Government. Here they propose all the way through to construct irrigation projects in order that the Indians may cultivate the soil. Then after a project is constructed we are expected to support the Indians, or support the project, by repairing it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman does not distinguish between specific reclamation projects that are carried in this bill and this item that we are now considering. One is general, while the other is specific.

Mr. MANN. But this will cover repairs on the specific

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It states that no part of this appropriation shall be used on any project for which a specific appropriation is made.

Mr. MANN. Yes, in this act; I understand that. But where the project has been constructed under a specific appropriation it can still be repaired out of this appropriation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will examine the Senate document to which I have called his attention, I think he will find that no part of this fund has been used upon any projects for which there has been a specific appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think the gentleman has no statement on

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, in the appropriation for last year there was $325,000 appropriated for this same purpose. would be very glad to have some of these gentlemen in the West who are closer to these reservations than I am to tell me Something about the expenditure of that $325,000 last year.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have this statement explaining this appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911. The amount appropriated for 1912 was $325,000, and the amount for 1911 was $259,800. This is an analysis of that expenditure:

The employees referred to were engaged in building these reservoirs and irrigation ditches. It will be seen that the total is $247,557.13, leaving an unexpended balance of $12,342. This statement of expenditures comes direct from the Irrigation Bureau of the Indian Department, and the appropriation was expended in the ways I have stated here.

Mr. FOWLER. That was all expended for the purpose of making these lands more valuable, was it not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To make them inhabitable at all. They would not otherwise be used by the Indians except for grazing purposes, unless these irrigation ditches were placed on the land for their use and benefit. It would be arid without

Mr. FOWLER. And it is intended to keep them up by continued appropriations, is it not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not necessarily so, because if we provide homes for these Indians in that way on lands made productive by irrigation they will be self-supporting. Many of them are now self-supporting on irrigated farms.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it proposed to keep up this irrigation process indefinitely? Is that the policy?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Only until the Indians are able to take care of themselves.

Mr. FOWLER. And there is no time fixed when you expect that to be the case?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As fast as they become selfsupporting and get water on the land we can let them become citizens of the State where they live, and their children can then be educated in the white schools in the neighborhood where they live, and in a few years there will be no Indian question; but the Indians will all become citizens, and commingle with the white citizens. We expect in a few years to turn the Indians over to the States if we carry out the policy we have indicated, and we believe it can be successfully carried out.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that this appropriation is rather useless, from the explanation that has been given. I am inclined to think that it is an appropriation for the purpose of giving benefits to others than the Indian Then, I am inclined to think that the appropriation itself, if it were intended for irrigation purposes and not for other purposes within the scope and intent of this bill, is without authority of law. You might just as well make an appropriation to drain the lands of any other section of country as to drain the lands on any of these reservations. I have not gone into the matter as thoroughly as I might have done, because of the fact that I do not live close to these reservations; but I am inclined to think that the point of order ought to be made against this item of this bill, and I think I shall make it, and I do make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will state his point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I make the point of order that it is too late to make the point. This matter has been discussed for several minutes by several gentlemen on the floor. I do not understand that the point of order was reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] reserved the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, I should have done the same thing had not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point or order.

Mr. FOWLER. The point of order, Mr. Chairman, as I understand the matter, is that an appropriation for irrigation purposes is not within the province and scope of the subject matter. The bill provides for appropriation of money for current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

Now, the question of irrigation is no more within the scope of this legislation than it would be if it were for the purpose of irrigating land in any other part of the country, or for the purpose of appropriating money to dredge any stream of the country, in order that the land might be drained into that stream. This is not a bill for the purpose of irrigation or for the purpose of taking care of land or for the improvement of land. It is a bill for the purpose of making appropriations for the various Indian reservations of this country so that they may be properly taken care of, to give them a sufficient supply of money to carry on good schools, and for such other purposes. That is what this bill is intended for, but not for the purpose of irrigating land to make it more valuable, when the Government will get nothing out of it; but the bill is for the purpose of giving the Indians an opportunity to become educated and to become citizens of this country. I do not think it was contemplated by the law authorizing the Government to care for and protect its wards to appropriate money to drain their lands and make them more valuable.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, that is the most remarkable point of order that I have ever heard since I have been in Congress—that a provision which is in the bill is not within the scope and provisions of the bill. I do not think that in all the eight large volumes of Hinds' Precedents, for the compilation of which we paid $20,000, you will find that anybody ever made such a point of order before. This is a bill making appropria-tions for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, "and for other purposes." This provision under consideration makes an appropriation for certain irrigation and other purposes in connection with Indian lands and for employees of the Indian Bureau. That is surely a purpose contemplated and provided for in the bill. It is actually in the bill and therefore within the scope and provisions of the bill. Furthermore, the appropriation is for perfectly legitimate purposes.

Mr. FOWLER. Could you not, then, just as consistently say that that provision of the bill would give you a right to appropriate money for the purpose of the Army or the Navy, or any other department of this Government?

Mr. OLMSTED. If that was one of the purposes of the bill, and it had such a provision, I should say that provision was within the bill.

Mr. FOWLER. I put it to you this way: Is there any law for making this kind of an appropriation under this bill?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is a different question. I have not looked that up, but I assume that there is.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think there is. I think it is entirely new legislation.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is another point.
Mr. FOWLER. That is my point of order.
Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The decision now to be rendered by the Chair is upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler]?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. MILLER. And the decision of the Chair will rest upon the character of the point of order which he has raised, and upon that alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will try to make it so

Mr. FOWLER. I make the point of order that this is new legislation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman made one point of order and reserved no other. Therefore he can not make a second point of order now.

Mr. MILLER. If I understand the point raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler], it is this: That the Committee on Indian Affairs have reported in their appropriation bill a subject over which they had not jurisdiction, a subject matter that they had no business to recommend to the House for an appropriation, or for legislation of this character; in other words, that we have attempted to aid the Indians by making an appropriation for the irrigation of their lands, and that we have no authority and no right to do that.

I do not care to address myself at any length upon the point, because it must be apparent to the Chairman at the very outset that, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted), this is a most unique, novel, and new point of order. The Committee on Indian Affairs have for years reported items of this exact character. This House has passed similar appropriations for many, many years.

We have undertaken to inaugurate irrigation projects in most parts of the country and they have been for the welfare and benefit of the Indians. That is the object of this bill; that is the character of this provision. It is for the civilization, benefit, and welfare of the Indians, and unquestionably the point of order which the gentleman has raised can not be sustained.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. MURDOCK. If a Member in Committee of the Whole merely makes a point of order without elaborating what the point of order is, can he be forced by any sort of process to state his point of order, and is not the Chairman under the necessity of holding the point of order good even if the Member does not state it fully?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas have any hesitation in reaching the conclusion that the gentleman from Illinois has not been explicit in what he has stated?

Mr. MURDOCK. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the gentleman from Illinois, but I did hear the gentleman from Minnesota ask the Chair if the Chair in his decision would confine himself to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois; and that is the reason I asked the Does the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole question. House on the state of the Union necessarily confine himself to the exact point of order made by the gentleman who makes it?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I never heard that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole was in any way bound to read the mind of the gentleman making the point of order or to guess for himself what the point of order might be. He asks very properly, as the Chairman did in this instance, the gentleman from Illinois to state his point of order. The gentleman from Illinois stated his point of order, and that is the point of order for decision.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to know if there is any difference in making a point of order in explaining what is meant by a point of order and in naming it in certain terms? I explained my point of order as being practically that this was outside of the provisions of the law making appropriations of this character. I further said that it was new legislation, and upon that proposition I made the point of order, and on that question I ask a ruling of the Chair.

Now, what I want to know is if the Chair is not compelled. when a point of order is raised against any appropriation, to look into the appropriation and see whether it is a proper appropriation in the bill, whether all the points of order that might have been raised against it are in fact raised against it or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Illinois that there is no obligation resting upon the Chair to investigate the merits of the bill. It is his duty only to hear the arguments on the point of order made and pass upon the same.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the Chair's attention to the fact that this appropriation provides not only for construction, but for repair and protection of irrigation projects. I think it has been settled, and well settled, that where an appropriation has been made for the construction of something, especially where the limit of cost has not been made, that it is then in order to appropriate money for the repair or the maintenance of that particular project or building, or whatever it may be.

I will say that some considerable portion of this money is actually used in repair work and in protecting work that has been already constructed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to give the reason for this appropriation, as stated by the Department of the Interior, so as to enable the Chair in arriving at a decision to know what the reasons are for the expenditure of the money. The department says:

This fund, which is not reimbursable, is a very important one to the welfare of many needy Indians. It is applicable for work on various reservations, where the Indians have no resources, which can be used as a basis of credit to obtain leans from the Government. It is used for both irrigation and drainage, also for the protection of irrigable lands from damages by flood; it is also used for the payment of annual reclamation charges for Indian lands under the Truckee-Carson, Nev., and Salt River Valley, Ariz. reclamation projects. It provides for the expenses of the office of chief inspector of irrigation, in connection with the exercizing of general supervision over all irrigation work performed on Indian reservations, including the preparation of monthly and annual cost reports, covering expenditures made from the general fund, tribal moneys, or special appropriations.

Some of these works are under way, appropriations have heretofore been made for them, and we should continue to make the appropriations for the purpose of carrying out and com-pleting the works under way. I think also it comes under the Holman rule, Rule XXI, that wherever an appropriation is made that will reduce in the future the amount of money to be spent for any purpose it is not subject to a point of order. It is evident, according to the understanding of the department and the understanding of the committee, that these projects will in the future take the Indians off the hands of the Government so that they will no longer be wards of the Government, and that the Government will not have to make appropriations for them in 10 or 20 years. I believe that under both of these clauses it is not subject to a point of order; first, because the projects are already under way and there have been appropriations made for them, and, second, it will reduce expenditures which we must make from year to year in order to have the projects completed.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this appropriation is for the continuation of work already in progress?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Several of them.

Mr. OLMSTED. And therefore brings it within the exception of Rule XXII, which permits appropriations in continuation of public works already in progress.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Truckee-Carson and the Salt River Valley and the Arizona and several others are already under way

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. Is not a portion of this appropriation for new work

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not so understand it. provides for the expenses of officers, the chief inspector of irrigation, who has heretofore been in office, created several years ago as soon as we entered into the irrigation of Indian lands. We have had him for several years, and now have a general supervisor over irrigation. We have had for several years an irrigation engineer, and all of these have been carried on the pay roll, and we must continue to carry them on the pay roll unless we abandon these projects.

Mr. FOWLER. What does this mean: "For construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is for the construction of irrigation ditches and reservoirs.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; construction.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How can you get the water on the Indian lands unless you have ditches and reservoirs and dams?

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not for new work that has not been begun?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is not.
-Mr. FOWLER. What is meant by "construction"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No new project costing over $25,000 can be begun without authority from Congress. If it will cost less than $25,000 then the department does not have to go to Congress.

Mr. FOWLER. The paragraph says:

Water rights, ditches, land necessary to canals, pipe lines and reservoirs for Indian reservations and allotments and for drainage and protection of irrigable land from damage by flood.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The lands can not be used for irrigation unless all those things are done. Unless you prevent the land from being washed away, you can not use the irriga-tion ditch. Suppose your ditch would be washed out, how could you irrigate the land below the broken ditch?
Mr. FOWLER. So it is for a new purpose?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; it is not. It is for a purpose that the land is already being used for, and in order to prevent the ditches from being ruined and destroyed we must expend this money.

Mr. Chairman, I insist that a large portion of the appropriation is without any legal authority, that there is no law for it. It is new legislation for a new construction, for new purchases, for new appliances, and I insist that where a part of an appropriation is without authority, it being new legislation, the whole paragraph goes out on a point of order. I insist that it is new legislation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has now included in his objections some things that he did not include at the outset.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I have included these points all of the time.

Mr. MILLER. It may be that the gentleman had them in mind, but I, of course, am confined in my judgment to the exact words that the gentleman used. It is very likely that he had them in mind, but he did not state them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair perhaps will be able to clear that up by saying that the gentleman's point of order was probably continuous. The gentleman rose and made one point of order and then rose later and made another, combining the

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I was not criticizing that at all.

I wonder if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] realizes what the effect of sustaining that point of order would be? I wonder if he realizes what the effect would be upon the Indian upon the land; and of the Members of this House, I take it that the gentleman from Illinois is just as desirous of looking after the welfare of the Indian as any other. I wonder if he realizes that the Indian, whether we view it rightly or wrongly, has been pushed to the westward until he now occupies the arid region, practically, of the United States. He is obliged to occupy in large numbers the semiarid or the arid regions of the country. Recognizing that he is situated in this environment, in years past we have taken up the subject of irrigation of his lands, to assist him, knowing, as we must know, that we can solve the Indian question, and only solve it, by making the Indian self-supporting, by placing him in an environment where he is given land from which he can earn a livelihood. We have solved it in the question of irrigation, I think, better than it has been solved in any other way. We have placed in his hands a means or opportunity for earning a livelihood and establishing his independence.

I sincerely trust that the gentleman will withdraw his point Why? To remove this would mean the absolute paralysis of the irrigation projects of the Nation in relation to the Indians; it would mean that we would have to withdraw the engineers who are directing the irrigating of the Indian lands throughout the Nation, and withdraw the appropriation that provides for looking after the detail that must arise in a large diversified project such as this. It would withdraw the irrigation of the lands of Indians in places like Nevada, in places like Utah, where the Indians are poverty stricken, where they have no tribal funds, and are the charitable wards of the Government; and we are by this trying to put them in the way of being self-supporting. I do not believe that the gentleman from Illinois wants to do that. If I understand the attitude he has assumed heretofore on the floor of this House, he is the friend of the Indian, and he would rather aid him than harm him, and I want to say that insisting upon that point of order, and the sustaining of it, would strike the greatest blow to the welfare of the Indians that has been stricken in the history of legislation by this Congress. [Applause.] But, Mr. Chairman, I do not concede the point of order. I simply ask the gentleman from the standpoint of the welfare of the Indian, which he must have at heart, to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think the rule requiring appropriations to be authorized by existing law, except those in continuance of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, applies in this instance. I do not think the gentleman's point of order is good and, in the second instance, I desire to reiterate what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller] has said, to merely emphasize the fallacy of making such a point of order. For the last few years each year we have been carrying on an Irrigation Bureau in the Department of Indian Affairs. The bureau is now in existence, is created by law, and it is a bureau to do what? It is to afford irrigation to helpless and defenseless Indians. There you have a bureau in actual operation. You have irrigation projects partially completed, which will go to rack and ruin but for the continuation of the very projects that are begun. Now comes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] making a point of order which I do not think is good at all, but if the item were subject to a point of order I can not conceive with what consistency the gentleman would come in and allow all of the irrigation and all of the money expended for the last five years to go to rack and ruin. To leave this item out of the bill for one year would permit the ditches to fill up, allow the pumps to rust out, and the irrigation projects to be ruined and destroyed, and surely if the point of order were good, no man who understood the facts would make the point of order. But I do not think that, under the rule to which I have just referred, that the point of order is good. I think it ought to be overruled. The committee with great care went into this question. It was a unanimous report. Everyone who knows the facts will support it. This bill should not be mutilated and cut to pieces without knowing what havoc and ruin they inflict.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. parent that the contention of the gentleman from Illinois is founded on an erroneous understanding of the bill, a mistaken idea. As the Chair understands it, the provision at issue is merely the continuation of a drainage system that has been going along from year to year and must continue from year to year in order to protect it against depreciation and ruin. On that ground, and that alone, the Chair will overrule the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, $75,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A few years ago this item was $25,000. Then it was increased to $50,000. It is now $75,000. I am in favor of appropriating all the money necessary to prevent the traffic of intoxicating liquors among the Indians, but it occurs to me that since the appropriation of $25,000 Oklahoma has come into the Union as a State, Arizona and New Mexico have come into the Union as States, and we have no Territory in the United States, except the District of Columbia, where the General Government has ordinary police power; and I would like to know whether of local self-government by the different States the progress where the Indians reside is to be accompanied by an additional increased appropriation by the General Government to enforce what the States ought to enforce themselves-the control of the liquor traffic. How much will it be now from year to year? How much of this money is expended in Oklahoma, when we used to expend over the country only $25,000 when it was a Territory? I suppose now we expend a great deal more than then, since it is a State, and what becomes of the money we are expending?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Just the other day some of it was spent in this city, where some Indians went into a saloon and bought and drank whisky.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and I never heard anything more ridiculous in the world then prosecuting men here in the city of Washington because they sold a drink to Indians. It is absolutely ridiculous, although it may have been contrary to law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it is a violation of the law, and the officers would have been remiss in their duties had they not arrested those men.

Mr. MANN. If the Government would enforce all the laws in the same rigid manner that they enforced that most of us would make a trip to some place. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to say that this amount is the same amount as carried in last year's bill, $75,000, and I have here the manner in which it was expended. The unexpended balance of the appropriation of last year was $1,431.

The amount appropriated was $75,000. The amount expended was $68,342, leaving an unexpended balance of $3,089, and here is an analysis of this expenditure. The employees received $31,610; traveling expenses, $30,013; transportation of supplies, $159; telephone and telegraph, $657; stationery and office supplies, $783; rewards for arrest, and so forth, $4,627; miscellaneous, $490; making a total of $68,342, with an unexpended balance of $3,089

Mr. MONDELL. How many employees were there?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does not state the number. It says, traveling expenses, $30,000; employees, $31,610.
Mr. MANN. How ridiculous it is to have $30,000 in traveling expenses out of this appropriation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I can answer the gentleman's inquiry by saying this: This service is charged with the duty of protecting over 300,000 Indians scattered through a large part of the United States and Territories. One chief special officer, 2 assistant chiefs, 11 regular officers, 4 constables, and over 100 fee deputies were engaged in this work. I think that is a complete analysis of the expenditures for this purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, not otherwise provided for, and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,450,000: Provided, That hereafter employees of Indian schools may be allowed, in addition to annual leave, educational leave not to exceed 15 days per calendar year for attendance at educational gatherings, conventions, institutions, or training schools, if the interests of the service require, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and no additional salary or expense on account of this leave of absence shall be incurred: Provided further. That no part of this appropriation, or any other appropriation provided for herein, shall be used to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood, whose parents are citizens of the United States and the State wherein they live and where there are adequate free school facilies provided and the facilities of the Indian schools are needed for pupils of more than one-fourth Indian blood.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Just what is the reason for this first proviso in regard to educational leave? How much leave do employees of the Indian schools get now?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The leave at present is 30 days,

I understand.

What is the excuse, the real excuse offered? If we increase the leave, we will be flooded by demands of every other employee of the Government for the same extra amount of leave of 15 days a year.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is because the existing requirements of the department requires these teachers to remain on the reservation and school all the while and they are not permitted to get this leave to attend these farmers' institutes and State normal institutes and the other places where they can be informed as to what is going on in the educational world, and they lose pay if they leave.

Mr. MANN. They could get it under the annual leave if they desired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But this annual leave does not take place at the time.

Mr. MANN. The annual leave usually takes place when it is desired to take place. It is just as easy to have it take place then as at any other time. Now, does the gentleman have the idea of granting leave to employees in Washington here to attend conventions at some places in addition to their annual leave, or that the Post Office Department may grant an additional leave of 15 days in order for some one to attend some extra picnic on the theory that it might be of good to the service?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We are only following the rule of other States of permitting them to attend these schools. I know they do in my State. The teachers are permitted to attend, and it is strongly recommended by the department for the reason that they will render better service.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. The matter was presented to the committee with great care by the chairman of the committee, and the situation, in addition to what the chairman has stated, is this: As the matter now stands they have 30 days' leave when they can go away. During the summer months there is nothing for them to do except to remain around the school grounds at these Indian schools. If they leave to go and attend any normal institute or any agricultural institute or any normal school for the pur-pose of improving their minds and obtaining information as to agricultural pursuits-and most of these schools have farms in connection with them-they lose their pay, and the result is that they do not get to attend these schools. This amendment permits them to go and attend these schools, and the result of this arrangement is the Government gets improved service. unless they pay their tuition?

They get no additional pay. The service is benefited and no change is made except the abrogation of a rule or regulation not in keeping with the best interests of the service.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. They get no additional pay.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They can only go with the consent of the Indian Department.

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely; and it costs the Government nothing. If they do not do this, they hang around the Indian school all summer, and thus fail to improve their minds with information that would be of value.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, in nearly every city in the country the teachers are now required to attend the teachers' institutes and gatherings of that sort. I think that in my colleague's home that is a compulsory requirement. It is in many instances, and I think it is a very wise one, which prevents the teachers from growing too narrow and hidebound. They get out and swap ideas, and get new ideas, and really become very much better qualified to do their work, because they mingle with other minds and exchange ideas with others. I take it, as has just been stated, that this gives them no additional vacation time. It only gives them leave to go off the reservation instead of spending their vacation time on the reservation.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to doubt what gentlemen have said; but it seems to me very improbable that a teacher in one of these Indian schools can not step off the reservation, except for the 30 days that she gets as annual leave. I regard that as highly improbable.

Mr. FERRIS. It was stated in terms as emphatic as the commissioner could use that the regulations forced that.

Mr. MANN. Then they should change the regulation. idiot would make such regulation and then ask Congress to legislate to reform the regulation? [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My information, obtained from the hearings had before the committee, is that the commissioner said it was a decision of the comptroller.

Mr. MANN. It would not be a regulation, then. a matter of law. I doubt very much if there is any such law or decision of the comptroller.

Mr. Chairman, may I ask, in reference to the other proviso, in reference to the education of children of less than one-fourth Indian blood, whose parents are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they live, does this allow the education of white children whose parents are foreigners, or whose parents are not citizens of the State wherein they live?

Mr. FERRIS. The answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois, as it has come to us in the hearings and as we agreed upon was this—although I will state in the first instance that there should be a slight amendment offered, which the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] has prepared, and which will be offered later, under the treaty, and I want to answer as briefly as I can, now, the question of the gentleman from Illinois—the Commissioner of Indian Affairs advised us that the schools were running over full in many instances, and that many of the Indian children could not now receive instruction in the schools under the appropriations made. He told us that if we would adopt this amendment and thereby eliminate Indians of less than one-fourth Indian blood, where the parents were citizens of the United States and where they had adequate facilities in white schools, it would enable him to get more Indian children into the Indian schools and fewer white children.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the parents were not citizens; suppose they were foreigners?

Mr. FERRIS. We have nothing to do with foreigners unless they are Indian children. We do not try in Indian schools to educate the children of foreigners at any time. The idea here is to get rid of a lot of Indian children who have only a taint of Indian blood in them, and who, in fact, ought to be educated in the local community where they live, in the white schools.

Mr. COOPER. Ought you not to insert the words "Indian children" in line 2, page 3?

Mr. FERRIS. The amendment referred to is on page 5.
Mr. COOPER. I mean page 5.
Mr. MANN. It has been said that that would be the effect of this proposition-to permit the white children to remain in the

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, I think not. Mr. MANN. Oh, but white children certainly do go to some of these Indian schools. Certainly they do; and did in some of these places that we have specifically provided for in the past.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois what schools there are where white children attend

Mr. MANN. It would not make any difference there, whether they paid their tuition or not. There are Indian schools where the white children go.

Mr. DAVENPORT. That is what I was asking the gentleman; what Indian schools they were?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman himself can probably tell me. Mr. FERRIS. That does not apply to the Indian schools in my neighborhood. White children do not go to Indian schools in Oklahoma, but children do go to the Indian schools who have little strain of Indian blood and who are in reality white children, and the local community ought to school them. We believed the suggestion of the chairman of the committee to be a wise one-that children whose fathers and parents are wellto-do white men who have married Indian women, the children having only a strain of Indian blood, should be educated in the white schools of the community. Surely the Federal Government ought not to educate those children. This amendment would eliminate that class of children.

Mr. MANN. This proposition, as I understand it, is for the purpose of restricting the number of those who may go to school; to cut out some who may go to the Indian schools?

Mr. FERRIS. That is the idea.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Children whose fathers are voters and citizens

Mr. MANN. That is the point I asked about in the first place. What is the point about the father being a citizen? Suppose their fathers are not citizens?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This applies only to the schools where there are not adequate facilities for the schooling of the Indian children.

Mr. MANN. Why should we give the preference to the children of foreign parents over children whose parents are citizens of the United States?

Mr. MILLER. I think the gentleman from Illinois must be mistaken in the belief that the children of foreign parents attend the Indian schools in the United States. If that is being done, it should be eliminated immediately. Mr. MANN. I think in the gentleman's own State there have been instances of that, but I can not give the gentleman the particulars now. I have a very distinct recollection in regard to that. We have had such a provision in the law. But what does the provision mean-

Whose parents are citizens of the United States?

What is the point about that?

Mr. MILLER. It means those who have allotments, Mr. GRAHAM. Does it not refer to certain classe Does it not refer to certain classes of Indians, as distinguished from those who are not citizens?

Mr. CARTER. Precisely. It refers to the Indians who have been given United States citizenship and makes a distinction between Indian citizens of the United States and those not yet granted such citizenship.

That is the purpose of it, is it? Mr. MANN.

Mr. CARTER. That is the purpose.

Mr. MANN. Very well, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I offer the following amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 1, after the word "herein," insert the words "except appropriations made pursuant to treaties."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The purpose of this amendment is apparent. It is simply to protect children who have rights under treaties, although they may have less than one-fourth Indian blood. The purpose of the proviso was to limit the expenditure of public money and not moneys that the Indians have, which belong to them by reason of treaties.

Mr. FERRIS. This is the amendment which saves us from being forced to override treatles.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the purpose of it. Mr. FERRIS. There was no thought on the part of any member of the committee of overriding the provisions of treaty

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The committee was desirous of limiting the appropriations made only from public moneys.

Mr. FERRIS. So far as it could be done in the face

So far as it could be done in the face of treaty stipulations.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I believe it was agreed that the committee should offer this amendment on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke]

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it is getting late, and I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BARNHART, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15471. An act making appropriation for repair, preservation, and exhibition of the trophy flags now in store in the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.; and

H. R. 20842. An act to provide for a tax upon white phosphorus matches, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. KENNEDY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 5, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 5, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXPENDITURES FOR FOREST RESERVATIONS (H. DOC. NO. 681).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement of the disbursements of the Department of Agriculture for salaries and other compensation of inspectors, forest supervisors, deputy forest rangers, assistant forest rangers, and the number of each class, which will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed. The order to print will include, if there be no objection, certain illustrations.

Mr. HEYBURN. Should there not be an order to print first before the reference?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was the order, that it be printed and referred.

Mr. HEYBURN. And referred afterwards. Mr. WARREN. It goes to the printer first. Mr. HEYBURN. I thought it was stated th

Mr. HEYBURN. I thought it was stated the other way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair may have stated it in a roundabout way, but that is what the Chair intended to state.

SENATOR FROM MAINE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I present the credentials of my colleague [Mr. Gardner], chosen by the Legislature of the State of Maine to fill the unexpired term ending March 4, 1913. I ask that the credentials be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be read.

The Secretary read the credentials of Obadiah Gardner, chosen by the Legislature of the State of Maine a Senator from that State for the term ending March 4, 1913.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be referred to the Secretary of the Senate for the files of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The Senator elect is present and ready to take the oath of office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator elect will present himself at the desk to take the constitutional oath of office.

LANDS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS.

Mr. OWEN. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 6078) amending the act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and for other purposes," approved February 19, 1912. It is a short bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of "An act to provide for the sale of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and for other purposes," approved February 19, 1912, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto:

"And praxided further. That where any cometery now exists, land adjoining same, not exceeding 20 acres, may be sold at its appraised value to some suitable person as trustee as an addition to such cemetery."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OWEN. I present a memorial relating to the conservation of human life as contemplated by the bill (S. 1) providing for a department of health. I move that the memorial be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to.

SERVICE PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment to the bill, consent to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. McCumber, Mr. Burnham, and Mr. Gore conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOOKWORM AND SOIL POLLUTION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 46) of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 5,000 copies on manila paper of a wall chart on hookworm and soil pollution, and that the same be distributed through the folding room of the House of Representatives.

MEXICAN COTTON-BOLL WEEVIL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 47) of the House of Representa-tives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 30,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States of date February 12, 1912, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture submitting a report on the Mexican cotton-boll weevil, together with said report (S. Doc. No. 305), of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, to be distributed through the Senate document room, and 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, to be distributed through the House document room.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there other morning business? Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Committee on Privileges and Elections about when we may expect a report on the Lorimer case? I do not see the chairman of the committee present, and I ask the question of some member of the committee or of the subcommittee who may be

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I did not understand the Senator

Mr. BRISTOW. My inquiry was about when we may expect a report on the Lorimer case. I understood that the committee had reached a conclusion in the matter a week ago, and I was inquiring when the report would be submitted to the

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to say that the chairman of the committee is not now on the floor, but I can assure the Senator from Kansas that the report will be prepared and submitted to the Senate just as soon as it is possible to do so. The chairman is putting in practically all of his time in getting the report ready, and there will be no unnecessary delay. are about 9,000 pages of testimony in the record, and the Senator from Kansas can realize that it is quite a task to prepare and submit a report in such a case. We are, however, going to do it just as soon as possible.

Mr. BRISTOW. The reason I make the inquiry is that time is passing; the first week of April is almost gone, and I do not think the Senate desires to spend another summer in Washington; but there is the Lorimer case, and then we have not had from the Committee on Finance a report on any of the tariff bills. It seems to me that unless we expedite business somewhat we shall soon have a congestion which will keep us here until August.

I will say that, so far as the time of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is concerned, I have spent almost a year on that committee and on this case; I have attended every meeting of the committee every day; and I am just as anxious to get through with it as is the Senator from Kansas. The chairman of the committee is now present, and I think he will bear me out in stating that this report will be prepared and submitted as soon as it can justly be prepared

Mr. BRISTOW. I might add, for one, that I should regret to be compelled to spend another summer in Washington. am now serving my fourth year in the Senate, and every summer since I have been a Member has been spent in session. We have now the Lorimer case, the tariff bills, and other impertant legislation to consider, and unless we get at that business soon we shall have hot weather with us, and then we will find ourselves struggling through another summer to conclude our work. So far as I am concerned, I shall oppose any adjournment until we dispose of the Lorimer case and other important legislation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to say that the Senator from Kansas does not want to avoid hot weather any more than I do.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. PENROSE. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and en-courage the industries of the United States, and for other pur-poses," approved August 5, 1909, to submit an adverse report (No. 591) thereon. I ask that the bill be placed on the calendar. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. SIMMONS. In the absence of the Senator from Texas [Mr. Bailey], who is the ranking minority member of the Committee on Finance, I desire to say that the majority report of the committee was not submitted to the minority members until yesterday and that the minority will, just as soon as the Senator from Texas can prepare the report, present a minority report in favor of the House bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, at the proper time I intend to offer amendments to the bill just reported by the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. Penrose], proposing to revise the metal schedule, and I should like to ask the chairman of the committee about what time he expects to bring the bill before the Senate for consideration? I think we ought to have all the information we can on that subject in order that we may prepare for the discussion.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not know that I am the individual to whom such an inquiry should be addressed, as the majority of the Committee on Finance has reported adversely on the bill. Just what the friends of the measure propose to do with it, I am not in a position to explain. I take it that the bill, being on the calendar, will, from time to time, be the subject of speeches by different Senators interested in the subject as may suit their convenience and the convenience of the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I supposed, notwithstanding the fact that the report was an adverse one, that the measure was still in charge of the chairman of the Committee on Finance. I am sure that his wishes with regard to the time for bringing it on for discussion would be heeded by the Members of the Senate. Of course we can fix no definite day now, but if he could suggest about when the bill would be brought up for either amendment, passage, or for indefinite postponement, I think it would be helpful to those of us who are expecting to have something to do with its ultimate disposition.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, so far as I have any informa-tion on the subject, several Senators have advised me that they expect to speak upon this measure in opposition to it. when they will be ready to do so I am not at this time advised. I will, however, be glad to confer with the Senator from Iowa and try to suit his convenience in arranging about the disposition of the measure so far as I have any jurisdiction over it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. Any time will suit me; but I think, in view of the other business before the Senate, that it would be very desirable if we could know a little while in advance when the bill is expected to be taken up for disposal.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think I can say to the Senator from Iowa that the minority report will be in some time about the middle of next week; certainly toward the latter part of next week. I think it is the desire of the minority members of the committee that the matter shall be taken up by the Senate for discussion just as soon after the minority report is filed as is possible. There does not now seem to be very much business of importance before the Senate, and it seems to me that it is a very good time for us to take up a measure of this kind; yet, not knowing exactly when the minority report will come in, I suppose Senators are not now prepared to go on with the argument. I repeat, I believe we shall have the report in next week, and I do not see any reason why we should not be able to take up the bill the week after next.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I shall cheerfully cooperate with the Senator from North Carolina to expedite action on the bill and have it taken up at the very earliest possible date.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I assume, then, that nothing will be done with respect to the bill, unless some Senator desires to speak generally upon it, until the week after next.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should assume not; yet I do not see any reason why, if any Senator wishes to address the Senate upon the bill he should not do so next week, although we may not then have the minority report in.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not so much interested in speeches on the subject as I am in action upon it, though I do not think I shall care to offer the amendments I desire to offer until near the time when action is expected.

I trust the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. SIMMONS. having the bill in charge, will find himself in a position to call it up week after next and have it made the unfinished business, so that we may get through with it as quickly as possible.

Mr. PENROSE. I shall be very glad to do so, Mr. President, so that this and all other pending tariff bills may receive prompt action in order to facilitate the adjournment of Con-

EMPLOYEES OF COMMON CARRIERS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to give notice that on Monday next, immediately following the routine morning business, I wish to-address the Senate on the bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

POST ROADS AND RURAL DELIVERY ROUTES.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to give notice that on Monday next, following the remarks of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Chamberlain], I will address the Senate on the bill (S. 2935) to provide for the construction, maintenance, and improvement of post roads and rural delivery routes through the cooperation and joint action of the National Government and the several States in which such post roads or rural delivery routes may be established.

AMENDMENT OF PRINTING LAWS.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4239) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], which the Secretary will again state.

The Secretary. On page 75, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "eight" and insert "two"; in line 16, on the same page, to strike out "four" and insert "one"—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire the propositions treated as one amendment?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the amendment might be read through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And considered as one amendment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the entire amendment, and it will be treated as one amendment unless there be objection.

The Secretary. It is also proposed in line 17, page 75, to strike out "one dollar and a half" and insert "fifty cents," so as to make the paragraph read:

The superintendent of documents is authorized to furnish to subscribers the daily Congressional Record at $2 for the long session and $1 for the short session, or 50 cents per month, payable in advance.

It is also proposed, on page 75, line 18, after the word "advance," to insert:

The Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to make, on or before the 1st of July, 1912, such rules and regulations as will enable all postmasters in the United States to receive popular subscription for the daily Congressional Record at the aforesaid terms per year, and report all such subscriptions and account for and pay the amount received therefor to the Public Printer.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, no measure more important to the Members of the Senate and the people of the United States will be presented at this session of Congress. If this bill should pass and the Members of Congress should wake up some morning and read it they would be astonished, but they would be helpless. It is intended through this measure to turn over to a syndicate of newspapers the function of telling the people what their representatives in Congress are doing, and to tell the people what the executive departments of the Government are doing. It is in the nature of a proposition for silence unless you pay for the knowledge.

I would not have addressed the Senate upon this question to-day except that I feel that it is important almost beyond estimation. It proposes to reduce to the very minimum the opportunity for the people to know what their representatives, not only in Congress but in the executive departments, are It proposes to place in the hands of the committee a power greater than Congress itself should possess, and at the expense of Members of Congress.

To-day is the last occasion I shall be with you for some time to come, and I came here only to place the responsibility for the action in connection with this bill upon those of you who will remain here. I hope to be able to set a fire under this bill that will burn it up this morning. It is without excuse for its existence or for the form in which it is presented.

Mr. President, ordinarily I am not particular whether or not all Senators are present or only myself, but inasmuch as I intend the responsibility to be one that can not be avoided by the statement "I was not present," I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Lippitt	Pomerene
Borah	Curtis	Lodge	Rayner
Bourne	Dillingham	McCumber	Reed
Bristow	du Pont	McLean	Root
Bryan	Fall	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Burnham	Foster	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Burton	Gallinger	Newlands	Smith, Mich.
Catron	Gamble	Oliver	Smoot
Chamberlain	Gardner	Owen	Swanson
Chilton	Gronna	Page	Thornton
Clapp .	Heyburn	Penrose	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	Johnson, Me.	Perkins	Williams
Cullom	Jones	Poindexter	Works

Mr. SWANSON. My colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is detained from the Senate on account of serious illness in his family.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] is necessarily absent from the Chamber.

Mr. SHIVELY. I am requested to announce that the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone] is necessarily absent from the city. He is paired on all votes with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]

I also desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. Kern] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was asked to state, on behalf of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], that he is necessarily absent, having been unavoidably called home.

I am requested to announce that the junior Mr. JONES. Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Bradley] is unavoidably absent from the city.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is necessarily absent from the city on business of the Senate

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am inclined to believe that the interest manifested in this measure is not going to be very intense, and I shall not expend an undue amount of energy in impressing or seeking to impress upon Senators the importance of this question. I shall probably let them find it out. They may some day be asking the attention of the Senate for relief.

An attempt is to be made to inaugurate an entirely new system of law as a substitute for the existing law. I am not going to characterize that attempt as surreptitious, but I am going to characterize it as silent. When the bill first came in I asked that it be reprinted so that the changes from existing law might be in italics or distinguishing figures or letters. I thought an order was entered to that effect, but it seems that it was not so stated; so that there is nothing in this print of the bill by which anyone can know existing law as compared with the proposed changes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the

Mr. HEYBURN. Do not hesitate about that, please. I should like to be interrupted.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no particular desire to do it, but I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the morning after his request was made we had placed upon the desk of every Senator a printed bill showing the comparisons of the proposed bill with the present law, and I thought every Senator had a copy of that print. I know the request was com-Here is a copy of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I saw that document, and it was the sight of it that made me suggest the ordinary manner of procedure, so that in the body of the bill we would know, without referring from one page to another and reading down for comparison, that which we are entitled to know.

I have undertaken this morning to direct attention to an amendment which I offered, which I thought was broad enough to bring up, perhaps, all of the questions involved in this

Under existing law every Senator is entitled to send out 88 copies per day of the Congressional Record. The Vice President is included in that order. There is, I take it, no Senator in this body who has not requests from his constituents for many times that number. They are requests of right. Those who are interested in the making of laws are those that we left at home.

Some people think, or seem to think, that the only people who are interested in the making of laws are those who make them. That would be true in a monarchy, or a kingdom, or the old-fashioned sort of arbitrary government. But every man of responsibility in point of citizenship is entitled to know promptly and fully what we are doing, what we are proposing to do, and how we are proposing to do it; and he is entitled to know the expressed views of every Member of this body upon those questions. It is his right as much as it is the right of the Senator to draw his pay for services.

We are not sent here in blind confidence that we will do the will of our constituency. They are entitled to know why we are acting and to what purpose. A lot of ridicule is heaped upon the Congressional Record by gentlemen who would like to assume the responsibility of informing the public from their own standpoint and in their own way what Congress is doing. Had experience proven that they were of the high measure of responsibility that we might expect them to be, we could rest with that. There was a time when the newspapers in this country reported the proceedings in Congress, and the people of the country, who support the newspapers and who own Congress, could be advised every day of what we did, and we would have the opportunity of suggestions as to their views. But the time has come when the only purpose which Congress seems to serve to the people who call themselves reporters is that of sensation and jest.

If the generations that are to assume the responsible duties of citizenship were to be educated only through the newspapers, the Government would not last long, and the newspapers would be out of a vocation.

I have some very refreshing comments by newspapers, which I have clipped from time to time, as to their views on the right of the people to the truth—to accurate information. One newspaper man said openly that the newspapers of the country intended to mold public opinion, and that in molding public opinion they proposed to state the facts that would justify their purpose. That is the spirit that is behind the attempt to suppress through legislation a legitimate system of advising the people of the truth.

A newspaper man with a conscience must squirm when he reads his account of the proceedings of this body in the presence of some one who tells him that he has read the official statement. He must squirm, as all men squirm, when they are convicted of making garbled statements, or misstatements of fact, or when they are convicted of suppressing all or any part of the truth, or when they are convicted by a simple inspection of a responsible official record of having suppressed or distorted or misstated the action of a Member of Congress in either House, because they liked him or did not like him, or because it was the policy of this paper or that to boost one man and not another.

I would not charge any lember of this body with being affected or influenced by what the newspapers might say, or what they might fail to say, as to his manner of performing his responsible duty, because it would be a slander upon a Member of this body.

The only safeguard to the people, so far as it is a safeguard, is the Congressional Record. It speaks the truth, and nothing but the truth. In this body there is no such thing as "leave to print." What men say is recorded at the desk, is printed and is sent out at the expense of the people for whom it was printed, because they want it. If you could suppress the Congressional Record, Munchausen's Travels would be mild compared with the newspaper statements of what transpired in Congress. And I can take up the papers of this morning in this city, and in the city of New York, and others, and convict any man who dares to deny it.

I read the newspapers. There are many facts of interest and value stated in them. After you have gotten over the first page and the large type of scandals and crimes you will find in fairly sizeable type further on some statements that are worthy of consideration.

Now, Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of attacking the newspapers, but with the intent, among other things, of making a few statements which I defy them or any other person to disprove. The man who comes here caring what they say about him ought not to be here and the man who being here cares ought to leave. I do not say that out of disrespect for journalism in its true sense; I say it as a correct rebuke to those who, enjoying the courtesy of this body, abuse it. They treat the Members of this body, without regard to their personnel, as though they were merely here for the purpose of their amusement and that Congress was a great joke. We give them special rates in the mail. We passed an insane bill giving them special rates under the tariff laws. They will sit snugly here, guests without courtesy, and may I not this morning express the truth about it when it is wrapped up in this provision of the bill so snugly? The whole effort is to reduce the power of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a medium of true statement to the people as to what Congress does.

I am going to look into the facts. The amendment which I have proposed to make is on page 75 of the bill. At present the Congressional Record is furnished only on a solvent basis, the price being fixed at a figure that meets the cost of its production. The daily edition is about 28,000. Just think of it. It is sent to only 28,000 of the American people out of more than 40,000,000 who are capable of reading it and understanding it. Only 28,000 copies are printed. The cost of the Congressional Record for the first session of the Sixty-first Congress was $6.30; that is, per issue. I mean to say for each Congressional Record through the term. For the second session of the Sixty-first Congress it was $13.63; for the third session it was $5.98; making the total cost $25.91 for printing the Congressional Record for that Congress—the Sixty-first.

Now, $25.91 is a pretty big price for an American citizen to pay for knowing what his representatives are doing and how they are doing it. It was subscribed for—and only a few people know where it can be obtained or how it may be obtained—by 205 subscribers for the first session, which brought a revenue of $582.50. There were 282 subscribers for the second session, which brought a revenue of $1,157.50. There were 719 subscribers for the third session, which brought a revenue of $1,478.50, making a total for the Sixty-first Congress of $3,219.50 for those who subscribed at that very high price.

Of course, that can not be termed a popular subscription. There are a very comparatively small number of the people who can pay $25 a year for subscription to the Congressional Record. The amendment which I have offered and which is under consideration provides as follows:

On page 75, line 15, strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "two."

That is, the bill provides that the subscription shall be $8 per long session of Congress. I propose to reduce it to $2.

Then the next amendment is in line 16. I propose to strike out $4 for the short session and insert $1 for the short session, and in line 17 I propose to strike out $1.50 per month and insert 50 cents per month.

Now, those are popular prices. They would make it entirely available to all the people.

Then I propose to insert the following, on line 18, after the word "advance," and this is a part to which I desire especially to direct the attention of Senators:

The Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to make, on or before the 1st of July, 1912, such rules and regulations as will enable all postmasters in the United States to receive popular subscriptions for the daily Congressional Record at the aforesaid terms per year, and report all such subscriptions and account for and pay the amount received therefor to the Public Printer.

I have taken some pains to inquire as to public sentiment and the probable results of this amendment. I have no hesitation in saying—and I speak from the consensus of a large scope of opinion—that there would be 2,000,000 subscribers to the Congressional Record at those prices, $1 for the short session and $1.50 or even $2 for the long session.

The post offices of the United States will announce in bold form in their waiting hall, where the people congregate, that subscriptions are received there and the price. They would announce something that a lot of people do not know, that the Congress of the United States would meet at Washington on a certain day, and that a record, a correct record, of its daily proceedings would be published each day. It would become the subject of controversy among the people in the neighborhood until it would soon be known that a popular subscription was open for the Congressional Record. It would promote controversy as to what was reported in the Congressional Record. It would set young and old, especially the younger portion of the citizens, to discussing and considering and weighing the opinions of men and the responsible acts of their representatives.

I have been sending for years into a mining camp in Idaho the Congressional Record, together with other documents. I was there last year, and I asked an old-timer, who had been there all the time and in whose name I sent the paper, "George, what becomes of these Congressional Records?" He said, "I will tell you. They come to me first, and I read them aloud to all the boys in the cabin, and when they know that the Congressional Record is there I have quite an audience. Then," he said, "we discuss it in all parts of this mining camp. Then the boys will come to me and they will say, 'George, I wish you would let me see that page in the Record where So-and-so said so-and-so.'" And those people are pretty live people. He said that goes on and that copy of the Record passes from hand to hand, is loaned from cabin to cabin, and you will see the last of it in fragments of some man's speech or the record of some vote; and by that time they will have another one. He said the result is that that mining camp is as well informed on the proceedings of Congress as any equivalent number of people in the United States, and I know it by the letters they write me.

I have said before, and I repeat it, because it is proper in this connection, during the Easter holidays not many years ago a nephew of mine, then in Yale College, came down to visit us. He had known Congress only through the newspapers, and it was more or less of a joke or a farce, or the coming together of grafters, according to the newspapers that he read. He stayed here as my guest and sat in that gallery for a week. He came to me, and he said, "Uncle, I want you to send me the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD," and he recited to me about his change of opinion. I, of course, arranged to send it to him. He wrote me that he had enlisted the sympathy of his class in it, and he formed right there in that great institution of learning a political club, and during the period that he was there that club was a live political institution, each proud of the knowledge he had of what Congress meant, each glorifying that which he had viewed with some measure of contempt before. other college I had the same experience. I sent them the They organized a political club for information and individual improvement with the same general result. When those boys left the college those clubs did not die, because they were recruited from the ranks.

Now, I have given you the two extremes—the mining camp away up in the mines of Idaho; and I have given you the experience in the foremost educational institution of the world. I assure you that at every point between those along the line like conditions exist, and my appeal to you this morning is to take interest enough in this question to advise yourselves about it.

We have some other duties besides proposing and arguing legislation. We are the great educators of the American people in the political science of government. It is not enough that we understand these questions. It is not enough that 88 of the constituents of each of us should have the opportunity to know. It is our duty to make available to them that which belongs to them. Our services are their property. They are the Government, we are their representatives in the Government. Yet we act sometimes, it seems to me, as though we were the Government. Those people select their representatives with the idea that the representative is going to be of some substantial use, not only in enacting laws for their present government, but in laying the foundation in the intelligence of the people for the enactment and enforcement of laws in the years to come.

Mr. President, what do they propose to do in this bill? They propose not to increase the opportunity of the people to know what we do through the Record, but to reduce it to nothing. This amendment proposes a solvent proposition. Whether or not it is solvent, it is a worthy and justifiable expenditure of the money of those people and these people. It is proposed that hereafter, instead of Senators having the right to send 88 copies of the Congressional Record to a selected few of their constituents, they shall have the opportunity of sending—I will state it accurately so that there will be no question about it—

Provided, That the superintendent of documents may supply, on the request of the Vice President, Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, not to exceed five copies each of any publication of the Government not authorized by this section.

I am glad I ran across that. That I will deal with later. Here it is. There shall be furnished—to the Vice President and each Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner there shall be furnished three copies of the dally RECOED, one to be delivered at his residence, one at the Capitol, and one to be reserved by the Public Printer in unstitched form to be promptly bound in paper when each semimonthly index shall be issued.

Instead of getting 88 copies for your constituents, you get none. You get three copies for yourself, one of which will be retained by your trustee, to be bound later. Why, I suppose we shall hardly be able to know within the Chamber what we are doing or what was said or what we did. We get two copies only for our use, one for our committee room and one for the house. No provision is made for the one under the desk; I suppose that is to be cut off; but it is immaterial. The thing is reduced to such an unjust and absurd proposition that I shall not spend time in discussing whether the one under the desk is in lieu of the one for the committee room or the one at the house.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Curis in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that the Senator from Idaho wants to be absolutely just and correct in the matter, but the bill provides that—

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, do not anticipate what I am just going to take up. I know what the bill provides. If the Senator wants to correct something, well and good; but I prefer to take up the questions as to what the bill provides as my own original statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator made a statement

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I will forestall the Senator and not yield longer at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho declines to yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the old, old way of doing some things. I am just about to state, and I have it in hand, what things. I am just about is the old, old way of doing some things. I am just about to state, and I have it in hand, what they do. In section 68, paragraph 1, the bill provides:

Sec. 68. Par. 1. The Vice President and each Senator shall be entitled to not to exceed $2,500 annually, and each Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner not to exceed $1,800 annually, in value of documents and publications authorized by this section, an account of which with the Vice President, each Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner shall be kept by the superintendent of documents.

That goes to the question of charges against what you might call the right to buy Congressional Records. We have that right now—the right to buy them; we need no act of Congress to give us the right. This money provision of $2,500 would allow us for last year $1,800 for Congressional Records. That much of it would have been expended in sending out 88 copies. I have the figures before me. The amount allowed, $2,500, and the cost of the last two years' Congressional Records for 88 copies, our past and present allotment, would take $1,860 out of that for Congressional Records alone, and we would have $640 left to buy for our constituents the public documents which we now send them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The average for every Senator for the last 10 years for 88 Congressional Records is $660. There is no question about that and it has been stated here on the floor over and over again. Under the law, as the Senator will observe if he will read it, the price is $8 for a long session and $4 for a short session. That has on an average of 10 years amounted to $660.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have here from the officer-if he is an officer-charged with the management of the Congressional Record, whose place of business is in Statuary Hall, a written statement in regard to this matter, which I procured yesterday. He is the man who knows what these things cost. In the short session of the Sixty-first Congress the cost per set ran down to $5.98. Beyond the passage of the appropriation bills there was little done in that session that would have interested many people, although there were a large number of questions involved in their consideration. In the long session of that Congress, however, the cost per set was $13.63. I took that Congress as a criterion because it is of recent date-in fact, it is the last Congress-and I added the three sessions together and it resulted in an aggregate of $25.91 for the Congressional Rec-ORD per set for that Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say, Mr. President, that the average cost of the Congressional Record for the Sixty-first Congress, first session—the short session—was $5.937 per copy, and for the Sixty-first Congress, second session, which was the long one, of which the Senator speaks, the average cost was $13.621 per copy.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OLIVER in the chair).
Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mis-

Mr. HEYRURN, Yes.

Mr. REED. I should like to say that if it costs $13 a copy per session to print the Congressional Record, we had better get a different Public Printer, because that is certainly about six times as much as it ought to cost to print it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. That statement was made offhand, I know; but if the Senator knew exactly what the length of the session was and the amount of paper that it took to print the debates he never would have made such a statement, because, Mr. President, the Sixty-first Congress, second session, was a long session, the one during which there was the tariff discussion, and in the RECORD for that session there were 11,723 pages; the paper cost on an average 3.42 cents per pound, and the actual cost of the Record during that session was $13.621 per copy.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Idaho will pardon me—

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield to the controversy.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator from Utah undertake to say that this cost of $13 per session for the RECORD, assuming there was the same amount of printed matter, would continue to be $13 per copy if we printed a vast number of copies? Is not that cost made up very largely of composition, of the original work of setting the matter?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have a statement here from the Public Printer to the effect that there would be about 10 per cent saved in that amount, provided a million copies of the RECORD had been published.

Mr. REED. That only 10 per cent would be saved?

Mr. SMOOT. That only 10 per cent would be saved. Mr. REED. I may have made a reckless statement a while ago, and it must have been if the Senator from Utah so characterized it; but I undertake to say that any printer on earth who says that you can not save more than that in printing vast quantities is making a statement that can not anywhere be borne out by the facts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that after the Public Printer, in reporting upon what 1,000,000 copies would cost according to the figures in the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, stated that the difference between the cost of 1,000,000 copies and 2,000,000 copies—that is, 1,000,000 extra—would be 10 per cent. As to the difference in cost of printing the 27,000 copies that are now issued and 1,000,000 copies, I have no figures. I am simply giving the information I have from the Public Printer as to the difference in cost between printing an issue of 1,000,000 copies and an issue of 2,000,000 copies.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the statement as to the vast expense that would be incurred by doing that which ought to be done is of secondary importance. Of course it costs something to perform every act of government, and the people expect it to cost something. The item of cost involved in this matter, under the most exaggerated estimate that has been made, is one of insignificance compared with the importance of this question.

I do not accept the figures made by an officer who does not want to carry out the proposition, but wants to find some way not to do it. I say that without intending to animadvert upon the officer personally; but they are comfortably and snugly fixed in the Government Printing Office now and they do not want to be disturbed. That, however, is a consideration of no importance whatever. The question here is, Shall we make the Congressional Record the subject of popular subscription, so that all the people may know truthfully what happens? would be better for them to remain in ignorance and not know at all than to be compelled to depend upon newspaper accounts of what is done in this body.

Mr. President, I shall put into the RECORD in connection with my remarks, with the consent of the Senate, a statement showing the average cost of the RECORD for the long and short sessions, and I shall ask leave to print in connection with it the statement in the handwriting of the officer specifically charged with accounting for the Congressional Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). the absence of objection, permission is granted for printing in the Record the papers referred to by the Senator.

The papers referred to are as follows:

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from Utah has some large figures as to the cost of this proposed change. I have a copy of them here. The Public Printer, in voluntary response to the Senator's suggestion, addressed a letter to the Senator from Utah, under date of January 11, 1912, in which he says:

DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication of January 9 requesting a statement relative to the cost of certain proposed changes in the printing of the Congressional Record. In reply thereto the following statement is submitted—

Now, mark you, he says:

One million copies of the RECORD printed in its present form could not be produced in the buildings now occupied by the Government Printing Office.

I have serious doubt as to the accuracy of that statement, because I think it was based upon an assumption that is not to be recognized.

An edition of 1,000,000 copies of the Congressional Record daily can be printed and produced in an economical manner by—

1. Printing the daily Record in newspaper form; size of pages 19 by 23, five column;

2. The installation of three octuple perfecting newspaper presses, with stereotyping and mailing equipment;

3. The construction of a building having an approximate floor space of 50,000 square feet, and not exceeding three stories in height, adjacent to the railroad yards in the northern or southern sections of the city. city.

Not one of those suggestions is necessary to be taken into consideration. He immediately proposes to print a newspaper of standard size containing this matter, when he has already set up and plated in the office the standard Congressional RECORD. He proposes, in reply to this suggestion, in order to discourage its consideration, to erect a new building, equip it with new presses, and start a newspaper. Well, we all know, or at least, unfortunately, too many of us know, what it costs to start a newspaper. This reminds me somewhat of the to start a newspaper. statement of a man who wants to induce you to start a newspaper so that he can have a job as editor. His estimates on the cost of starting the newspaper are very enticing, as a rule, but the experience of those who accept his suggestion and put up the money are just about in line with this suggestion by the Public Printer.

Let us cut out all of that, because none of it is necessary. Not a particle of that expenditure is necessary. The Congres-SIGNAL RECORD is set up, and it is only a question of the number of presses that you use in printing it; that is all. You can multiply them; and presses are not very expensive as compared with a few years ago. You can set up those extra presses and attach them to the machinery and you can print these additional copies.

It is not at all necessary that these copies should be printed on the same day with the present edition or go out in the same mail. There is no such haste in the printing and mailing of the copies proposed under this amendment as in the case of the copies required here for immediate reference. If they go out the next day or the next it is quite sufficient. What the people want is to know what is done here, and the question of a few hours as to when they know it is not so material.

You can dismiss all of that first antagonistic argument. Now we come to this:

Ten carloads of paper-

That is something substantial-would be consumed daily, and storage space for a 10 days' supply, or 100 carloads, would be necessary.

That is a great item—storage for the paper upon which the RECORD is to be printed. I wonder what the great papers, that print very nearly this number of copies, do to store their paper. That is a trifling objection. It is not substantial.

We come now to another item:

The daily mail shipment would amount to approximately 12 carloads. Why, when we are dealing with our general appropriation bill for the Post Office, the question of buying or hiring or subsidizing 12 carloads does not cause a blink of the eye on the part of any Senator in this body. They do not even stop to read it. It goes right along in the general swing of legislation. This is much less than I expected. I had no idea that a million copies of the Congressional Record could be carried on 12 cars.

The cost of production in newspaper form, based upon the issues and average number of pages during the three sessions of the Sixty-first Congress, and the gain or loss, would be approximately as follows.

It is all on a false basis, because I do not think anyone would want it printed in newspaper form. Here are his figures where he gets up into the upper register. They are based on the last Congress:

Number of issues; First session, 123; second session, 168; third ssion, 82.

Average number of pages per issue: First session, 56; second session, 60; third session, 64.

Cost of 1,000,000 copies of each issue, page 10 by 23—

He is still sticking to something that nobody has suggestedfive columns, on paper at 3 cents per pound-

That would have been an interesting item if we were discussing Canadian reciprocity-

First session, $8,348; second session, $8,858; third session, $9,466.

That makes the cost of paper for a Congress approximately between $27,000 and $28,000.

So he makes it add up as follows:

Cost of 1,000,000 copies each of all issues, first session, $1,026,804; second session, $1,612,156; third session, $776,212.

That is the cost for 1,000,000 copies. Now, listen to this:

Cost of one copy of all issues, first session, $1.02; second session, $1.61; third session, 78 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that that is the cost of the actual printing, and does not include the cost of paper.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is the cost resulting from the addition of the items I have just read, and is so stated.

No increase in the composing-room equipment of the Government Printing Office would be necessary. The matrices would be made in the present Government Printing Office and taken from there to the RECORD printing and plate-making plant.

There would be no extra cost there.

The cost of new equipment would be approximately $140,000.

That equipment is already mentioned, and it would not be necessary at all. Of course, there would be a necessity for increasing the printing presses and some of the things belonging to that class of work.

There is the statement, and the worst that statement can produce is an increased cost of about $552,000. Well, what are we going to get for it? That is the material question. That is the question that arises with every intelligent man having money to pay for something: "What am I going to get for it-for this less than a million dollars?

You are going to get a popular education of the people in that which, were they educated in it to-day, would obliterate much of the vice and ignorance and mistaken impression that exists to-day. It is worth more than that many millions, if you can accomplish this obliteration, to do so.

Mr. President, I regret that I can not remain to listen and participate in the debate, if debate shall follow, upon this question. I have endeavored to state—and I believe I have succeeded, at least to some extent—the basic facts upon which this change rests. In what interest is it proposed?

This country has never voluntarily taken a backward step in anything that would advance the intelligence of the people, or their opportunity to gain intelligence. Is the Congressional Record to be made a joke? Is there any Senator here, speaking for himself, who would confess that his utterances were a joke? I know there is no Senator here so ungracious as to charge that the utterances of another Senator were a joke.

That being the case, are we to degrade ourselves in the rank of intelligent consideration, or in the ability to perform our high duties, by legislating our utterances into oblivion? Are we to confess to the American people that we either do not care or do not dare to let them know or give them the oppor-tunity to know what we say and what we do? To suppress or diminish the opportunity of the people in this respect is to confess that our work will not bear inspection-is to confess that the duties we perform are unimportant or ill performed.

No man will charge any Senator upon this floor with urging a measure such as this from selfish motives, or motives of selfexploitation. A Senator who would entertain such a thought would be unworthy of the position. When we go out, as we do every two years, and meet not only our own immediate constituents in our States, but the people elsewhere, are we not sometimes impressed with the thought that they not only need but that they desire an opportunity to know how the Government is conducted?

This is the Government. The Congress of the United States . is the Government. Those who carry out our mandate ard merely the agencies of government. Sometimes you would think they stood in splendid rank above us. But that is a thought that will not last beyond the first criticism. I repeat, because the idea seems to be lost sight of so often at the cost of intelligent participation in government, that the Government is in the legislative bodies. The Constitution puts it there. It created it first, and it stands in the first rank of our Government. are three departments or branches of the Government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. That is the order of rank. No man can change it by donning a uniform, or by adding an inch of tape to his regalia. Can it be said that that which we do in our responsible capacity is of no interest to the people, or none of their business?

If the execution of a law is not in entire harmony with and obedience to the mandate of Congress, then the executive officer violates his duty. If it is in exact accordance with the mandate of Congress, then to Congress belongs the credit-if credit is due—for the law, with its virtues, its efficiency, or its defects.

Mr. President, I should like to feel in this hour that Congress, recognizing the dignity and importance of their functions due to the people, will show a willingness that the people shall know what they are doing, and, rather than circumscribe it, that they will make it more easy to accomplish.

The post offices are the best medium through which to take these subscriptions, because the people go to the post offices, and will continue to go there, I suppose, more than to any other center. They will say to each other, "Have you subscribed for the Congressional Record?" "No; it is too expensive. I can not pay six, eight, or ten dollars a year for it." "Oh, well, but you do not have to now. You can get it for a dollar a year for the short session and for a dollar and a half, or, at the outside, two dollars, for the long session." "How do I get it?" "Why, go right there to the postmaster's window and subscribe for it"; and his subscription goes to the Public Printer, and the Public Printer puts him on the mailing list.

That is all there is of this amendment. What I have said in general criticism of the bill, outside of this amendment, has been only to prompt other Senators to a closer investigation of the bill.

This is no emergency legislation, except, if there be an emergency clause in it, it is this amendment. Outside of this amendment there is not a rule or regulation in it that could not be dealt with next year as well as this.

Mr. President, I have not had time to examine all of this bill, nor have I felt equal to that duty. But I do know that it is one of those pieces of fallacy that we sometimes encounter, based upon a desire to change something, to put the head where the feet ought to be, without regard to the effect, or to destroy something because, for sooth, some three or four or half a dozen men do not appreciate its value.

I repeat that this legislation either ought to go back to the committee or that which is contained in this amendment should be taken up for affirmative action as a separate measure, without waiting for the bill; and I shall feel no jealousy if any other Senator shall see fit to do that in my absence, for it is a worthy measure.

Now, Mr. President, I have said all that I am able to say at this time. I sincerely hope that the pending measure will not be put through with accelerated speed at the expense of careful and proper legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so that there will be no misunderstanding as to what the bill provides, and in part answer to the criticism made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEY-BURN], I want to call the attention of the Senate to the figures, and they are the accurate cost of printing the Congressional RECORD.

In the first place, Mr. President, under the present law the rate charged for the Record for a long session is $8 per copy, and for a short session it is $4 per copy. The proposed bill does not intend to change those figures, but we have provided a valuation system. Each Senator will be credited at the beginning of the session with $2,500, which he can use in the selection for distribution of any public documents. If a Senator wants to spend it all in copies of the Congressional Record, he can do so.

The Senator from Idaho said that taking the SS RECORDS that a Senator is entitled to under the present law it would amount to about $1,800 of the $2,500 allotment. present and proposed law the charges are and will be $8 for the RECORD for the long session and $4 for the short session, so you can see it would be impossible for the 88 Records to amount to $1,800. It is not so under the present law, and the proposed law does not change the rate one penny. In the short session 85 copies at $4 would be $352, instead of $1,800, and in the long session it would be $704, instead of $1,800, as stated by the Senator. Taking an average of the two, it would be $528, instead of $1,800. Taking a number of years, say, the last 10 years, the average value of 88 Records has been $660. The average value of the Yearbook, and every Senator has had to his credit 1,152 volumes, at a cost for each of 95 cents, amounts to $1,094.40. In the past Senators have had issued of those two items alone to the amount of $1,754.40, and the other publications, on the $2,500 basis, would be $745.60.

So, under the proposed bill, Mr. President, even at the prices charged, if every Senator wanted to send the full amount of his allotment of $2,500 in Records, he could send to his constituents 625 copies.

I listened to what the Senator said in relation to the RECORD and how it has been appreciated by his constituents. I have no doubt but many of the parties receiving the Record appreciate it, but I do know there are others who do not. I have gone into law offices and I have seen stacked up in the corner of the office the Congressional Record with the wrappers just as they were when they left Washington. Only to-day a Senator said to me that he had been sending the Congressional Record for years to a lady friend of his in his State. When asked if she was receiving it, she answered saying, "Yes; I am receiving it, and it makes the best kind of iron holder."

Mr. President, I am aware it is not altogether a question of what the Record costs, but that is worthy of consideration. When the Senator from Idaho introduced his amendment I started an investigation to see exactly what it would cost the Government. I addressed a letter to the Public Printer and also one to the Postmaster General, asking what the actual cost of an additional million copies would be. The answer that I received from the Postmaster General is dated January 18, 1912, in which he says:

Your letter of the 9th instant requesting that an estimate be prepared and submitted for the information of the Printing Investigation Commission of the cost of carrying in the mails 1,000,000 copies of the daily Congressional Record per day and per session, as provided for in Senate bill 145, and also an estimate of any additional expense which, in my opinion, this bill would place on the Post Office Department, has been received, and in reply I have the honor to advise you as follows:

In order to estimate the annual cost of transporting and handling 1,000,000 copies per day of the Record it was necessary, first, to ascertain the probable weight to be transported and handled annually. It was learned that the average number of issues each year for the past four years was 181. Based on an average number of pages per issue of 56 and the weight of the paper in use at present, the average weight per copy is found to be 4 ounces. From these figures an annual weight of 45,250,000 pounds to be transported and handled is ascertained.

Multiplying this weight by 3.61 cents, the latest estimated cost per pound for transporting second-class matter paid at the pound rate averaged for all hauis, as shown in the department's supplemental statement submitted to the Postal Commission on Second-class Mail Matter on October 20, 1911, gives a product of $1,633,525, the estimated cost per annum for transporting 1,000,000 copies per day for 181 days.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. Has the Senator figured just how much that is per copy—that is, I mean per set or per issue?

Mr. SMOOT. I can soon figure that. It would be $1.63% cents per year.

Mr. BRISTOW. How much per year would that be for a copy of the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. One dollar and sixty-three cents per year.

Mr. BRISTOW. It seems to me that is a very extravagant cost. It is very much more, it appears to me, than it ought to cost. That is more than the paper it is printed upon would

Mr. SMOOT. There are about 4 ounces of paper. Mr. SMOO1. There are about 4 offices of paper. The average cost of paper to-day is $3\frac{7}{20}$ cents per pound. That was the contract price for the coming fiscal year. The average price of paper has been $3\frac{43}{100}$ cents per pound for the last 10 years.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has yielded to the Senator from Kansas. Does the Senator from Utah yield further, and to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to either Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to ask one brief question.
Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly; I yield for that purpose.
Mr. POINDEXTER. Can the Senator inform us on what system the Government buys the paper?

Mr. SMOOT. Every year we advertise in papers in the different cities of the United States for bids. Those bids are ferent cities of the United States for bids. Those bids are generally opened in the month of February. The quantities required and specifications of every kind of paper used by the Government are sent to all the leading manufacturers of paper, giving the exact analysis of the paper, size, and so forth, I

Every manufacturer in bidding bids upon the specifications as furnished, knowing exactly what the paper contains, strength required, and size of sheets.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.
Mr. CUMMINS. I am afraid my question will indicate no very great familiarity with the subject on my part. I want to understand it, and I think this is the best time to get a little knowledge upon it.

The bill proposes to put to the credit of each Senator $2,500 for each session of Congress, and permits him to take out public documents to that value, according to his own selection?

Mr. SMOOT. At actual cost, with 10 per cent added.

Mr. CUMMINS. So I have stated up to this time the fact?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. CUMMINS. These documents are charged to him at

Mr. SMOOT. With 10 per cent added.

Mr. CUMMINS. With 10 per cent added. Does that cost include the free disposition or circulation of the same document by other officers of the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. Outside of Senators and Representatives?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes. Mr. SMOOT. The law specifically provides what each department is entitled to receive.

Mr. CUMMINS. What I was coming to is this: Suppose there were 10,000 copies of a particular document printed. Suppose the department which issued that document or had a right to circulate it sent out 5,000 copies free. The Senate and House would get the other 5,000 copies. Would the cost charged up to a Senator include the cost of the free documents

Mr. SMOOT. It would not, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why is it that the departments are not compelled to have an allowance and to take out their documents in the same way and have them charged up to the departments, just as it is proposed to charge up the documents to Senators?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will glance over the bill he will find that it provides the number that can be printed of all documents issued by the departments. We limit those issues and they can not print more than the number provided by law. I think the number usually runs at about 3,000, in some cases

Mr. CUMMINS. Those are exclusive of the copies circulated by Senators

Mr. SMOOT. Entirely so; and if they desire more printed than the law allows it can not be done unless Congress acts upon it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, I come again to my question. Suppose a department has 3,000 copies, but the whole issue is 10,000 copies. In ascertaining the cost of a particular copy, have you adopted as the basis the entire cost of the 10,000 copies?

Mr. SMOOT. It very seldom happens that a department prints a congressional document and very seldom that Congress prints a department publication. A congressional document is given a number and called a Senate or House document. Departments have their publications printed as department publications. The latter are distributed as department publications, by the department issuing the publication, and has nothing to do with documents that may be ordered by Congress. Therefore it is charged to their printing allotment, not to that of Mr. CUMMINS. I do not understand that. Take the Agricultural Yearbook as an illustration. That is published and circulated by the Members of Congress. The cost of each one of those books will be charged up to us— Mr. SMOOT. To Members of Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS. And against the $2,500 allowed.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, but-

Mr. CUMMINS. Will that cost be ascertained by taking the whole number of copies printed and dividing the whole cost by the whole number, or will it be ascertained in some other

Mr. SMOOT. The Yearbook is ordered to be printed by Congress; it is not charged to the Agricultural Department; and if there are 100,000 copies printed the cost is based on the issue of 100,000 copies. I will say to the Senator that the issues since I have been here have been as high as 150,000, but generally there are about 100,000 copies.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the seeds that are furnished by the Agricultural Department also be charged up to Senators?

Mr. SMOOT. We have nothing to do with that, Mr. President; that is provided for in the agricultural appropriation

Mr. CUMMINS. Where do we get our right to distribute I am asking purely for information.

Mr. SMOOT. Through the agricultural appropriation bill. Mr. CUMMINS. And they will not be included in the $2,500?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then we are to buy, at the public expense, of course, $2,500 worth of documents at the actual cost of those documents with 10 per cent added?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, Mr. President; and under that system you can buy whatever public document is of interest to

Mr. CUMMINS. Has there been any limit upon Senators heretofore?

Mr. SMOOT. There has always been a limit.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the limit now? Mr. SMOOT. If the up number is printed, each Senator is entitled to two or three copies. What I mean is that when any document is printed as a public document, say, 1,274 copies, they are divided between the House and the Senate and the different departments, and it amounts to about two or three copies to each Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. And we are now to be limited to $2,500?

Yes. Mr. SMOOT.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the limit now for which $2,500 is substituted?

It is about $2,300, I will say to the Senator; and the $2,500 is a little above what Senators have to send out under the present system.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why not cut it down a little?

Mr. SMOOT. Because I think under this system the public documents will be used to better advantage and more freely. Besides, the Members of the House feel that they ought to have an increase, so I am told. We thought, taking the whole average for a number of years back, that it would be a proper basis to make it $2,500 for the Senate and $1,800 for the House.

Mr. CUMMINS. Suppose an edition of a document is exhausted and I come in and have a credit to my account. I ask for 100 copies of that document. Will they be printed, then?

Mr. SMOOT. They will be printed just the same as they are to-day.

Mr. CUMMINS. They will not be printed to-day, because they will say the edition is exhausted. I doubt whether, if the selections were made and we asked for more than are printed, the Printing Office would then go and print them,

Mr. SMOOT. Whenever there is a sufficient number of orders to print the Public Printer will certainly print them.

Mr. CUMMINS. How many? This bill does not fix the number

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senators fix the number. Mr. CUMMINS. Does the bill provide for any catalogue of documents so that a Senator can go and make from that catalogue a selection if he desires?

Mr. SMOOT. The same catalogue under the bill will be published as is published to-day by the superintendent of documents.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is pretty large.
Mr. SMOOT. No; the weekly catalogue is not large.
Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, the weekly catalogue.
Mr. SMOOT. The Senator was no doubt referring to the yearly catalogue.

Mr. CUMMINS. This substitute must in some way furnish Senators an opportunity to make the selection they require.

We have provided for that, Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as one Senator is concerned I would require more knowledge on the subject in order to make the I have not the least idea.

The bill provides that the superintendent of Mr. SMOOT. documents shall issue a catalogue. It compels him to issue it just the same as he is compelled to issue it to-day, and the Senator will get one of those catalogues just the same as he gets it

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very much obliged for the information, and it is purely for information that I made the inquiries. One more, and I will not make another-at least, not immediately. Do we get the Congressional Record at cost now?

Mr. SMOOT. We get it at less than cost under the bill. Mr. CUMMINS. If other documents are charged at cost, why not the Congressional Record?

Mr. SMOOT. Because of the fact that we do not change the rate from what it is under the present law. In the present law it has been $8 for a long session and $4 for a short session.

Mr. CUMMINS. It would not, then, disturb the precedent or custom if we were to reduce that price somewhat in accordance with the views of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. It would simply be a further reduction?

Mr. SMOOT. It would be a further reduction and a greater cost to the Government.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I suppose every Senator has the experience of having requests for valuable documents, and requests that he has to decline because the quota which is assigned to him is exhausted. A great majority of the Senators, those representing the larger States, have greater calls for the valuable documents and for the RECORD than the quota assigned to them. So the documents that are actually sent out do not represent the demand that is made. I think the Senator's estimate as to the amount that would be required to supply the demand may be very much too low. The expensive documents are those most sought after. So the bill would put the burden upon every Senator of assigning so much of the available appropriation to this purpose or that purpose and deciding as to which of his constituents he would favor and those whose requests he would decline, and it might be a very serious embarrassment.

Mr. SMOOT. That is arbitrarily fixed now.
Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Under the bill it would not be arbitrarily fixed. If a Senator had assigned to him under the present law, and if he wanted to get 3 or 4 or 5 or 6 or 10 or 20

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota; he was on his feet first.

Mr. NELSON. What I want to suggest to the Senator from Kansas is that it has been my experience that of the valuable documents, so called, the most important documents, we always get a very limited number. I have never been able to get from my quota enough to supply the demand. So this would not cut us off. I would like to get as much as we have ever received.

Mr. SMOOT. And a Senator gets documents he does not want under the present arrangement.

Mr. NELSON. We could get a great deal more under the proposed law of those valuable documents than we get to-day.

Mr. BRISTOW. But I want to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, when he does that he does it at the expense of other documents. Now, take the agricultural bulletins. The Senator from Minnesota, I know, has need for every one of them he gets, and he could use a great many more than those assigned to him.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, my experience with the agricultural bulletins is that they are not distributed to me at all. I get hundreds of requests for them, and I present them to the Agricultural Department, and they are filled from there.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say to the Senator-

Mr. NELSON. They do not come under this head at all. Mr. SMOOT. They are not provided for in this bill; they are printed by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. BRISTOW. But given a credit of $2,500. But each Senator, as I understand it, is

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now he has a credit of 12,000 agricultural

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. BRISTOW. That does not come out of this appropriation at all?

Mr. SMOOT. The agricultural bulletins are published by the Agricultural Department. The appropriation is made directly to that department for the publication of them, and it is not charged to Senators and never has been. They are not congressional documents. The charge against the $2,500 only includes the documents that are either a Senate document or a House document.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say, if Senators will allow me, that within the last six months I have had probably several thousand calls for those agricultural bulletins. All I have done is to send the calls to the Department of Agriculture and they would fill them, and continue to fill them unless the edition is exhausted. They have not been a part of the quota. They are not in the list sent to us of documents in the folding room to our credit.

Mr. SMOOT. They never go to the folding room. The Senator has a certain number to his credit, and if he sends out that number then his credit is exhausted. That is provided for in the appropriation bill, and has nothing whatever to do with the printing bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, if it has not, I am glad.

Mr. SMOOT. It has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am glad to know that, Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President—— The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMOOT. I do. Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator stated a few moments ago that in case a document was a favorite document and there was a large demand for it, under the proposed system a Senator could avail himself of it and supply the demand, so far as he was concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. SHIVELY. Of course, there is a difference in the value of these documents, as admitted by Senators. Does this bill give such flexibility in the number of publications as to accommodate the supply to the demand?

Mr. SMOOT. The bill provides that if the Senator from Indiana should desire to take his allowance of $2,500 in one document he could do so.

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes; but where would the document be?

Suppose we all concluded that we wanted to take it all in one document, where would you have that supply?

Mr. SMOOT. At the Government Printing Office.

Mr. SHIVELY. Do you mean to say that, under the pending bill, of every document there will be a sufficiency so that each Senator could make a demand upon it to the value of $2,500 and not exhaust the supply?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course that would be true if such a thing ever happened; but it never would happen.

Mr. SHIVELY. I know that particular case would never happen, but it involves the same principle. There are some documents which are favorites whilst others are not, and they are therefore neglected. Do you say that under your proposition we can make a choice, make a selection, make a requisition for the amount we like? Suppose it is a favorite document, is there any provision in this bill by which in any way the supply of documents could be adjusted to the demand?

Mr. SMOOT. I see what the Senator desires to know. We have what is called "the edition system." We issue the documents in editions only as they are called for, so that whenever there was a sufficient demand a new edition would be issued.

Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield. Mr. ROOT. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah whether any attempt has been made to determine the quantity of the different kinds of documents which ought to be printed. By an examination of the great mass of unused publications referred to in the report on page 40, I see this quotation from the report of the Select Committee on Useless Papers and Documents:

The entire number of old pamphlets and publications which are now in the folding room, and for which there is practically no demand, exceeds 1,000,000 copies. There is in the vaults perhaps 1,000 tons of useless paper which cumbers the earth and is of no value to anyone.

I suppose a publishing house would regulate the size of the editions of a particular kind of book which it ventured to put out by its past experience as to the demand for that kind of a book. My inquiry is, What attempt has there been to furnish a standard for fixing the size of the editions to be published of the different kinds of documents which we authorize to be printed? Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the superintendent of documents has gone into that question very thoroughly. He has examined the question of the number usually required of each class of From the experience he has had and that which publications. the Public Printer has had, they seem to think that at least they will be able to work in the future upon the same system as do the publishing houses in the United States. The number necessary to be issued of the different documents can almost be determined now from the number issued in the past, and it is believed that in the future there will be no more documents printed than will be actually called for.

Mr. ROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether he does not think that it might be a useful thing, as a guide to our action, to provide that there shall be each year a report made to the Senate, or to each House of Congress, of the number of documents authorized the preceding year which have not been distributed?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is provided for by requiring an annual report of the Public Printer, showing the amount of work that has been done, the receipts of the Government Printing Office, and a detailed statement of everything pertaining to that office.

Mr. ROOT. Does the provision to which the Senator from Utah refers specifically require the officer to state what number of copies of each document has been distributed and what number remains in stock?

Mr. SMOOT. Section 58, paragraph 5, of the pending bill

Sec. 58. Par. 5. The superintendent of documents shall submit to the Public Printer monthly a report showing, by title, the number of copies of Government publications received by him from all sources, specifying each; the number of copies sold; the total sum received for the same; the number of copies distributed to depository libraries, congressional valuation distribution, and otherwise; and the number on hand.

That paragraph provides for a monthly report from the superintendent of documents to the Public Printer. Then the Public Printer is required at the end of the year to make a complete statement to Congress showing the result of the different reports made by the superintendent of documents.

Mr. ROOT. That is, he is required to make a report which may include that, but he is not specifically required to do so?

Mr. SMOOT. It does include that, Mr. ROOT. There is another subject that I should like to inquire about. Has the committee considered the question as to whether this rigid rule, without reference to the population to be served in the way of distribution, accomplishes the real object of the printing of public documents? I assume that we print these documents in order that they may be read. We want the people of the country to get the information. Take the Congressional Record. We all of us agree, I am sure, with the view taken by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn], though we may not agree with the measures which he proposes to give effect to it. We desire that the people of the country shall be correctly informed about what we are doing here and the reasons that are stated here for our action. The committee fixes a limit of $2,500 for all documents which may be disof Congressional Records, which, I think, is now 88.

Mr. SMOOT. Not cutting off the Congressional Record.

Mr. ROOT. Well, the Congressional Record has to be paid for or accounted for out of the $2,500.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true. It is included in the estimate that Senators receive to-day.

Mr. ROOT. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom] has some four million and odd people in his State; the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Pennose] has six million and odd; and my colleague [Mr. O'GORMAN] and I have between nine and ten million. How many people are there in Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. About 450,000. Mr. ROOT. About 450,000. Then there are somewhere between 20 and 30 times as many people in my State as there are in Utah. You are going to cut the people in New York off from the Congressional Record unless they are people who can afford to pay $8 a session for it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has forgotten that there is a

House of Representatives.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They have forgotten us.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from New York must remember that his State has 36 more Members of the House of Representatives than has Utah.

Mr. ROOT. Well, that is no reason why we should— Mr. SMOOT. Every Member of the House of Representa-tives is allowed $1,800; and we have arranged the question of the distribution as to population by allowing every Representative to have $1,800 credit.

Mr. ROOT. Does the Scnator, then, abandon the idea that the allotment to Senators of these documents is for the purpose of distributing the documents to the constituents of Senators and treat the allotment as being merely a personal perquisite of the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that is the case, and I am sure it was not the intention. I think that the western Senators. perhaps, have as great a demand for public documents, or a greater demand, I will say, in many cases than have the Senators from New York. This particularly applies to horse books, yearbooks, cattle books, irrigation reports, and so forth. If the Senator from New York does not require such books for his constituents, then he can send them more Congressional Records.

Mr. ROOT. I do not doubt that the constituents of the Senator from Utah want the horse books, but my constituents want to read the solid and substantial material supplied by us here.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Statistical Abstract, for instance.

Mr. ROOT. They want intellectual food.

Mr. SMOOT. Under this proposed system the Senator from New York can send a portion of his quota in horse books and he can send as a portion of it the Congressional Record or any other public document he thinks his constituents desire.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Could we not get a public document on automobiles for New York? [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. That would rest entirely with the Senate; but I do not think the Senator from New York would make such a

Mr. ROOT. Well, as I have at least 10 times as many constituents as has the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Boran], who are owning and operating farms, I hardly think it would be necessary to follow his suggestion.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, then, the Senator is in a position to utilize his number of horse books?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly; and I have probably 10 times as many demands for the horse books as I can fill from the 4,000,000 people who live in the country districts in New York.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course that is true. Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do. Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from New York will allow me, I want to call his attention to the fact that under the present system he only gets a limited supply of those books.

Mr. ROOT. I know; and I think it is entirely inadequate.

Mr. NELSON. And the same is true of the Record. You get no more for the State of New York than we do for the State of Minnesota. Each Senator has the same allotment; but under the proposed new system he can pick out the documents he de-sires and can get more of them than he now does.

Mr. ROOT. I think that, apart from the Congressional Record, the new system is an improvement on the old allotment arrangement; but I do not think it goes further than that.

Mr. SMOOT. The only way that that could be obviated would be to lower the price of the RECORD or leave the price as it now is and increase the allotment to each Senator. greater distribution of the Record is desired, one of the two systems must be adopted; but I think when every Senator has had the experience of distributing $2,500 worth of public documents there will be hardly a Senator who will not say that that is ample to cover all the documents he desires to distribute.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROOT. Does not the Senator from Utah think that there is a difference between the distribution of the Congressional RECORD and other documents?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; Mr. President. Mr. ROOT. At seems to me that we ought to try to promote the distribution of the RECORD to all the people who want to read it; I think that is rather fundamental, and that we ought not to put barriers in the way. I would rather have the Senator cut down the allowance for documents generally and make a special arrangement so that everybody in the United States who was really willing to read the RECORD should be able to get it.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that we have not distributed the entire number of Records that have actually been published in the past.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President-

Mr. SMOOT. I will answer the Senator. I know just exactly what he is going to say, but let me get through with my statement, and then I will tell the Senator what he was going to say. In the second session of the Fifty-seventh Congress there were four parts of the Congressional Record, and about 27,000 copies were printed, of which 5,504 were not distributed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator to wait until I get through. In the first session of the Fifty-eighth Congress there were 3,680 sets of the Record not distributed; in the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress there were seven parts of the RECORD, and 3,780 sets were not distributed; in the third session of the Fifty-eighth Congress there were five large volumes of the RECORD, of which 4,201 sets were not distributed; and in the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress there were six parts and 1,410 sets were not distributed. I am perfectly aware that there are a number of Senators who would have been glad to have those Records for distribution in their States, but that number was not distributed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As a matter of fact, those Records

Mr. SMOOT. They were the bound volumes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The bound volumes come late, after the subject matter has ceased to be of any practical interest, and you might as well attempt to circulate a last year's bird's nest.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let me tell the Senator that there would not be any bound volumes if Senators wanted to distribute the daily RECORD as issued from day to day. No one is compelled to keep any part of his allotment of 88 volumes to be bound

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I think that I have never had during all the time that I have been in either House a dozen requests for bound volumes of the Congressional Rec-ORD. I would much prefer to send the RECORD out from day to day, when the subject matter is being discussed. I undertake to say that there are not many Senators or Representatives who know that they have the bound volumes to their credit now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, every Representative and every Senator is notified. He makes up the list of those to receive the daily Record at the beginning of every session of Congress. He can reserve as many as he desires of the number allotted to him to be bound or he can make up a list the very first day of the session of Congress and send out every one of the 88 sets of the Record in daily form if he so desires.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the Senator from Utah is failing to consider facts growing out of human nature. Each Senator is asked at the beginning of a session how many copies of the RECORD he wants distributed in the daily RECORD form and how many he wants to reserve for the bound volumes. Suppose I make a calculation and conclude that I had better keep back five sets for bound volumes. I do that because the year before, perhaps, I have sent on request, or generally without request, to educational institutions or college libraries that number of bound volumes. As the Senator from Michigan has said, nobody makes requests for bound volumes of the Record except school or other libraries. So I keep back a certain number of Records, thinking that there will be that many requests; but the requests are not made and that number of bound Records is left on my hands. I dare say that that is just exactly how this accumulation of undistributed bound volumes grew up.

Each man of prudence will keep back as many as he thinks will be called for, and in order to be on the safe side may keep back a copy or two move than will be called for; but my experience is, although the demand is not so pressing here as it was at the other end of the Capitol, that every copy of the daily RECORD is called for. What makes it worse is the fact that the weekly newspapers in each district seem to think that they are entitled to the daily Congressional Record, and in a certain sense they are, because they boil it down, sift it, and get out of it what goes to the public; and by the time you get through supplying the weekly newspapers you have very few copies left for precisely the kind of people who ought to get them—men here and there who are students of public affairs, whose opinions are well worth cultivating, because they are going to influence other people. So that it seems to me that the fact which the Senator from Utah has stated-which is undeniably a facthas no application at all to the question as to whether there shall or shall not be more copies of the daily Record distributed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SMOOT. In a moment. I first want to say to the Senator from Mississippi that what he says I believe is absolutely the fact, but under the system proposed a Senator can send in a list of names, whether 60, 80, 100, 120, or more, and that number of Records will be charged to him. Then, at the end of the session, if there are calls for bound volumes of the Record, all he has to do is to order one, two, three, or whatever number of sets he may desire, and there will not be a copy left.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah

yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield. Mr. SWANSON. Mr.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator who has charge of this bill what objection would be or the committee have to a suggestion either to increase or to rethat were undistributed were the bound volumes, were they not? tain the present quota of Congressional Records, and then change the system for the distribution of other publications as suggested in the report and recommendation of the committee?

My objection to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD being charged to the quota of documents to which a Senator is entitled, is this: In States near Washington the Congressional Record is somewhat like a daily paper, and there is a great desire for it; but when a week elapses before it is received, oftentimes matters discussed in the Record are forgotten, and, of course, in such case the bound volumes are worth about as much as the daily RECORD. I know, however, that the demand upon me for the daily Congressional Record from the State of Virginia far exceeds the number I can furnish. At the beginning of each session of Congress I try to comply with all the requests that come to me for the Congressional Record.

The requests are so many, however, that under the system proposed my entire quota of documents would be charged up at the beginning of the session, and if subsequent requests should come in I would be entitled to no further documents. Then all I could do would be to make arrangements to buy the documents for my constituents, which would about take all my salary. Now, having only 88 copies of the Congressional Record furnished me, after I have supplied that number, I can very properly write that my quota has been exhausted, and that is a satisfying reply to my constituents.

It seems to me that we should reach a conclusion as to the distribution to be made of the Congressional Record. it should be distributed more freely and more largely than it is at present. I was a subcommittee of the Post Office Committee to whom was referred the proposed amendment, which was then a separate bill, offered by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

After examining the cost of the proposed change and bringing the matter before the full Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the conclusion was reached, after discussion, though no resolution was passed, that rather than go to the expense of millions of dollars in printing the Recom for cheap, popular distribution, in accordance with the idea suggested by the Senator from Idaho, we would recommend an increase in the quota of Congressional Records allotted to Senators and Members of the House of Representatives. I think the time has arrived to do this. I think simply to provide an edition of 28,000 copies of the Congressional Record is certainly a very small dissemination of the information contained in that RECORD.

There are occasions when it is sent to people who do not read it. They read it when there is an exciting debate or when there is an important matter under consideration or when there is something in which they are interested, but no one has the time to read the Record continuously. I do not do that myself, and I presume the Senator from Utah does not read one-fifth of the Record. Frequently, as the Senator suggested from his own observation, it is not even opened; but that does not mean that all Records are not opened. I guarantee there are very few people who receive the RECORD who do not read the discussions and debates in Congress on matters in which they are interested.

I should like for the Senator to consent, on behalf of the committee, to increase the quota of Congressional Records allowed Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, and then let his suggestion as to other public documents, making an allowance to each Senator of documents to a value of $2,500, be adopted. I think that is a better system of distribution of the general run of documents than we have at present. I know I have to my credit a great many documents which to me are useless and an incumbrance, but which other Senators may desire, and which I very gladly give them when they make the request. The proposed change makes the dis-tribution useful and beneficial; and if it is beneficial, if it provides for the sending of documents to the people who desire them and need them for information, I can not see why we can not increase the quota of the RECORD to two or three hundred for each Senator and Representative and make the allowance $2,500 for other useful documents it is proposed to send out, and let Senators and Representatives select what they desire.

I should like for the Senator to consent to an amendment providing for an increase, say, of 100 or even 10 or 12 Records to each Senator and Member of the House, and then provide for the distribution of other documents by charging them up to the amount of $2,500. I think under such a method Senators will obtain documents which are useful to them and their constituents and that they will have ample to supply the demand for documents and for the Congressional Record, and I feel satisfied that very few documents will then be left on the hands of the Government. Mr. SMITH of Michigan.

Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will wait until I answer the Senator, then I will yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I also want to make an observation to the Senator from Virginia. I want to tell him-and I will do it very briefly if the Senator from Utah is willing that this plea of his for CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS and public documents is about the last stand that Senators and Representatives are making to get anything in their own right. They have been refined out of about every other thing. and if they refine us out of this we shall finally fall back on the right to ask the Secretary of State for letters of introduction to the consular and diplomatic officers of the United States. That will be about all that we can do.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Virginia that the easiest way to bring that about would be to lower the price of the RECORD, as suggested by the Senator from Idaho, but perhaps not to the point suggested in his amendment. But before doing that, I want to tell the Senator just what it is going to cost. I have had an idea that we were trying to practice economy. I know I have had a jolt once or twice of late when the question of economy has been attempted. Still, for all that, I shall insist, as far as I am concerned, in being economical with the Government's money as far as possible.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Virginia?
Mr. SWANSON. The Senator does not want to exercise economy in education and information?
Mr. SMOOT. Oh not at all

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, not at all.
Mr. SWANSON. I understand—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend for a moment. Senators desiring to interrupt will please address the Chair. The reporters have complained two or three times this afternoon that they could not hear the interruptions. The Chair hopes that hereafter Senators will address the Chair before interrupting the Senator who has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will now continue with the letter of the Postmaster General.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Before the Senator continues on that branch of the matter, I want to call the attention of the Senate to what I regard as a very serious thing in this bill. is found in section 37. I want to let the Senate know that there is something here besides a disposition to curtail the distribution of the RECORD and public documents.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator is going to make a speech, I would rather put in this letter now, and then I will yield to the The Senator's reference to section 37 brings up an entirely different question than this.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I know it, and I am afraid it will be lost sight of.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, I refuse to yield until I get through with this subject. Then I will take up the other

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not care to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well. I will continue with the letter of the Postmaster General:

The cost a pound for the other services rendered by the Post Office Department in connection with the handling of this volume of matter is estimated at 4.86 cents, or $2,199,150 for the year. The total estimated cost to the department of transporting and handling the matter, therefore, is $3.832,675. This estimate might be reduced to some extent should the publication be separated to routes, States, and districts, in conformity with the schemes of distribution recently issued in connection with such separations by publishers, but the amount of such reduction can not be stated.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. If it is on this subject. Mr. BRISTOW. It is. Will the Senator please read again the total amount that the Postmaster General estimates as the

Mr. SMOOT. Three million eight hundred and thirty-two thousand six hundred and seventy-five dollars.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is more than a twentieth, if I remember correctly, of the entire estimated cost of handling all the second-class matter that is handled in the United States mail. I do not believe any such expense or cost would be incurred. It seems to me, without investigating it in detail, that it is ridiculous to say that the distribution of the Record would cost one-twentieth as much as the entire second-class mail matter of the United States

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this statement is based upon the hearing before the Commission on Second-Class Matter in New York City

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not care what it is based upon, if the Senator will excuse the remark. The Postmaster General estimates, if I remember the figures correctly—and if I do not I shall be glad to be corrected—that the cost of handling secondclass mail matter in the United States is something over $60,000,000 per annum. Is that right?

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if that is the case, this is not 20 per cent of the total.

Mr. BRISTOW. I said it was one-twentieth. I did not say 20 per cent.

Mr. GRONNA.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do. Mr. GRONNA. I believe the statement the Postmaster General made in that regard was that the loss was some $58,000,000.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator from Utah remember what was the department's estimate of the cost of handling second-

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not remember it; but I got this report, which says that the total expense per pound for second-class mail matter is 0.0847 cent. The estimate of the Postmaster General for the extra 1,000,000 copies is based upon each issue of the RECORD weighing on an average of 4 ounces, and upon an average issue of 181 days. On that basis the total cost would be $3,832,675.

Mr. ROOT. For how many copies?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. For 1,000,000 copies. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Secretary to read the rule.

The Secretary. Rule XIX, on page 19 of the Standing Rules of the Senate, provides:

1. When a Senator desires to speak he shall rise and address the Presiding Officer, and shall not proceed until he is recognized, and the Presiding Officer shall recognize the Senator who shall first address him. No Senator shall interrupt another Senator in debate without his consent, and to obtain such consent he shall first address the Presiding Officer; and no Senator shall speak more than twice upon any one question in debate on the same day without leave of the Senate, which shall be determined without debate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield. Mr. BORAH. The Secretary is reading the rules of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules of the Senate. Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator. Mr. BRISTOW. Has the Senator now the figures in regard to the estimated cost of handling second-class mail matter?

Mr. SMOOT. In the same report, Mr. President, I find that the expense of handling second-class mail matter to-day is $59,692,439.64. The revenue is $7,042,161.08. In other words, there is a loss of $52,650,278.56.

Mr. BRISTOW. According to those figures, then, the cost of handling second-class matter is approximately $59,000,000. The estimated cost of handling the Record would be $3,800,000, or approximately one-sixteenth of the entire expense of handling second-class matter, which includes all the papers, the magazines, and everything else that has the second-class rate. seems to me, without analyzing the statement in detail, that those figures can not be accurate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the report also shows that the total weight of second-class mail matter is 692,624,512 pounds, and the weight of a million copies of the daily Record is 45,250,000 pounds. So, if the Senator will multiply 45,250,000 pounds by 16 he will be not very far from or even a little beyond the amount of the actual weight of second-class matter.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Kausas if he appreciates how heavy the Congressional Record really [Laughter.]

Mr. BRISTOW. I will suggest that if the RECORD is as heavy as indicated by the figures which the Senator from Utah is presenting, it should be made lighter in avoirdupois at least, which could be done by using a much lighter paper.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, since I have been chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing we have changed the weight of the paper twice, and the last time we did it I remember that a number of Senators complained that it was altogether too light.

In this connection I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that if a million copies of the RECORD are printed daily it will require 10 carloads of paper. The Congressional Record comes in 4, 5, 6, and 7 parts a year, according to the length of the session, sometimes with as many as 11,723 pages during the session. Before putting a price upon it, and before we go headlong into this proposition of a cheap edition, I think the Senate ought to know just where we will land and what it is going to cost. Then, if we desire to incur the cost, I will have no objection; and I think the easiest way to reach that result is to reduce the price. But in so doing the Government would not be reimbursed by the money that the subscriber pays.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will merely suggest in that connection that the weight of the Congressional Record is partly due to the fact that we are getting into the habit of printing in it pretty much everything that can be conceived of. Every time we discover a paper that we think of interest to the individual a request is made to put it in the Congressional RECORD. We used to object to it, but we do not do so any more.

Now, Mr. President, inasmuch as there is no possibility of the bill being passed to-night, I want to ask the Senator if he will not let the matter go over, as there is a little business that some Senators would like to transact and an executive session is desired?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi. Mr. WILLIAMS. Before that suggestion is considered I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Utah for him to respond to, not now, but later, in connection with his bill and in connection with the matter being discussed at this

I am not sufficient of a local historian to know how the habit or custom grew up of Representatives and Senators in Congress distributing every sort of public document, but it has grown up. The truth is that there is no common sense in the idea of Senators and Congressmen distributing any documents of any description except the Congressional Record itself, House documents, Senate documents, House bills, Senate bills, House reports, and Senate reports.

There is no reason at all, founded on common sense, why a Senator or a Representative should be selected for the purpose of distributing a Horse Book or an Agricultural Yearbook. There are a thousand reasons why the Agricultural Department ought to do it. There is no reason under the sun why a Senator or a Member of the House should be selected to distribute garden seed. There are a hundred reasons why an experimental farm of the Agricultural Department should do it. There is no reason why you or I should distribute Coast and Geodetic Survey Reports. There are reasons why, upon request of citizens, the experts in that business should send out those reports for the information of the people. There is no reason why you or I should distribute the reports of the Smithsonian Institu-There are reasons why they should be distributed, but tion. not by us.

In other words, we Senators and Members of the House have seized as a political asset upon the distribution of public documents, and it has cost the Government of the United States a great deal of money, and it will cost the Government of the United States a great deal more money if it is persisted in, if it gradually increases from session to session and from year to year, as it inevitably must, because we are human beings and are possessed of human nature.

The Senator can not equalize all this by saying that at the beginning of the session somebody must say what sort of document he wants, because he does not know. He is distributing these things on request. I think there are a good many people in the United States who believe that a Senator or a Representative has a right to send out as many copies of the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD as he chooses.

One word more, if the Scnator will pardon me for the length of the interruption, because I am asking no answer now. I see very many reasons why the Congressional Record should be distributed to the people of the United States as cheaply as possible and in as great numbers as possible, and why it should be distributed by Senators and Members of the House, because it is a defense of themselves from any false or unjust or untrue attack; and it is not only that, which is a small matter, but it is the actual diary of the United States Government; and the people, who are the masters of their public servants, ought to have as nearly as possible a daily report from their public servants.

But I want the Senator to direct his attention to getting Senators and Representatives rid-if they will permit themselves to be rid of it, which I doubt-of this business of distributing, as a political asset, for the purpose of strengthening themselves in their districts and States against possible opposition, all sorts of public documents that ought to be distributed, but ought to be distributed by other people and not by them; by other departments of the Government which are in closer touch with the interests, with the special individuals, that these things ought to go to. There are a great many of these reports that are matters of information to scientists, matters of information to doctors, matters of information to sailors, matters of information to soldiers. They are sent to us to distribute instead of being distributed by the medical department, by the War Department, by the Agriculture Department, and by the various other branches of the Government who by the very nature of their business are kept in touch with the class of people who want to read that sort of literature.

I shall not ask any response to that suggestion at this time, and I beg the pardon of the Senator from New Hampshire; but I wanted to get that off my mind while I had it on my mind.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a very good point.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I, too, desire to suggest a matter with no expectation of an answer now. The cost of distributing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has been based upon an alleged cost per pound of distributing second-class mail matter. I should like to know, at some future time, whether the Senator concurs in the view of the Postmaster General that it costs 81 cents a pound to distribute second-class mail matter in this country.

The Senator knows that that statement has been very sharply and, as I think, successfully challenged in several investigations that have been made by Congress. I myself am led to believe. from all the testimony that has been laid before us, that it does not cost half that much. But I should like the Senator to beceme familiar, if, indeed, he is not already familiar, with what has been developed in Congress upon that subject, and be able to give us his own judgment as to what it will cost to circulate the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. As suggested, I will not attempt at present to answer either the Senator from Mississippi or the Senator from Iowa. But I have all the information that I could gather from the department as to the cost of transportation of second-class matter. I will say frankly to the Senator that I really do not know what it actually costs. I know, however, as he says, that it is a disputed question.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator will not know when we meet again, because nobody knows. But we do know this: Anybody who examines or analyzes the statements of the Post Office Department knows that many of the items which have been included in order to ascertain this cost are erroneously included. I think it is the judgment of anyone who has examined the subject that, whatever it may cost, it does not cost anything approximating S₂ cents a pound.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course, when the bill is up for consideration again I should like to finish the statements showing what the Postmaster General and the Public Printer say this will cost the Government. Then, of course, every Senator can judge for himself as to whether it is correct or not. Then, too, they can judge as to whether there should be a decrease in the price that shall be charged for the RECORD. I will say now that whatever decrease may be made in the price of the RECORD will be an increased allowance to each Senator under the valuation system.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. OLIVER was, on his own motion, excused from further service upon the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURNHAM was, on his own motion, excused from further service upon the Committee on Cuban Relations and the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. GALLINGER, on behalf of Mr. Briggs, asked that he be excused from further service upon the Committee on Conservation of National Resources and the Committee on the Geological Survey, and Mr. Briggs was excused.

Mr. GALLINGER, on behalf of Mr. Works, asked that he be excused from further service upon the Committee on Coast Defenses and the Committee on Patents, and Mr. Works was excused.

Mr. GALLINGER, on behalf of Mr. Brown, asked that he be excused from further service upon the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and Mr. Brown was excused.

Mr. GALLINGER, on behalf of Mr. Boran, asked that he be excused from further service upon the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and Mr. Boran was excused.

Mr. GALLINGER, on behalf of Mr. Jones, asked that he be excused from further service upon the Committee on Industrial Expositions, and Mr. Jones was excused.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That Mr. Catron be assigned to the following committees: Expenditures in the Department of the Interior, chairman; Coast Defenses; Conservation of National Resources; Cuban Relations; Industrial Expositions; and Pacific Railroads; and Resolved, That Mr. Fall be assigned to the following committees: Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, chairman; District of Columbia; Geological Survey; Pacific Islands and Porto Rico; Patents; and Revolutionary Claims.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 276), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ a clerk at a salary of $2,220 per annum and a messenger at $1,440 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, at the request of many Senators on both sides of the Chamber who have important committee work to do, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

LEVEE PROTECTION AT MOUND CITY, ILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I introduce a joint resolution, and I want to have a dispatch read showing the justification of it.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 96) appropriating $10,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods on levee at Mound City, Ill., was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc.. That the sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levee at Mound City, III.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave to have read the dispatch I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MOUND CITY, ILL., April 4, 1912.

Senator SHELBY M. CULLOM, Washington, D. C .:

At a citizens' meeting held to-night it was decided to ask you to secure for the city of Mound City, Ill., the sum of $10,000 from appropriation recently made to aid us in our flood-stricken condition. Water at top of 4 miles of levee all around city; no money in treasury. Financial aid necessary at once to save us from handation. Can you not have same wired to city treasurer here?

M. F. BROWNER, Mayor. DANIEL HOGAN.
W. A. WALL, County Judge,
F. J. Kuny,
President Mound City Commercial Club.

Mr. CULLOM. This morning I received the telegram which has just been read, and I applied to the Mississippi River Commission, asking them to send to Mound City some of the money we have already appropriated. They telegraphed me that they can not use it, because the appropriation was made for the Mississippi River alone. So I have introduced the joint reso-I hope it may pass at once, because there is great Intion. distress there

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 8, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

FRIDAY, April 5, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee Almighty God that we may look up to Thee and call Thee Father and be assured of Thy care and solicitude; in our sorrows we may come to Thee and be comforted, in our weakness we may approach Thee and be comforted, in our weakness we may approach Thee and be strengthened, and in all the perplexities and vicissitudes of life we may call upon Thee and receive light. So let Thy blessing, we beseech Thee, come to all that we may be comforted attentions. to all that we may be comforted, strengthened, and guided through the busy whirl and turmoil of life's activities, and Thine be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR TO-MORROW.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker will be absent to-morrow, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood to preside as Speaker pro tempore.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE LOUDENSLAGER.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, May 5, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon, be set apart or addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. Henry Loudenslager, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R.

20728, the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. POU rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. POU. I rise for the purpose of making a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. I would like to say, pending the motion of the gentleman from Texas, that several Fridays have passed and the Committee on Claims has given the right of way to other committees. We have considerable work ready for this House, and if the House wishes to consider other matters it is a matter of no more concern to me than to any other Member of the House,

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] is a preferential motion. If the House desires to go into the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, it will vote for the motion of the gentleman from Texas. prefers to consider private claims, it will vote down the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POU. If the gentleman will yield a moment-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not yield the floor, but I will yield for a question.

Mr. POU. I think the bill that the Committee on Claims has for consideration can be disposed of in an hour's time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield to the suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina to dis-pense with our bill. We have spent months in its preparation and have proceeded to considerable length in its consideration, and I do not feel disposed to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask both the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from North Carolina to yield to me while I present a privileged resolution that will not take two minutes to dispose of.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS NO. 2.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has a matter of pressing nature that will take but a moment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield.

Mr. KORBLY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 2, which has under consideration the contested election case of Gill against Catlin, I ask unanimous consent that the committee may sit during the session this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Elections that has in charge the election case of Gill against Catlin have the privilege of sitting during the session to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Now, will the gentleman yield to me to present a privileged resolution?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman to present his resolution.

Mr. HENRY of Texas, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to present the resolution, without prejudice to the gentleman from Texas or the gentleman from North Carolina

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that he present a privileged resolution, without prejudice to the parliamentary status as between the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from North Carolina. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 481 (H. Rept. 501).

Resolved, That in order to obtain full and complete information, for the purpose of determining what legislation is needed, the Committee on the Judiciary is authorized and directed to make a full investigation of all matters touched upon in House resolution No. 405 within the jurisdiction of said committee; and said committee is authorized, as a whole or by subcommittee, to sit during sessions of the House and the recess of Congress, to compel the attendance of witnesses, send for persons and papers, to administer oaths to witnesses, and to employ experts, counsel, accountants, and clerical and other assistants.

The Speaker shall have authority to sign and the Clerk to attest subpeans during the sessions or recess of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman have any idea as to what this investigation will cost?

this investigation will cost?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have not a very definite idea. Probably the chairman of the Judiciary Committee would be better advised as to that.

Mr. MANN. There is no limitation to the amount? Mr. HENRY of Texas. There is no limitation. The custom at this session has been to allow the Committee on Accounts to bring in a resolution limiting the amount.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HENRY of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. What is resolution 405?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. In regard to the investigation of the coney Trust. The gentleman will remember that the caucus Money Trust. resolution divided the resolution and referred various parts of it to the several committees having jurisdiction. A part went to the Committee on Banking and Currency, part to the Judi-ciary Committee, part to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and part of it to the Committee on Election of President and Vice President, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, I have no intention of opposing the resolution. But I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that these committees of investigation have already spent over $70,000. much this will cost I do not know. How much additional cost of the investigations already going on I suppose no one knows. Up to date I have not seen any valuable product resulting from the investigation.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Texas that while it may be an error on the part of the Clerk, as this resolution was read it said "to require the attention of wit-

Mr. HENRY of Texas. "Attendance of witnesses."

Mr. NORRIS. I presume it was a mistake in reading. Mr. HENRY of Texas. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that after the previous question is ordered one motion to adjourn is in order and no other dilatory motion is allowed.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

CREEK INDIANS, ALABAMA.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 16661) to relinquish, release, remise, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all the lands held under claim or color of title by individuals or private ownership or municipal ownership situated in the State of Alabama which were reserved, retained, or set apart to or for the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians under or by virtue of the treaty entered into between the United States of America and the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians on March 24, 1832, and move to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. MANN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Where is this bill at the present time? The SPEAKER. It is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman from Alabama will have to get it before the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I have asked unanimous consent to take it from the Speaker's table and bring it before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 16661, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire what the bill is about?

Mr. CLAYTON. It is the Creek Indian land bill, with which the gentleman is undoubtedly familiar. The Senate has struck out the House bill and substituted another bill, which, in the opinion of the Representatives from the State of Alabama, does not afford any relief.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments. The Clerk reported the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on disagreeing to the Senate amendments and asking for a conference.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendments were disagreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Stephens of Texas) there were—ayes 63, noes 21.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20728, the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. BARNHART in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction, lease, purchase, repairs, and improvements of school and agency buildings, and for sewerage, water supply, and lighting plants, and for purchase of school sites, $425,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to this paragraph. I desire to know what school sites are to be purchased. There is a provision in this paragraph for the purchase of school sites, and I desire to know of the chairman of this committee what school sites are contemplated to be purchased, and if the school sites have previously been located?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the bill is subject to this point of order. This item is for the purchase of necessary school sites and for the upkeep of these school plants, and this is the justification for the amount, reading from the hearing at page 26:

Thus the amount available for upkeep of the plants was 3.8 per cent of their total value, which percentage has been found inadequate to keep the buildings and property in good condition and to prevent deterioration of the school and agency plants. Experience teaches that from 5 to 10 per cent is necessary to keep up plants of this character. For the fiscal year 1913 the superintendents of the several schools entitled to the benefits of this appropriation have estimated, as absolute necessities for permanent construction work, buildings, water, lighting, sewer systems, etc., $583,980. Their total estimates for absolute necessities, however, including repairs as well as constructive work, amount to $752,276. Deducting their estimates for construction only, this leaves a balance for repairs of $168,296.

This includes all of the Indian school buildings in the United States in which Indian children are now being taught. The children are there now in everyday and Indian schools in the United States, and this item is not subject for that reason to a point of order. Mr. FOWLER.

What schools are to have these new sites on the reservations'

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is only one instance in which there is any new plant, and that is building a barn for one of the schools in a cold climate where there is an industrial school now being taught. They have an old shed where horses and cattle are kept, and we thought it was necessary, on the recommendation of the superintendent of that school and on the recommendation also of some of the supervisors who have been out there and who have examined into the matter, to recom-mend that this barn should be rebuilt. That is the only instance of a new building.

I do not think that adding to this shed a better building would be a new building in the sense of a new appropriation, and I think that the barn could have a shed attached to it without subjecting the item to a point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; but the language is:

And for purchase of school sites.

What school sites are contemplated by this appropriation? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In many places in the United States where the schools are being taught the lands have been allotted to the Indians on the reservations, but it may be necessary for school buildings to be erected on Indian allotments, and there ought to be some provision for paying for the acre or 2 acres or whatever is necessary of these Indian lands to be transferred to the Indian Bureau for school purposes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, clearly I grant that there ought to be all of the provisions for educating the Indians that are necessary, and for one I shall not be an obstructionist in that direction.

There is not a man in America who is more grateful or more generous or more in favor of giving to the wards of this Government all that is absolutely necessary for their care, for their education, and for their civilization for the purpose of making them real citizens of this country, but, Mr. Chairman, to appropriate money for the purpose of purchasing new school sites without first having decided in advance that they are necessary is, in my opinion, a very dangerous precedent to set in this Congress. While I do not desire, Mr. Chairman, if I can learn that these school sites are necessary, to press this point of order, but, Mr. Chairman, I think that it is—

Mr. CARTER. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. This item here provides for what is known as reservation schools, does it not?

Mr. CARTER. As I remember, there is a general law authorizing the construction of buildings on reservations for Indian schools, and in that event the gentleman's point of order would not be good against this item. I do not understand these to be the large, elaborate boarding schools, but the small day schools, as a rule, attended largely by children from the reservation who return home at night. If it is true that these are reservation schools, then the gentleman's point of order must fall, because the general law gives authority to build such

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think so; that is my under-

Mr. FOWLER. Then should not the bill specify that it is for the purpose of purchasing sites on these small reservations? Mr. CARTER. That might improve the verbiage, but it has been carried in this language for a good many years-I think ever since I have been in Congress, anyway, and, I expect, long before.

standing.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has been the law a good many years.

Mr. FERRIS. I presume that when the gentleman from Illinois becomes aware of the fact that the appropriation of last year was $425,000-

Mr. FOWLER. I know that fact.

Mr. FERRIS. Just a moment-precisely the same amount we are appropriating this year, and that makes the annual upkeep of less than 4 per cent for keeping up the repairs of all the Indian schools throughout the United States, I am sure he will conclude that the department has not been extravagant, but, on the contrary, they have been saving, painstaking, and careful. Again, I want to call his attention to the fact that in the estimates the department asked for $650,000, and they thought it was imperatively needed, but the committee thought inasmuch as they had gotten along last year with $425,000 they would hold them down to the old estimate. Now, with regard to the point of order of the gentleman. This committee has jurisdiction to legislate and appropriate for the upkeep and repair and maintenance and welfare of the Indian Department. And if the gentleman from Illinois, or any other gentleman, is going to attack the committee in its authority to appropriate for the welfare of the Indians and for their best interests and for their best welfare, why the Indian appropriation bill would be riddled without either warrant of law or without consideration or a knowledge of the facts,
Mr. FOWLER. How much of the appropriation will be used

Mr. FOWLER. for this purpose?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman wants to know how much will be appropriated. Probably none, but in some instances where allotment work is being carried on they have come up so close to the Indian school that in order to acquire a little corner or to square it off, or in order to get a road, or something of that kind from the school to connect with the depot or to connect with the town in which they do their trading-the gentleman can know how imperative that is and how necessary it is. Probably no site will ever be purchased under this. Probably no parcel of land will be bought, but it was thought advisable to give them authority so that they can make a road or a walk, and I think the gentleman would do ill to press his point of order if it were good, and I am sure it is not good, because the Indian Committee has full jurisdiction to appropriate and keep up the schools of the Government.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, that is just the reason I have reserved this point of order. It is because of the indefiniteness of this paragraph with reference to all of the items which are enumerated therein. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that in an appropriation where there are several items to be covered by a specific sum that each one of those items ought to be designated specifically, with the full amount that is to be expended in carrying into effect the different purposes of the appropriation. The precedent, Mr. Chairman, of making appropriations indiscriminately, without naming the amount so that the amount should cover the whole cost of the item, is so great that I do not think this House can afford to sanction this para-Each item sought to be covered by the appropriation should be set out definitely, and the sum therefor should be specified, so that the people of the country could tell just where their money is expended and for what purpose.

I am aware, Mr. Chairman, of the need of these Indian schools, and I would not divert one single, necessary penny from their relief, but I do say, Mr. Chairman, that this committee can, by appropriate amendment, give the necessary relief after the point of order is sustained.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Is the gentleman aware that we have 2.331 schools and 79 boarding schools to keep in repair all the year, and does the gentleman think that out of an appropriation of $425,000, where the total per capita is 4.8, the sum is sufficient

Mr. FOWLER. That is not the question. The question is, What need is there for the purchase of school sites, how many are needed, and in what reservations; also what are they to cost, and how much is necessary to be appropriated therefor? This paragraph is silent upon all of these propositions, and yet you ask us to support this bill.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. FOWLER. I will. Mr. JACKSON. Can the gentleman suggest some better way in which the Government could acquire school sites for these Indian schools than to place it in the hands of department to condemn or acquire them and pay out the sum to be authorized? The gentleman certainly does not want a site to be selected and then placed before Congress and have it voted upon. Some officer must have the discretion to select sites and approve them, as has been suggested, in the case of the condemnation of the public roads or other things that the department needs for this service. Now, can the gentleman suggest some better way to accomplish that than that which is sought to be accomplished by this provision? Mr. FOWLER. I would accomplish this matter just the same as any other matter ought to be accomplished.

Mr. JACKSON. That is a very indefinite answer.

Mr. FOWLER. It is necessary to locate the sites necessary for the building of the schools. If there is no necessity for building a school, there is no necessity for the site. First determine whether the school is necessary, and, if it is determined necessary, then locate the site.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. FOWLER. I think it is subject to a point of order, but, in view of what has been said, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

To conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits, for the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to advise the Indians as to the proper care of forests: Provided, That this shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women housekeeping and other household duties, and for furnishing necessary equipments and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; and to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among Indians, $400,000: Provided further, That not to exceed $5.000 of the amount herein appropriated may be used to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits: Provided also, That the amounts paid to matrons, farmers and stockmen herein provided for shall not be included within the limitation on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of June 7, 1897.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] as to how this money has been

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, the amount appropriated was $400,000; for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, the amount appropriated was $350,-000, and the amount unexpended was $55,067.15, leaving amount expended $294,932.85, as shown by the analysis of the expenditures, which is as follows:

Stationery and office supplies	629. 29 1, 626. 50
Total	964, 95 294, 932, 85

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I presume very likely that may be as definite information as the gentleman has, although if it is, I regret, of course, that the information is not of much value.

Where was the money spent?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I find in the estimates for last year's appropriation the following statement relating to the expenditure of this money. It says:

The reports from the field indicate that progress is being made in farming and that the Indians, through the constant urging of these farmers and stockmen, are making greater efforts to develop their land and improve their stock.

Eliminating the area under the Union superintendency, ther are approximately 34,614,137 acres of unallotted land and 12,408,926 acres of allotted land under the jurisdictions at which these men (excepting 15 of the expert farmers who are estimated for Union Agency) are or will be employed. The population of these reservations is approximately 189,845 Indians, which, if divided by the total number of farmers and stockmen to be employed, would give each man approximately 912 Indians to look after. During the fiscal year 1910 there was an acreage of approximately 55,389 allotted and approximately 18,691 acres of unallotted land under cultivation by the Indians. These figures are not accurate, for the reason that reports before the office are incomplete. They are probably much too low.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, last year we inserted in the bill a provision requiring an annual report in reference to this appropriation, because I had objected several years to the appropriation being made with no information before the House. The gentleman has not given any information of any value to the House. That may be the fault of the Indian Office.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it is the fault of the Indian Office. The figures for the fiscal year 1911 are not all in the report, because the reports from the field have not reached the office, and therefore the data for that year have not yet reached it. The gentleman can well understand why they have not reached the office.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I can not understand why reports up to the last day of June have not yet reached the office, when the law requires that the report should have been made to Congress on the 1st day of last December.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that the information was furnished strictly in accordance with the requirements of the law and is printed in House Document 211 of this session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. What is the information? It is the duty of the Indian Committee to have examined the House document and to have given us the information.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I simply call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the document can be had.

Mr. MANN. Very likely. I am asking for information with reference to the item in the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will present to the gentleman the full report.

Mr. MANN. It is the duty of the gentleman in charge of the bill to know what is in the report; and if that is all the information that is contained in the report, then the report does not comply with the law. We have a right to know how much of this money has been expended in advising the Indians in reference to the proper care of forests, and how much has been expended in advising the Indian women in regard to housekeeping and other household duties, and how much has been expended in advising the Indians in regard to stock raising, and how much of it has been expended in testing the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, and so forth.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the chairman of the committee will refer to page 38 of the hearings, and following pages, he can give the gentleman the information he asked for.

Mr. MANN. Why can not the gentleman from South Dakota do it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Texas has charge of the bill, and I defer to him.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In the hearings, on page 38, I find this discussion:

mr. Meritt. Where we have no large timber interests the farmers on the reservations and other employees, under the direction of the superintendent, take care of the forest work without having expert foresters or forest assistants.

Mr. Burke. Is any part of the money appropriated for protecting the forests reimbursable?

Mr. Meritt. No, sir; none of the money appropriated for this work is reimbursable.

Mr. Burke. The proceeds from the timber that is sold on the reservations go to the Indians?

Mr. Meritt. The proceeds are deposited under a heading known as "Indian money, proceeds of labor," and under a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury that money is available for administrative purposes, and we are now using some of the proceeds from the sale of timber to help protect the forests, and for administrative purposes for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. Burke. Do I understand that you have a fund from the sale of timber, dead, or down, or otherwise, from reservations that you can expend for administrative purposes, and that in addition to the appropriation that is made by the appropriation bill here?

Mr. Meritt. We have not been selling very much timber during the last year or two on account of the low price being paid for timber, but we can, under the discretion of the Sceretary of the Interior and in accordance with the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, use the proceeds from the sale of timber for administrative purposes.

Mr. Burke. How much is being used, if you know?

Mr. Meritt. We are not using very much, because we are not getting very much money from the sale of the timber at this time on account of the low price.

Then follows a statement showing by reservations the esti-everything as succinctly as it can be done. Here it is:

Mr. MANN. That is what the gentleman read before.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That covers all the timber work, and shows what has been done with it last year.

Now, with reference to the expert farmers, I have this infor-

I can not imagine how we could furnish a better statement unless we stated what amount of timber each fire burned, its value, on what reservation, on what range of mountains, and in what county and State the fire took place. The gentleman from Illinois certainly would not expect that.

Mr. MANN. I would not. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I have not before seen House Document No. 221. escaped me in some way. It seems to contain the information desired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. It seems to contain information which the gentleman has not been able to give.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of Indian police, including chiefs of police at not to exceed $50 per month each, and privates at not to exceed $30 per month each, to be employed in maintaining order, and for the purchase of equipments and rations for policemen at nonration agencies, $200,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What service do these Indian police now render except to draw their salaries?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in reply to the gentleman-in answer to the gentleman's questionthat the amount appropriated was $8,000. The amount expended was $6,618.

Mr. MANN. I am talking about the amount of $200,000. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are two items carried here. On what line is that?

Mr. MANN. At the bottom of page 7, for the payment of Indian police. This item has been in the bill for years. Originally it went into the bill when there was occasion for Indian What occasion is there now for Indian police? Do the States assume no responsibilities when these Indians are made citizens?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In answer to the gentleman's question I will make this statement: The next item is the one I thought had just been read. I thought he was referring to the one for the payment of the Indian police, including chiefs of police at not exceeding $50 per month and privates at not exceeding $30 per month, the whole item amounting to $200,000—that is the amount the gentleman asked in regard to, is it not? This is the same amount that was asked for and granted last year.

Mr. MANN. I understand it has been granted for several years; but what is it used for? How many Indian police are there, where are they located, and what do they do now?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am very glad to answer the gentleman's question. There are over 600 police officers employed to maintain order on the various reservations throughout the United States. By the means of this body of men much has been accomplished toward bettering conditions on the various reservations. With the opening of the reservations throughout the country many questionable characters are drawn toward the Indian country, and the necessity for the continuance of this force is more apparent. Out of this fund also is paid the equipment for the police and rations at nonration agencies.

Mr. MANN. Where are these Indian reservations now, which have been thrown open to settlement, on which we still maintain Indian police?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are in Oklahoma, where we have over 100,000 Indians; in South Dakota, where we have about 20,000; in North Dakota, where there are possibly 10,000; in New Mexico and Arizona, where there are about 61,000 Indians, and there are various reservations in other States and possibly a hundred different tribes of Indians scattered all over the United States.

Mr. MANN. We have all told in the United States less than 350,000 Indians, according to the census. Here you propose to maintain a police force of 600 Indians. Most of the Indians have been made citizens, most of the reservations have been abolished, and the land is now in private ownership. When is this to cease? Is the appropriation used for this purpose, or some other?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It will not cease until the Indians become civilized and become citizens of the States in which they reside, so that the local authorities, the constables and State officers, whose duty it is to keep the peace, can take charge of the Indians. Then, and not until then, will it cease. Then, and not until then, can we discontinue these appropriations. As long as we have the Indians under our charge we must have policemen. The Indian, like the white man, needs policing, needs protecting, as well as punishing, and I know of no other way to do it except by making an appropriation for a police force.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. Mann] has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The fact is that as we bring these Indians into citizenship we increase their power in this House, and gentlemen here, reflecting the natural sentiments of their Indian constituents, now desire, as mankind always has desired, to protect those men who are holding office.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will yield at that point, we have not an Indian in the State of Texas who is under the care of the Government. We have Indians there, but we take care of them ourselves.

Mr. MANN. Then probably there are no Indian police in the State of Texas. Perhaps Texas does her own policing.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We certainly do.

Mr. MANN. Oklahoma ought to do the same thing. The Dakotas ought to do the same thing. Arizona ought to do the same thing. So ought the other States where the Indians have been made citizens and have received their allotments in severalty. Why is it that as we go ahead, civilizing the Indians under our method, making allotments in severalty, we still have to support them, police them, and attend to them in every

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will yield, I think the question of the amount and the number has been gone over thoroughly enough, and I think what the gentleman wants to get at is what these Indian police do.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I move to strike out the last word. I think I can give the gentleman from Illinois a little information on that point.

In a great many reservations where, as the gentleman knows, allotments have been taken up, most of the land has been allotted. In many reservations there are, however, unallotted areas, large sections which have not as yet been allotted. These are usually leased to cattlemen for different sums and for different terms of years or months as the case may be. Indian police are very helpful to the agents, so the Indian agents tell me, in running around and determining the brands of the cattle, and whether any outside cattle are run in to be pastured for which no pay is collected. They tell me that the Indian police are also helpful, from the fact that they camp and live up and down the streams, and they see that no timber is cut or removed from the Indian lands. Again, they tell me, and I believe it is a fact, that they are helpful to the agency in this way: In many cases they no longer employ a regular force of interpreters to help them with their lawsuits, their payments, and the leasing of their lands, and the different things that are necessary to be done for the Indians. These Indian policemen are paid small salaries, from $25 to $50. They keep horses of their own and use them to ride around, and these Indian policemen can be used as interpreters and to run errands and to communicate to the Indians things which they ought to know. often the Indians are not within reach of mail facilities, can neither read nor write, and do not go to a post office once in five years. So the Indian service needs some one who can talk the language, who can be sent on errands, and communicate information which the Indians need to know. Of course, this only applies to full-bloods. I think it would be a serious mistake to dispense with the Indian police, for the reasons I have given. Whether or not there are too many in any certain reservation and too few in some other reservation, I am not clearly advised; but the commissioner advises us that as equitably as he can he has distributed the Indian police on the different reservations, where they protect the timber, assist in the leasing of the land, assist in transacting Indian business, and, probably most important of all they do, act as interpreters for the agents.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me suggest that they also do much toward preserving order, removing trespassers, and also in suppressing the introduction of liquor upon the reserva-

Mr. FERRIS. That is true. They help keep the peace among the Indians. Another thing which I omitted to state, there are usually old, trusted, tried Indians around every reservation, who are known to the white people and to the agent, and the agent usually designates some such Indian, who serves as a go-between in all these matters, between the Indians, the agency, and also between the white people and the Indians having business relations. I do not think the appropriation ought to be stricken out.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, upon the question of Indian police I am not prepared to speak for all the reservations. There are some reservations in Oklahoma that would probably need Indian police. But I can say that in the Five Civilized Tribes, where we have assumed full jurisdiction as citizens of the State, that we do not have any use for Indian police. Every precinct has its constable, every county has its sheriff and deputy sheriff, and there is no necessity for Indian police in that section. But, as I say, there are sections that would need Indian police in order to carry out certain regulations of the department.

Mr. FERRIS. I take it that if the Indian Commissioner distributes them equitably he would not put any Indian police in that part of the community where the Indians are competent, for I am opposed to supervising people who need no supervision. He has full power to put them where they are needed in the blanket reservations.

Mr. DAVENPORT. If the Indian Commissioner would equitably distribute them, I would raise no objection. But I want to say here that they have not been equitably distributed in my part of the State of Oklahoma. They have been distributed in sections where they are not needed, and I am opposed to the continuation of any number of officers not needed. I am opposed to their being sent to communities where they do as much harm as they do good. I personally know that in the full-blood district of the Cherokee Nation they have done as much harm as good. They are not needed because there are plenty of officers competent to enforce the law and police regulations in the administration of affairs of the State. There are other sections where Indian police are probably needed. They are the reservations that have not been open to full citizenship and lands allotted as they have been in my section.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I want to add a word to what has been said by my colleague [Mr. DAVENPORT]. The Committee on Indian Affairs acted on the evidence presented to it by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or that department, and this is the usual appropriation, as I understand it. Since the matter has arisen I want to further call the attention of the committee to conditions in my district and other places in Oklahoma. It is a fact, as was stated by my colleague [Mr. FERRIS], that in the large reservations where there are few settlements-in the grazing countries-these police are needed. I now have in mind two counties, or two reservations, where these police are used for nothing more or less than messengers for the local superintendent. I am a little surprised that this appropriation is not cut. I believe that notice should be served on the Indian Department that the amount will be reduced after this year because, as has been said by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT], I know where Indian police are being used who are not needed; but, as stated by other members of the committee, they are an indispensable necessity on the big reservations in such places as South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say that in the last Congress the matter was considered carefully, and it was decided that we could get along with less police, but that they were not receiving what was an adequate consideration for their services. So we left the amount as it was and increased the amount that is being paid to each policeman. So we have less policemen in number, but they get more pay.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Is there any statement as to whether there are fewer of them?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There are fewer of them because they have increased the salaries all along the line. The highest salary that can be paid is $50 a month, and my recollection is that the previous salaries were $20 and $30 a month.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true. After the reservation is opened up the Indian does not have free grass and free hay and pasture, and he has to buy it, and the Indian would no longer serve as a policeman for the amount that he was then receiving.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is true, and this condition prevailed in the organized counties all through the State. They have local officers, and I know instances where these Indian police are pure ornaments, and nothing more or less.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Are any of these Indian police connected with the Osage Tribe?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I think not.

Mr. MANN. I am speaking of the Osage Tribe. Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do not know of any.

Mr. MANN. Do we have any judges?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. No but they have dispensed with them. Not now. We used to have,

Mr. MANN. We maintain Indian police in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman who represents that district knows more about that than I do. reservations in my district where they are not needed and ought to be dispensed with. They are simply messenger boys. But I want it understood that that condition does not prevail in the big reservations where there are few settlers.

Mr. MANN. That is what I am speaking of. Here we divide the lands, make the Indian a citizen, have the State assume jurisdiction, and we pay out of the Federal Treasury for the policing and in some places for the judges, when the Indians have plenty of property and the State has plenty of authority.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is quite true, and I think that after this year the appropriation ought to be cut.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is aware, of course, that an office with money to spend like this finds it very convenient to give this or some other man a job, and a demand for an officer here and an officer there is easier to yield to than it is to refuse.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is quite true.

Mr. MANN. This appropriation ought to be cut in two, as a matter of fact. Mr. Chairman, I move, on page 8, line 1, to strike out the words "two hundred" and insert the words " hundred and fifty," so that it will read "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars." That is a modest cut.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, line 1, strike out the words "two hundred" and insert the words "one hundred and fifty."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail, for the reason that we do not know but that these policemen are needed, and until we have further information in regard to the matter I think it would be very unsafe to cut out this appropriation. Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Tes.

Mr. JACKSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] a question. Is it true that these men are simply selected or appointed by the Indian agent?

Mr. FERRIS. On his recommendation.
Mr. JACKSON. And some of them are voters?
Mr. FERRIS. None of the Indians on the west side, in my district, exercise the right, although every one of them has the Mf. JACKSON. There are men who do have political influence in the territory inhabited by the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true in that side of the State where they are a little further advanced.

Mr. JACKSON. Is it not true that these local police could be made a very effective political machine?

Mr. FERRIS. That could be done if it was in an intelligent, far-advanced community, but I do not think the police ought to be used in communities where the Indians are civilized and

Mi. JACKSON. It is true that this sort of an arrangement, where these men are simply selected locally, could be made much more effective as a political machine without any intervention or civil-service examination, or anything of that sort, than some of the officers who have been taken out of the appropriation by this present bill.

Mr. FERRIS. In a community where the State is organized and the country is thickly settled, I think, perhaps, that is true, but let me say to the gentleman that I am in this situation: Six counties of my district are in the Five Tribes' part of the State. The balance of my district is on the west side of the State. In counties that are in the Five Tribes' part of the State the Indians there are practically all white men, They serve on reception committees in matters of importance. are the leading lawyers and doctors and business men of the community. On the west side of the State, where I live, we have Indians who are real Indians, who do not really transact business with the white people at all, except through their agents. In districts of that character I feel and the agents in charge feel that a few trusty, reliable Indian police around the agency are of help. I have recently talked with some of them. Personally I think that where the Indians are backward, not well along with civilization, and where they are not sufficiently advanced to come in contact with business propositions and transact business in everyday affairs, I think a few Indian police would be really helpful to the Indians and to the administration without any consequence one way or the other.

Mr. JACKSON. It is true they exist all over the territory. Mr. FERRIS. I never have come in contact with any Indian police in my Five Tribes' district.

Mr. JACKSON. There is one other question that I wanted to ask before I conclude. In the matter of this increase of salaries the gentleman states that he had some explanation to

Will he tell why the salaries were increased?

Mr. FERRIS. I have the version of the commissioner and the version of the local agents. Prior to the time the Indian lands were opened up these Indian horses they used as mounts could graze on the common. They could get hay on the common and stack it up, but as soon as every acre of land was fenced up, with some white men residing on it, they did not have any public domain for the horses to forage on.

Mr. JACKSON. Does not the gentleman think that this would be a good place to cut this appropriation to $150,000?

Mr. FERRIS. It certainly would not interfere with any-body unless it be the Indian administration, and I think you will find if you did cut it that the Indian administration will be crippled in places, and it is not my intention or desire to have that done.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask permission to further answer the question the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON] asked of my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. I think the gentleman from Kansas is cowect in regard to the organization of the Indian police in a number of these places. So far in the Cherokee Nation and a portion of the Creek Nation it has been nothing more or less than a political organization in the last four years. Great complaint has gone up among the people there because of that one fact. It now has a tendency to bring about discord and dissatisfaction, and it brings about conflict between the local officers and these police, that goes on and will continue to go on, and if the bill was in such shape that I could make the motion to amend I would provide an amendment by which there should be no Indian police appointed by the department in any organized county or municipality within any organized State.

Mr. JACKSON. I would like to ask the gentleman, since he seems to be familiar with it, about what per cent of the Indian police on the east side of the territory are white men?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Well, they are considerably mixed. As a matter of fact, they are usually taken, as some other tribal officers are, from the influential men of the localities. There are about, I think, now 14 or 16 Indian police in that section of the State. My recollection is only 15 or 16.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman allow me to make this statement in answer to the question he asked. The Five Civilized Tribes are somewhat different from the Indians in the west end of our State and Indians generally throughout the United States. The gentleman should realize that the Five Tribes have had 50 or 75 years of influence of civilizing tenden-cies over the other fellows. Now, as to over in my end of the State, there is absolutely nothing in it anywhere. I do not know much about political organizations or political ina-

Mr. JACKSON. You do not have the policemen— Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma (continuing). In my section of the State a full blood who works for $25 a month seldom goes to the polls and you never hear about politics from them.

Mr. JACKSON. You have very few.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. We never thought of it in that connection there, and in fact I do not think there are any machine politics in that part of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a further

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page S. after the word "dollars," in line 2, by inserting the following: "Provided, That none of this sum shall be used in the Five Civilized Tribes."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. I withdraw it.
Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire that the amendment should read "Five Civilized Tribes."

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the amendment will be amended as desired by the gentleman. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and the Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 8, after the word "dollars," in line 2, by inserting the following: "Provided, That none of this sum shall be used in any of the Five Civilized Tribes."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, from the discussion here it has developed that the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians are as intelligent as the ordinary people of this country. I understand that they are citizens of the country. I understand that they are as well behaved as people ordinarily are. If it be true, as was developed in the conversation between the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Jackson] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT], that this police force has been used largely for political purposes in the past, certainly this appropriation can serve no useful purpose. Inasmuch as they are able to take care of themselves, and inasmuch as they live, as I understand, in organized counties in organized States, where there is no use for this police force, I think this amendment ought to prevail. If there is a locality or reservation wherein there is need for this police force, I have no objection to it if it is really and substantially demanded by the people of that reservation or that territory; but, Mr. Chairman, in the light of the discussion which has gone on here I think that none of this money ought to be used among these tribes for the purpose of having police to dominate over them with clubs and play politics with them.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say I am in agreement with some of the sentiments advanced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowlers]. He has uttered not one truth but several, but the conditions, I think, hardly warrant this House in excluding practically one-third of the Indians of the United States from this service. Now, I am one of those who think there is very little of this service necessary in the Five Civilized Tribes' part of the State, but I call his attention to the fact that it would not do with the full-blooded Indians in the eastern half of the State, even though for more than 50 years they have had their own legislatures and governed themselves, and that they have one of themselves in this House and one in the Senate of the United States, at the other end of this Capitol. I do not want to strip the department of the right to send agents there, or Indian police there, if they think it is necessary. Now, you understand it is not incumbent upon the department to send a great horde of Indian police into a community where the people are intelligent; and if they do that, the department is subject to criticism rather than the whole system of Indian police. I think the objection of the gentleman from Illinois strikes at one specific condition which is but an incident, to wit, the inequality of distributing the Indian police, rather than striking at the entire system in its entirety; and I think that if anybody should suggest to the Indian Commissioner that he has been sending too many Indian police there, and that he should not send them there, he would stop it. But we ought not to take away the right of sending a few there in the event they are needed, and if the amendment of the gentleman prevails it would preclude the sending of them at all.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FERRIS. I do.
Mr. FOWLER. Do not you elect these Indians to offices in counties in which they live, such as sheriffs, constables, etc., for the purpose of maintaining order not only for the Indians, but for the whites also?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Illinois is entirely correct. The governor of our State at time is an Indian citizen, zen. We have a United States Senator who is an Indian citizen, The governor of our State at this time is an Indian citias well as a Member of this House who is an Indian citizen. The speaker of the Oklahoma Legislature is an Indian citizen. They hold many of our best and most responsible positions and they are entitled to do so. I rejoice perhaps more over that one thing than any other thing—there is no feeling between the Indians and the whites. We elect them to the best offices in the State and support them, and I desire to call the attention of the House to this fact. In our State one class of people, the whites, are over 1,500,000 in population; the Indian population is only a little over 100,000. Where the ratio of strength is so unequal it shows consideration, good feeling, good dealing, and wholesome results. It is worthy of mention. It is a beautiful scene to see two races moving side by side in the progressive new State.

Mr. FOWLER. Do not these Indian officers make just as good policemen as white officers?

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely; but the gentleman should discriminate, and the House should understand that an Indian who has a sixth or an eighth or sixteenth or thirty-second or sixtyfourth Indian blood is an Indian citizen, so far as statutes are concerned, but is not an Indian so far as reality is concerned. Even though we are getting along so amicably, I am not one to withdraw every species of protection from those full-blood Indians in the backward parts of the State in the full-blood settlements.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there any more use of Indian police for those Indians in Oklahoma than there is for police in Ohio, Illinois, and Indiana?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, yes; there are no Indians in the States mentioned. We must keep within range of the mark. I am sharing largely the views of the gentleman. It has been my purpose to accurately describe to some extent the conditions of the Five Civilized Tribes. Most of these Indians need nothing, and the committee has made marked reductions.

Mr. FOWLER. Is not the appointment of police over these Indian tribes an insult to their intelligence and to their efforts for education and civilization?

Mr. FERRIS. If police were appointed that attempted to meddle with the affairs of a man who only had a slight strain of Indian blood and who was a lawyer or a doctor, or some other leading citizen, of the community, I would say yes. Over in the eastern part of the State we have some Indians who need supervision. The word "Indian" has no meaning as applied to a citizen of 64 per cent Indian blood.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FERRIS. I will.
Mr. CANNON. Do those people whom you call Indians make a part of the 100,000 as against the 1,600,000 of the whites?

Mr. FERRIS. They do. Mr. CANNON. How ma

How many of those Indians whom you call Indians are not Indians?

Mr. FERRIS. There are probably about 18,000 or 20,000 full bloods, as shown by the rolls, but there are not that many in reality. Some are on as full bloods who are not.

reality. Some are on as full bloods who are not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOWLER. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] may be extended five

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. One other question, and then I am done. Are not these Indians who are full bloods as easily controlled as the ordinary citizen of your State?

Mr. FERRIS. From a standpoint of obedience to law and order I say yes, unhesitatingly, but from the standpoint of capability to do business you must of yourself agree with me that it could not be true. A full-blooded Indian, from the nature of things, is not as keen of intellect and not as keen of mind to transact business, and has not the business sagacity the white man has. The intermingling of blood makes a keen mind, but there is something about the full blood that will not, as a rule, adapt himself to the white man's ways. He is not as keen and as able to cope with his white brother on business deals.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Some are Indians by adoption, are they

Mr. DAVENPORT. Some are Indians by adoption.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is it not a part of the Indian policeman's duty to assist the Indian in the transaction of business, and his business to prevent the sale of liquor, and so forth?

Mr. FERRIS. I stated partially a while ago what I intend to say now. This is based on observation. They use the Indian police in my home county and in seven or eight counties in which I am intimately acquainted, to help the Indian farmers in agreements as to leases. They send them as a special envoy to perform errands. They travel up and down the creeks and see that no timber is cut from the Indian lands. They do service and are a great deal of help. It encourages the Indians to give them employment and responsibility. It has a good effect and I have never heard of ill effects from it in full-blood communities.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. CANNON. I will oppose the amendment pro forma, although I want to be square and say that, after listening to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], I am for the amendment.

I want to congratulate the State of Oklahoma on its marvelous progress. It is unexampled, so far as I know or believe, by the history of any other State. [Applause.] The State is fully organized. Full citizenship is given to the full bloods and to the mixed bloods. They have intelligence. Why, the gentlemen that I have met representing that country are quite six while anybody else is half a dozen. [Laughter.]

Now, what have we? A powerful State, a rich State, fully organized into counties, with all the official machinery; 600,000 pure white people and 100,000 of Indian blood, but not a great many of them full bloods.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, I will correct the gentleman in his figures. I think the number of white people in Oklahoma is about

Mr. DAVENPORT. One million four hundred thousand. Mr. CANNON. Oh, I thought it was 600,000. As the Dutchman said, "Vurse and vurse." I will not tell it all. [Laughter.] Now, you propose to appropriate $200,000, to do what? For the payment of Indian police, including chiefs of police, at not exceeding so much a day, employed in maintaining order, and for the purchase of equipment and rations for policemen on duty at non-ration agencies, $200,000. There is no more reason for this appropriation than there is to make such an appropriation for any other State in the Union for that purpose, undue interference—

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?
Mr. CANNON (continuing). And a reflection, as well as an interference, with the State of Oklahoma, a State full born, with a million and a half of white people and 100,000 Indians, so-called Indian citizens. God helps those who help themselves, and in justice to the citizenship of Oklahoma, in justice to the Indians, full bloods, if you choose, I think the time has arrived when they should stand, each man, upon his own feet. [Applause. Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. Mr. FERRIS. Of course, the gentleman is aware that it is within the discretion of the commissioner as to whether he will send one policeman there or not?

Mr. CANNON. O my friend. With high respect to the Indian Commissioner, with high respect to the humanitarian that sometimes is taking care of people who would be better off if they were not taken care of [laughter and applause], in view of the fact that from the time the white men landed at Jamestown, Va., and from the time they arrived on the eastern coast of Massachusetts the aborigines have been driven back and back and back with a strong hand; there are some good people-all good people, but mistaken as these people are-at a distance, having nothing else to do, many of them, who, if they can get an Indian child and fasten him to a girdle will go moving around and say, "Lo, see what we are doing for righteousness." [Laughter and applause.]

I speak with high respect, and have no individual in mind, but if this population in Oklahoma, if these Indians in Oklahoma homa, are competent for self-government, as I believe they are, and if a few of them are not competent, by the aid of the common school and without being fed panada—a mixture of boiled bread and molasses and vinegar that obtained out on the Wabash [laughter]—they become responsible, each man for himself; and if once in a while perchance somebody does not observe the law, there is enough force there to restrain, to punish. I think it is time to withdraw the arm of the Government and withdraw the Treasury from these people who have made this remarkable progress, so great, in their citizenship. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman-Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN.
MILLER] is recognized. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I have gathered from the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] that he opposes this appropriation because some of these Indian policemen may be utilized in Oklahoma, or rather that he opposes this appropriation because all of these Indian policemen are to be used in Oklahoma. If I misunderstood the gentleman, I stand ready to be corrected.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will permit, I——Mr. MILLER. I am surprised that the gentleman did not read the provisions of the bill carefully and become informed about this. If he had stopped to think for a moment he would see that this provision provides for Indian policemen through-out the whole United States, and that conditions existing in Oklahoma are quite different from those in other parts of the

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say I was addressing myself to the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. Fowner], and advocating the adoption of that

Mr. MILLER. I understood the gentleman was opposed to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. No. On the contrary, I said I was for the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Then, I made a mistake. However, the remarks of the gentleman were applied generally to the Indian question, and I think some words may be fittingly said in response thereto.

We have had a doctrine in the human race, I suppose since time began, which is fittingly expressed in the words, "each man for himself, and the devil take the hindmost." I have never heard that doctrine advocated as a rule to be followed by the Government in the administration of Indian affairs until to-day. It may be that the strong hand of the white man, in his effort to protect and aid the Indian, has not at all times been successful; but, Mr. Chairman, if we should to-day remove the protecting care of the Government from the Indians, we would turn the Indians over to those portions of the white race that are rapacious, that are full of greed, and who have no consideration for any human being save themselves. We would place the Indian in a condition so infinitely worse than the condition he is in now—a condition so frightful that the imagination palls before the picture.

I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois, that it is only because the Government has held its protecting arm about many of the Indian tribes in the Nation during the past few years that those Indians have a bit of ground to live on; that those Indians have some clothing to their backs, shelter in which to dwell, and some food to live upon; and I deprecate exceedingly that anyone should advance a doctrine to this House that it is the duty of the Government now, after we have, if you please, acquired their land, and we have driven them from the fertile valleys and put them upon the arid and semiarid regions, to withdraw aid and protection, saying that we can and should extend these benefits to them no longer. By this proceeding these wards of the Government would be turned over to human wolves in white skin.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. This amendment applies to the Five Civilized Tribes, and to those only. My remarks were addressed to the amendment, and I hope the gentleman will recognize the scope of the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I shall be pleased to speak for a minute or two on that precise point.

About a year and a half ago I was a member of a committee that visited this exact region. We met these Indians, saw the conditions under which they lived, tried to understand those conditions, and to ascertain, if possible, something that might be done for their welfare in certain respects.

While it is undoubtedly true that the State of Oklahoma is to be congratulated for the great progress she has made, having advanced, indeed, more rapidly and more brilliantly than any other like area of our land; and while she is to be particularly congratulated upon the consideration that has been extended by her and her citizens to the Indians, yet I beg to reply that the Indian country there was dedicated to the Indians many years ago and guaranteed to be exclusively theirs by this Government; and, further, if you withdraw the strong hand of the Government, which during these recent years has protected the Indians, you will turn that pleasing picture into one of horror and the blackness of night. Instead of having a peaceable, law-abiding community, where these friendly and amicable relations exist, you will have the hunter and the prey; you will have the spoiler and the despoiled. You will have that condition, not because the people of Oklahoma are any worse than the people elsewhere. It may be that they are a little better. It will be because you will turn over to the rapacious ones among them, who exist there as well as elsewhere, the richest prize that ever yet has been an incentive to greed or tempted the rapacity of mankind.

The most of these Indians are to be found in the eastern part of the State of Oklahoma. A great many of them are just as intelligent and capable of transacting their affairs as almost any man on the floor of this House, and yet, as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] has recently so well said, a great many of them are not. If the Government of the United States does not look after them, does not protect them, nobody will. They are or should be the objects of the consideration of this House.

Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MILLER. Yes. Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask if the gentleman knows of any of the Five Civilized Tribes who are not capable of selfcontrol and self-government?

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman mean any individuals? Mr. FOWLER. I mean any individuals of the Five Civilized

Tribes

Mr. MILLER. Most assuredly. There are 35,000 Indians in eastern Oklahoma to-day who have not had their restrictions removed, because they are not competent to handle their own affairs.

Mr. FOWLER. Are there not only 18,000 full blood Indians . in Oklahoma'

Mr. MILLER. My dear sir, that has nothing to do with the question. I said there were 35,000 who had not had their restrictions removed.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that any reason why they are not capable of self-control and self-government?

Mr. MILLER. They have not had their restrictions removed, because they are not capable of administering their own affairs properly. I do not care to be interrupted further, unless the gentleman has something more important than that to say.

I think very likely the Indian police have a less important place in some parts of Oklahoma than in almost any other Indian country in the United States, but permission should be given to the Secretary to send them there in case of need.

The State of Oklahoma is a prohibition State. Saloons are not to be found in the State of Oklahoma, as far as I know. The sale of liquor is restricted, and yet everybody knows that there is no place in the Union where liquor can not be had. Everybody knows that even in liquor States the Indian gets his liquor surreptitiously. Likewise the Indian in Oklahoma, as well as elsewhere in the United States, can get liquor surreptitiously, unless he is protected from himself. Indian police there, as elsewhere, afford the best protection the Indians have from the curse of liquor.

Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. MANN.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman whether in his judgment there is any relationship between Oklahoma being now a prohibition State and the increase of the appropriation to prevent the sale of liquor to Indians from $45,000, as it was before Oklahoma was a prohibition State, to $75,000, now that Oklahoma has been made a prohibition State? [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. I think some other parts of the United States have gone dry as well as Oklahoma.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to ask the gentleman-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to have 3 or 4 minutes out of Mr. DAVENPORT. So should I.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman make it 15 minutes? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If we can have a unanimous-consent agreement, I will agree to 15 minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I want about 3 minutes, and I should like to know the number of gentlemen who want to speak on this.

Mr. MANN. Just three; that is all.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, if I thought this amendment would be an injury to any citizen residing in the Five Civilized Tribes, I would not agree to it. If I thought we did not have ample police protection in the Five Civilized Tribes to take care of our outlaws as well as our sister State of Virginia is now taking care of hers, I would not favor this amendment. The Indian police originally were used for the purpose of policing the Indian reservation in the Indian nations. Gentlemen may disagree with me as to the competency of the Five Civilized Tribes in education or intelligence. Twenty-two years of actual experience with them has convinced me that the Indian is no more susceptible to getting drunk than is the average white man; that he takes care of his property as well as the average white man; and that he is as well behaved when sober or drunk as the average white man. [Laughter and applause.] As 100,000 Indian citizens in Oklahoma are to 1,500,000, I say to you to-day that you can not find a class of citizenship in the world that will compare better with the white man than the Indians in Oklahoma. [Applause.]

Something has been said to the effect that if you did not protect the Indian he would be deprived of his property and soon get rid of it. I want to call your attention to-day to the fact that there are many Indians in Oklahoma who can not sell their lands because the restrictions have not been removed. That is not because they are not competent to take care of their interests. I want to call attention to Stephen Peak, of Delaware County, Okla., who is a college graduate and was for three and a half years superintendent of education, and still he could not sell an acre of his land because the Government said he was not competent. A more upright citizen does not live in that country than Mr. Peak. It is not a fact that if the restrictions are removed the Indian would spend his money. An Indian will take care of his property as well as the average white man. When I say that, I class myself with the white man. I have lived among the Indians sufficiently long to know that it is a question of theory instead of practice when they say that the Indian can not take care of his property. I ask you if 40 per cent of the people in Washington to-day are not, so to speak, indigent or without very large holdings of property, and that 20 per cent owns the majority of the property. Would you put a ban on them and say that they ought not to be allowed to sell their property, and send an additional police officer over from Virginia because they could not take care of their property? So here, where 40 per cent do not own much property, is that because of a want of competency? Now, I am not in love with the advocacy of some people of the distribution of property or for equalizing property. You may keep the Indian tied hand and foot, but you will never teach him in that way to take care of his property. There is only one way you can teach a man, and that is to give him instructions and the right to use his property to his best interest. This amendment, if it should fail, would not keep a single Indian's property for him. If the amendment pravails, it will not cause a single Indian to part with his property. It ought to prevail, because we have an organized government, as has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon], fully competent to police the country and take care of the affairs, and there is not a people in the world that are more law-abiding and who will assist the officers of that country than the Indian citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in defense of the Indian police, not as he is to-day, but as he was in the past. The original duties of the Indian police in old Indian Territory was for the purpose, not of arresting, not of apprehending, but for killing outlaws. Whenever an outlaw got so dangerous and desperate that a deputy marshal was afraid to attack him, the Indian agent called together a detachment of Indian police, ordered them out, and the outlaw disappeared from the face of the earth.

It may seem to be rather a gruesome proposition in this enlightened day to defend or speak in praise of officers in the business of killing people, but as I look back upon our country as it existed then I am sure that those brave, fearless men, such as the Indian police were, men who did not hesitate to take their lives in their hands for the preservation of law and order, were the moving force in bringing order out of chaos.

Later on the Indian police was used for placing the Indian allottee in possession of his allotment. And he still did valuable service there. I think there were probably then from 15 to 20 Indian police in the service on the east side of our State.

Now they are used for carrying out the orders of the Interior Department. They are used occasionally for placing an allottee in possession of an allotment. Most of that work has been completed. Occasionally there is a case where an allottee who was a Snake, or who belonged to the Ketoowah Society, who would have nothing to do with an allotment. In these cases the Indian may not yet have been placed in possession of his allotment. The only machinery for placing him in possession would be the Indian police.

Now, I am very sure that we have too many Indian police in Oklahoma, and there is a good deal of truth in the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Jackson] and in the statement of my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT]. would favor dispensing with these agents entirely in Oklahoma at the present time were it not for the reason I have stated, were it not that it might slightly disorganize the Indian Service and leave them without men to do this specific work.

There is another small service the police render now, and that is they patrol the timberlands which belong to the tribe, and may render some service in looking after the segregated mineral lands which are soon to be sold. When this property is disposed of I shall be very glad to join the Members of the House in dispensing completely with the police service in Oklahoma.

I want to say, further, in reply to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] has said, that whenever this Congress or the Federal Government gets ready to turn over the affairs of our Indians to the State of Oklahoma for settlement, the State of Oklahoma will gladly accept that responsibility and discharge it in a spirit and manner that will be more beneficial to the Indians than the present system, in my opinion, because they are closer to the Indian and understand him better, and, I believe, are in a position to-day to better know what is to his best interest. But until that time comes some machinery must be provided for the working of the present plan. I agree to what gentlemen have said about this appropriation being too large and expensive and think our committee should see to it that the item is materially reduced next year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I was delighted with the argument presented by my colleague, Mr. Cannon, of Illinois. What was said by him goes to the essence of this amendment. It has always been the theory of those in authority, in order to perpetuate their control and supremacy in Government, to insist that their subjects are weak and helpless and incapable of selfcontrol and self-government. I think that this discussion has revealed one thing, if it has revealed anything, and that is this: That these Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma are as intelligent for the purpose of managing their own affairs, as intelligent to partake in the government of their own counties, in their State, and in this Nation as the ordinary citizen in this country. The wonderful confidence which the 1,500,000 white people of the State of Oklahoma have shown in the ability of these Indians, in their intelligence, and in their fidelity to trust by electing them to important offices in the various counties, in the legislature of the State, and in the Congress of the United States, shows that they are just as competent and just as able and capable of self-control and self-government as any other people in that State, and when I say that I do not reflect at all upon the intelligence of the people of the great State of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, these Five Civilized Tribes are noted for their industry and high state of civilization, for their obedience to organized government and their ability to They have become citizens of this counadminister the same. try by choice, and it should be the policy of this Government to place them upon an equality with all other citizens of this country, sharing the same rights and assuming the same respon-Mr. Chairman, it has been said that they number sibilities. less than 100,000, while the white population of Oklahoma number more than 1,500,000. Yet they are held in such high esteem that the white people have elected to send one of them as their Representative on the floor of this House and another to represent the State of Oklahoma in the United States Senate. These men are the peers of any in either branch of Congress, and I dare say none will deny this proposition.

Mr. Chairman, the necessity for policing these tribes by force and arms has passed long ago. To place a policeman with a star on his breast over them is an insult to them and a disgrace to the American people. I therefore trust, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. GRAHAM. If the amendment prevails, does the amount remain at $200,000, or will the amount be open for amendment by way of reduction?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Debate is closed upon all amendments and also, as I understand, on the paragraph. It can be offered without debate

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that if the amendment is adopted the paragraph will be open to amendment without debate. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. Fowler) there were-ayes 20, noes 24.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "two," in line 1, page 8, and insert the word "one."
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 8, line 1, by striking out the word "two" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "one."

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MURDOCK) there were-ayes 23, noes 30.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Floyd of Arkansas having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5137. An act for the relief of Alice V. Houghton;

S. 5246. An act to redeem a certain outstanding certificate of indebtedness issued by the late board of audit of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

S. 5817. An act granting to the county of Hill, in the State of Montana, the jail building and fixtures now upon the abandoned Fort Assimilation Military Reservation, in the State of Montana; and

S. 290. An act to authorize the appointment of dental surgeons in the United States Navy.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as 1010ws:

For pay of special agents at $2,000 per annum; for traveling and incidental expenses of such special agents, including sleeping-car fare and a per diem of $3 in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field or ordered to the seat of government; for transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Office of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for other necessary expenses of the Indian service for which no other appropriation is available, $85,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I merely do this to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this appropriates $85,000 for special agents for reservations to act in conjunction with and for the Secretary of the Interior. He has the power to designate that these agents go to any part of the United States and perform any task that he desires to have them do, and carry out his orders and his commands wheresoever he may designate them. I merely do that to the end that the committee may not overlook the fact that we are here appropriating $85,000 for special agents, whereas heretofore we have appropriated $200,000 for Indian police, both of which are field men to do field service in the service of the United States. I withdraw the pro forma amendment. We shall later on in the bill call your attention to the fact that we have eliminated the $100,000 item for agents that I do not think we need. I am in favor of a reasonable supply of officers, but there has been in the past too many and should be reduced.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Floyd of Arkansas the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. McCumber, Mr. Burnham, and Mr. Gore as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. For support, civilization, and education of Indians in Arizona and New Mexico, $330,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the proposition now? What has been the policy heretofore of appropriating for the support and civilization of Indians in Arizona and New Mexico on reservations? Do I understand this is for the support, civilization, and education of all Indians in the State, regardless of whether they are on reservations or not

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have an amendment which I think will cover that. I have an amendment of this kind: On page 8, line 16, after the word "support," strike out the comma and insert the word "and" and strike out the word "education.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 8, line 16, after the word "support," by striking out the omma and inserting the word "and." Page 8, line 16, after the word civilization," strike out the words "and education."

Mr. MANN. Is that to be expended on all Indians, regardless of whether they are on reservations or not? Heretofore we have only contributed for Indians on reservations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are many scattered bands of Indians in Arizona and New Mexico. The Indians there live by raising sheep, hogs, cattle, and so forth. There is very little farming in that country, and a great many of them have flocks of sheep, and they herd these flocks and graze them on the pub-They have the same right on the public domain of lie domain. the United States as other citizens, and they are often off their reservations and form little scattered communities where they herd their stock, and it is necessary to extend the provisions for schools and other purposes to these scattered bands of Indians.

Mr. MANN. What is the proposition now? The propriation is limited to support and civilization of Indians on reservations. What do they do now?

Here is the report. I will read it:

SUPPORT OF INDIANS IN ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO-AMOUNT ASKED FOR, $380,000.

$380,000.

There are over 20 superintendencies in these two Territories, with a total population of over 56,000 Indians to be supported from this fund. These Indians are engaged largely in stock raising, and to assist them in this industry about $40,000 has been expended for the purchase of stock, which has been issued to the Indians in order to place them on a self-supporting basis. Practically one-half of the amount appropriated this year was used for the payment of salaries, traveling expenses, fuel for the maintenance of the plants, forage for the stock, and other items necessary to properly administer the affairs of these Indians. The increase in the estimate is for the purpose of providing additional educational facilities for these Indians as a part of their civilization.

Mr. MANN. I know; but what excuse do they give for proposing now to include all the Indians instead of Indians on the reservations?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Because many of the Navajos and other tribes are off their reservations.

Mr. MANN. Well, what does the department.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I can give the gentleman the information. The statement was made that it was changed for this reason: That there are a number of Indians of Arizona and New Mexico who are not on the Indian reservations, and that the constraints are the controlled to the constraints. that the comptroller may limit us in the object of this appropriation if those words are not stricken out.

Mr. MANN. Are they using the present appropriation for that purpose, not yet having been limited by the comptroller? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I presume they are. It was not an important change

Mr. MANN. It is very important if it proposes to include a large number of Indians who are not now receiving any support. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We did not increase the amount, but simply provided for the support of the Indians in those Territories.

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not know anything about the conditions in New Mexico, but I know there are over 5,000 Papago Indians in southern Arizona who are not in Indian reservations. The public lands where they have been accustomed to live have having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from been withdrawn from entry and been given to them, and some money has heretofore been expended, and it is to give them money that this change has been made. They are very deserving Indians

Mr. JACKSON. Did I understand the gentleman's contention, the chairman of the committee, to strike out the word education "?

Mr. MANN. While I am not satisfied at all with the effort that has been made to extend the scope of education, in the absence of more special language I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, while I have the floor I would like to say to the chairman that I was not aware that an amendment had been proposed.

Mr. MANN. He agreed to propose it.

Mr. JACKSON. Has it already been passed on by the committee?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; and suggested by the hearing. Mr. MURDOCK. Has the amendment been offered? Mr. FERRIS. This has been read for information.

Mr. MURDOCK. But has not been offered.

Mr. JACKSON. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, if this appropriation of $330,000 is made, the word "education" ought by all means to stay in the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will yield right there Mr. JACKSON. Let me complete my statement, and then the gentleman can more intelligently inquire, if he wishes to do so. I have the information from the superintendent, and proof from other sources, that education is needed very badly among the Navajo Indians in Arizona. Perhaps one of the greatest necessities that has not been relieved by this associa-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state that the Navajo Indians have a large reservation.

Mr. JACKSON. This money can be used upon either reservation. If I recollect it, there are 7,500 of these so-called "roaming" Indians who are not in schools. The Navajos, I think, without exaggeration are among the best Indians the country has ever had. They have always been civilized. They were in a high state of civilization when the country was discovered.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will yield at that point, I will state the reason why the Navajo children are not in school.

Mr. JACKSON. Yes. I think I know what the gentleman will say, but I will yield.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The reason given by the department is-and I have been on the reservation and personally know—that these Indians are scattered all over their reserva-tion and adjacent public domain. They live by the herding of their sheep and other stock on the range. They may be here to-day and there to-morrow, and it is impossible to locate them long enough to acquire homes so as to educate their children unless we enact a compulsory education law. There is a bill now pending before our committee to that effect, and I hope it will become a law. It will force these children to go to school.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas
[Mr. Stephens] has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, what is pending now? The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I offer it now.

Mr. MURDOCK. The amendment, I will say, has not been offered, except to be read for information.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I now ask that the amendment be

The Clerk read as follows:

Page S, line 16, after the word "support," strike out the word "common" and insert the word "and."

Page S, line 16, after the word "civilization," strike out the words "and education."

Mr. JACKSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, although I am a member of the committee, I wish to state that I am opposed to the amendment

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That was proposed by the department.

Mr. JACKSON. I do not know as that would make any difference. I understand there are some 7,500 of them that are not in school. But the supervisors of these schools tell me that these Indians are perfectly willing to attend school; that the only reason they have not been in schools is that they have not school facilities. The Navajo people are an intelligent people. They have never objected to their children attending the schools. It is true they can not attend their schools, because there are none within their reach. The only way they can be schooled is by taking and putting them into boarding schools. Now, if I understand, it is for the purpose of using $50,000 of this money for these extra schools that the appropriation was asked of this sum mentioned on page 65.

Mr. MANN. Sixty-five thousand dollars was not granted. They asked for $350,000, and the committee granted only $330,000.

Mr. JACKSON. Well, the argument is practically the same. They asked for $380,000 and received $330,000. That is correct. But if there is any opportunity to use any of this sum to further the school facilities among these Navajo people it ought to be done. I can not see any good in cutting out the word "education."

Mr. CARTER, I do not know what the reason is for cutting out the word "education," except it has not been carried in bills heretofore. That amount has been in the past appropriated "for support and civilization" and not "for support, civilization, and education." How the word "education" got in I do not know, and what the purpose of the department is in cutting it out I can not say.

Mr. JACKSON. Did it not get in by Mr. Meritt asking it for educational purposes?

Mr. CARTER. It was in last year.

Mr. CARTER. It was in last year. Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to give an explanation of this item.

Mr. MANN. Just one moment, Mr. Chairman. Is it the intention to cut the sum from $330,000 down if the word "education" is stricken out?

Mr. FERRIS. I will reply to that particular phase. This is the situation, and if I make a misstatement in any respect I will ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] to refresh my memory and set me right; The Indian Office had asked for $50,000 more than they were awarded by the committee. They drew the language of the section on the theory that they were going to get the extra $50,000 and that the $50,000 was going to be used for the schools, and it necessitated the words "and education." We disallowed that $50,000 and $50,000 was going to be used for the schools, and it necessated the words "and education." We disallowed that $50,000 and decided that they should receive, all told, for schools, only $1.450,000. That being true, the striking out and refusing to give them the $50,000 asked for brought it to the basis where they would need all the $330,000 to maintain the 20 superintendencies or agencies that exist out there. The prospect of receiving the $50,000 that they asked for, which we did not allow them, was the reason for inserting the words "and educa-' and when it was not allowed the words ought to have gone tion. out. That would have brought the item back to what it ought to be without them, so that anybody looking for appropria-tions for education in the bill would find them all in one item, $1,450,000.

I think the House will recognize the fact that it is wrong in principle and in policy and in everything else to have a little item for education here and a little item there for education, scattered all through the bill, thereby making it difficult to estimate the expenses for that object.

Mr. MANN. That is why I made the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit, I think he will recall that when the limitation was put upon the item of $1,450,000 for support of schools, the commissioner was asked the question whether, with that limitation, he could not get along with less money, that limitation being that Indians of less than one-fourth Indian blood should not be permitted to be educated in the Indian schools, and the commissioner stated that they expected to educate more children and particularly We considered therefore that we would strike of the Navajos. out the $50,000 that they desired to be put at that place in the bill and leave the appropriation as it was in the last year's bill; but the word "education" got in there on the suppositon that we would allow the other.

Mr. MANN. You increased the educational appropriation by $30,000.

Mr. FERRIS. That was for another purpose.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; that was for another purnose

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma rose.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire].

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I would like to understand this a little more fully. The fact that you omitted the word "education" does not mean that the children of those tribes shall not have educational facilities?

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Because there is not an Indian child in the United States that has not educational facilities, for the reason that if he does not have them at home there are the nonreservation schools that he may enter?

Mr. FERRIS. That is quite true.

But are we not getting into Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. trouble here? There is a provision to the effect that children of less than one-fourth Indian blood can not enter certain schools.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true. The committee thought it wise to so provide.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Now, there are certainly some children here of less than one-fourth Indian blood. Where are they going to have school advantages?

Mr. FERRIS. In reply to that I will say that the gentleman will recall that we had that matter up yesterday. That amendment has a string to it. Before any Indian child of less than one-fourth Indian blood is excluded from any school his parents must first be citizens of the United States. In other words, the Indian restrictions must have been removed and they must have been declared, either by the department or the Congress, to be full citizens. And a second string is tied to that amendment, and that is that there must be educational facilities open to the child and convenient to him, so that the child can be sent to school. In this event there is no opportunity to exclude any child from schooling, for if he does not attend one he may the other.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I remember that. The gentleman is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance, including purchase of electricity for irrigation wells already completed, and the completion of the lateral irrigating ditches thereunder, $15,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to locate and construct a dam and necessary works in connection therewith at or in the vicinity of the location known as the San Carlos Reservoir site on the Glia River, in Arizona, for the purpose of irrigating Pima and other Indian lands, together with the lands of the Glia River Valley; and in carrying out said plan to locate and construct irrigation works for the storage, diversion, and development of waters, including criesian wells, and for the purpose of impounding water and providing for the Irrigation of said lands; and the authority granted by the act approved June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. L. p. 388), entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," so far as applicable and not inconsistent herewith, is hereby extended and made to apply to the provisions of this act: Provided, That in carrying out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to make suitable prevision for the protection of the Pima and other tribes of Indians affected thereby, or who may be benefited thereunder, and to provide that a supply of water shall be first retained out of the impounded waters sufficient to properly irrigate an allotment of 10 acres of land for each member of the said Pima Indian Tribe: Provided further, That if the Secretary of the Interior concludes that the reports of reputable engineers have not sufficiently determined the suitability, for foundation purposes, of the rock formation of the sites proposed for construction of the reservoir and irrigation works, he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to request the President to direct the

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph that was read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I admit that the point of order is well taken, and I offer a substitute for the part that is proposed to be stricken out-an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. Has the point of order been sustained? The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I offer in lieu of that paragraph the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment to the Indian appropriation bill: Commencing with line 12, page 9, strike out all down through and including the word "Interior," and in line 17—

Mr. MANN. The amendment, Mr. Chairman, should be simply to insert it as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commencing with line 12, page 9, strike out all down to and including the word "Interior," in line 17, page 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For maintenance, including purchase of electricity for irrigation wells already completed, and the completion of the lateral irrigating ditches thereunder in connection with the irrigation of the lands of the Pima Indians in the vicinity of Sacaton, in the Gila River Indian Reservation, $15,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to convene a board of not less than three engineers of the Army of wide reputation and large experience to make the necessary examinations, borings, and surveys for the purpose of determining the reasonability and practicability of constructing a dam and reservoir at or in the vicinity of the Box Canyon on the San Carlos Indian Reservation, known as the site of the proposed San Carlos Reservoir on the Gila River, Ariz., and the necessary irrigation works in connection therewith to provide for the irrigation of Indian, private, and public lands in the Gila River Valley. Said board of engineers to submit to Congress the results of their examinations and surveys, together with an estimate of cost, with their recommendations thereon, at the earliest practicable date. The sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of conducting said investigation."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the amendment, and I should like to make this suggestion to the gentleman in charge of the bill: This is a matter which, if entered upon, will involve a very large expenditure of money, and I hope that the gentleman will ask unanimous consent to pass over this amendment, so that we may have the opportunity of examining it. I think outside of the committee probably no one has seen it until it is now offered on the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. At the request of the gentleman, will ask that this be passed.

Mr. FOSTER. With the understanding that the point of order is reserved.

Mr. MANN. The point of order is reserved. Mr. HAMMOND. What is the request?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To have it passed over and returned to later.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to ask the gentleman who offered the amendment how it differs from the bill?

Mr. MANN. It is entirely different. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that this item in the bill provided for locating and building a dam and reservoir at a place on the Gila River known as the San Carlos dam site for the purpose of furnishing water to these Indians out of the Gila River; but that was seriously objected to by the committee, and we finally agreed, in lieu of that, to ask for a survey for the purpose of ascertaining whether it was a feasible project before proceeding to make a direct appropriation.

Each of these amendments involves the question of abandoning the well system that we have heretofore entered upon, but will continue to operate the wells now completed. We have not contemplated boring any more wells for irrigating these Indian We desire to use the natural flow of the Gila River by building the San Carlos dam, so that they will have river water for irrigation purposes instead of well water, it having been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the committee that if well water is used a few years on their lands that it will render the land valueless for raising crops. If that is true, the money that we are expending on this well system will be entirely lost.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am somewhat familiar with the conditions, but I am trying to get at the condition in which we are House bill 18244 has been incorporated into the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That was offered, but was stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. HAMMOND. That has been stricken out on a point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes. Now, we propose to substitute for that the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk, which has been read, and that amendment is to be postponed and passed over until some future time.

Mr. HAMMOND. It will be considered before this bill passes? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; before the consideration of the bill is finished.

Mr. MANN. Unanimous consent has been asked to pass it. Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. This amendment provides an appropriation of $10,000 to make an investigation of the San Carlos project, to see whether or not it is feasible.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.
Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman know that thousands and thousands of dollars have already been spent by the Government to determine whether or not that project is feasible, and that there are numbers of reports which have been made upon it by the engineers?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am aware of that. That happened several years ago; but recently the department seems to have changed that opinion, and the department is now trying to sustain the well system of irrigation. We believe the department to be wrong in that. We believe we should return to the system of irrigating these lands from the river, and that is the object of this amendment.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman know, further, that the Casa Grande Water Users' Association, down there, have been trying to get the Reclamation Service and the Interior Department to let them build the dam there and take care of the lands of the Indians, who have a prior right to this water? They want to enter into a contract to build this dam and finance it themselves.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am fully aware of that, and at the proper time I shall oppose that proposition, because I think the Government should build this dam, and that the water should be distributed between the white settlers owning land there, requiring them to pay whatever may be assessed against them under the reclamation act, and that the Indians should have water furnished to them without payment for it, because the lands are theirs. That should be done under just rules and regulations. There is only one river there and only one system proposed. Let me state that this is the object which we have in view. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is, I understand, in strict accord with this amendment. He was not here at the time this matter was considered, but he has looked it up very closely, and I understand that this amendment meets with his approval.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the proposed amendment be printed? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It will be printed in the RECORD.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent that the amendment which he has offered be passed for future consideration. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

For the development of a water supply for domestic and stock purposes and for irrigation for nomadic Papago Indians in Pima County, Ariz., to be immediately available, $5,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend, after line 21, page 11, by adding the following paragraph:

"For beginning the construction of the Ganado irrigation project on the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona, in accordance with the plans submitted by the chief engineer of the Indian service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, in conformity with section 1 of the act approved April 4, 1910: Pravided, That the total cost of the project shall not exceed $60,100, $35,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have reserved a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to quote from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his justification for this item. He says:

This is a large reservation, containing approximately 12,000,000 acres of land, of which very little is susceptible of irrigation. The Indians are excellent workers and will make good use of all the water furnished for the raising of hay and grain for their flocks during the winter season. They depend largely on the sheep industry for their subsistence, with some farming in the river bottoms, and under conditions which would be discouraging to a white man. Very little assistance has been given these Indians by the Government, and it is believed the expenditure of funds necessary to construct this project will show good returns for the money expended and will protect the water rights for these Indians.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this project is not a new one, and it has been very carefully investigated by the department. In March, 1909, H. F. Robertson, superintendent of irrigation, made a preliminary report on this project, and that report was sent to the Indian Office. By direction of the chief engineer, W. H. Code, a further investigation was ordered. In 1910 this investigation was made, the report, which contained an estimate of the cost, being made October 5 of that year by Mr. Robertson. When this report was referred to the consulting engineer, Mr. Robertson was again respected to the consulting engineer. son was again requested to go back to the reservation and make a further investigation regarding the amount of silt in the water, and also in regard to the stream flow. In order to obtain this data regarding the silt and water supply, the report was delayed until February 14 of this year, and therefore the amount needed for this project could not be submitted in the regular estimates by the department. All of this information is now available, and plats and surveys are all prepared.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly. Mr. FOSTER. The report says that very little of the 12,-000,000 acres is susceptible of irrigation. Can the gentleman tell us about how much is susceptible to irrigation?

Mr. HAYDEN. A very small part of the 12,000,000 acres. is estimated that the cost of this project will amount to $60,100, and that when the land on the river bottom below the reservoir is irrigated it will cover 1,775 acres. There are now living on this land over 400 Indians, and if they are given an allotment of 5 acres each it would supply 355 of them with permanent homes. The chief advantage of this project is that it is unlike the Indian irrigation work in many other places in the United States, where an irrigation project is started and then they try to move the Indians away from their old homes onto new lands. Here the water is brought to the land that the Indians are already cultivating, which is a great benefit.

Mr. FOSTER. This will give each Indian about 2½ acres of land.

Mr. HAYDEN. There are 1,775 acres. You divide that up in 5-acre allotments and you can supply 355 Indians.
Mr. FOSTER. I misunderstood the gentleman as to the number

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says 400 Indians. He means men, women, and children.
Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly; allotments are made in that way.

Mr. MANN. But you do not make allotments of irrigated land to bables.

Mr. FOSTER. Would there be 100 heads of families?

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that there are about 80.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Arizona be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, there are now living in the vicinity of this proposed reservoir over a thousand Indians, and there will be no difficulty at all about getting them to go on the land. The difficulty is to get the water on the land that they now have. Now, in regard to the measurement of the flow of this stream, the water flows in the wintertime, during the rainy season, and the hydrographic data shows that there is enough flood water to fill this reservoir 50 times. The trouble is that the water does not come in the right time of the year when the Indian needs it, and this reservoir is to conserve that water.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the source of this water supply? Mr. HAYDEN. It is the Rio Pueblo Colorado, a stream that rises in the mountains on the Navajo Reservation.

Mr. MONDELL. Is this an entirely new project? Mr. HAYDEN. Entirely new.

Mr. MONDELL. It contemplates the erection of a dam and the construction of ditches.

Mr. HAYDEN. The land to be irrigated lies right below the reservoir, so that there will be no need of constructing very long ditches.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the matter been carefully investigated? Mr. HAYDEN. I stated a moment ago that the first preliminary investigation was made in 1909, and the matter was again investigated in 1910 and referred to the consulting engineer of, the department. The Assistant Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have both been upon the ground and strongly recommend this project. Unfortunately the data was not assembled in time to be available for the use of the Indian Bureau this year when the estimates were submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MONDELL. Is this stream a branch of the Gila River?
Mr. HAYDEN. Oh, no; it is in the extreme northeast corner of Arizona. The waters from this stream flow into the Little Colorado and from there into the Colorado.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. What was the provision in the Indian appropriation act of 1910 in reference to this matter?

Mr. HAYDEN. I presume that was—
Mr. MANN. I do not want what the gentleman presumes; I have the same paper in my hand that the gentleman has in his.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I think I can give the gentleman that information. The act of last year says "hereafter no irrigation project shall be commenced costing more than $25,000 until a survey and estimate of cost has been submitted."

That, I understand, is what this document refers to. The department has made a survey and submitted the estimate of cost.

Mr. MANN. But there was no specific item relating to this project in the bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not at all; it had no reference to it.

Mr. HAYDEN. The law provides that you can not enter into any new construction or new projects that will cost more than $25,000

Mr. MANN. I know what the general law is on the subject. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has to be approved by Con-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I accept the amendment for the reason that there is a lump-sum appropriation here for irrigation purposes, and, as has been stated by the gentleman from South Dakota, we can not enter upon any new projects for irrigation costing over $25,000. As this is to cost $60,100, it is necessary that Congress should authorize this work.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona,

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

FLORIDA

SEC. 4. The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $10.000 "for relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for purposes of their civilization," made in the Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1911, shall remain available until expended.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order—I will reserve the point of order. Will not the gentleman be willing to change that so as to merely reappropriate the money instead of making a permanent appropriation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. How much has been expended; does anybody know?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have a statement here in regard to that.

SUPPORT OF SEMINOLES IN FLORIDA.

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, amount appropriated___ $10,000.00

Fiscal year ended June 30, 1911:
Amount appropriated
Amount expended 15, 000. 00 2, 798. 78 12, 201, 22 Unexpended balance ___

Analysis of expenditures: Employees_____

With the appropriations heretofore made for support of the Seminole Indians in Florida a special agent was appointed and spent some nine months in the field investigating local conditions and ascertaining particulars regarding these Indians, with a view of establishing schools and other educational facilities for their benefit. A comparatively accurate census was prepared and considerable land set aside by Executive order for their benefit in addition to lands heretofore purchased under special appropriations by Congress between the years 1895 and Future conditions among these Indians may require prompt steps for their support and relief, which can best be met by having funds at hand to meet such emergencies as may arise. The unexpended balance of the appropriation heretofore made is deemed sufficient for this purpose, provided it is made available until expended, without an additional appropriation being necessary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is not a large amount, but it is quite a principle. The Indian Office ought to know better than to ask Congress to appropriate money for support and make it available indefinitely regardless of when it shall be used. These appropriations ought to be made from year to year, so that somebody knows something about whether the money is expended and how expended, and we ordinarily get that in-formation through the committee that has charge of the appropriation. The Indian Office has no business to make such a request.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman offer an amendment? I will accept it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman I withdraw the point of order and offer an amendment, and that is, to strike out in lines 22 and 23 the words "shall remain available until expended" and insert in lieu thereof "is hereby reappropriated and made available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk rend as follows:

Page 12, lines 22 and 23, strike out the words "shall remain available until expended" and insert in lieu thereof the words "is hereby reappropriated and made available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FERRIS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MURDOCK. The last word of what?

Mr. FERRIS. Of this section, or the first word.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is nothing pending.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; the paragraph is still pending.
Mr. MURDOCK. But we have passed the paragraph.
Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no; I merely made the motion to ask the gentleman from Illinois—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.
Mr. FERRIS (continuing). If he did not think there might be some reason for thinking they are not going to spend this This amount has been appropriated year after year, and they have not been taking any affirmative steps for doing anything for the Seminole Indians. The facts are these Indians are just as wild as rabbits in the Everglades of Florida. I do not care to criticize, but I understand the Indian Office has done nothing as yet-they sent a man who rode around there-and it seems to me if they are not going to expend this money, the question is whether or not there ought to be a direction for the expending of the money or the withdrawal of the appropriation, or something done. That thought was brought about by the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois of reappropriating every year a sum of money to do a specific thing and not have anything done. It seems to me we ought to bring about some action.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the gentleman think that if these Indians are as wild as he says they are—as wild as rabbitsit is pretty hard to spend the money on them? Maybe they are doing the best they can.

Mr. FERRIS. Perhaps that is true. The gentleman may have suggested the truth; and if it is impossible to lasso or catch them or do anything, why keep on appropriating every year this amount of money?

Mr. MANN. We do not keep on appropriating this amount of money. There never has been but one appropriation for this purpose. It went into a bill through, I think, an erroneous ruling of the then Chairman upon a point of order which I made, and I said then that the money could not be expended properly; that there was no way of expending the money and no need of appropriating it; but some gentlemen had gotten interested in the Seminole Indians in Florida through literature, or something of that sort, and insisted upon the appropriation. Now, I suppose they have expended two or three thousand dollars hiring somebody to run around, and I do not suppose the Indians have had any benefit.

Mr. FERRIS. They do not contend that they have. Mr. MANN. They never will have any benefit from it. do not need any money from the Treasury of the United States. They have been taking care of themselves since Florida came into our country, and they are still doing so since the other Seminoles were expelled from Florida. It is not necessary for us to take care of these Indians, as they are amply able to do it. I did not endeavor to strike out the appropriation because I did not think it would do any good, and I do not believe in the practice of placing in the hands of a department a sum to be expended when they please, if they please, with no knowledge on the part of Congress of what they are doing.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he thinks any hardship would work to the Indians if we struck out this appropriation?

Mr. MANN. They would never know it. [Laughter.] Mr. MURDOCK. I would like an answer from the chairman Mr. MURDOCK. I would like an answ of the committee, if he will kindly give it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say in defense of this proposition, I think this was appropriated for two years ago, and if I am not mistaken the item was put in the bill in another body.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it was put in the bill here in this House over a point of order which I made.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I did not recall that for a certainty, but I do recall that the Senators from the State of Florida interested themselves sufficiently to bring it to the attention of Congress and represented that the condition of the Seminole Indians was very deplorable; that it would be but a short time, in their opinion, when they could no longer support themselves, and it was the judgment of the committee at that time that we ought to make a small appropriation as an emergency measure for their care and support, and also for the purpose of obtaining information and ascertaining their real condition, and also learning their number. My understanding is that the Government has set aside some land for these particular Indians; that there has been some progress made toward doing something permanent looking to their support and welfare, and while, as has been stated, possibly there may not be very much done, if we do not continue this appropriation-only a very modest amount—as we have heretofore been appropriating, and in view of the representations made by the commissioner, as will appear in the hearings, it seems to me that this provision, limited as it is, simply continuing the appropriation for the next fiscal year, is wise, and that there is no likelihood of its being expended if there is no necessity for it. So I hope it will not be stricken out.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not fail.

Mr. MURDOCK. I withdrew the amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of 1 clerk, at $1,200, and 1 lease clerk, at $1,000 per annum, an addition to employees otherwise provided for at the Nez Perce Agency; in all, $2,200.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to this paragraph of the bill. Pending the discussion, I would like to have the chairman of the committee explain the necessity for this additional expense for clerks.

Mr. FERRIS. I have not the statement before me. These are the objections they have had with reference to this item. As we read through the bill, we will come to two or three more items of this kind which will seem to be new matter and do not appear in the former law. However, we have taken that from a general appropriation and distributed it among the States, where it was properly placed, and we thought it would be clearly a better method of legislation. Mr. FOWLER. That does not answer my inquiry. I want to know the necessity for these additional clerks and the duties performed by them.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not understand that it is an additional clerk at all. We have had this same clerk all the time, only we have not been carrying him under the proper designation. we have been legislating for these States, we have taken this one from a lump sum, and we thought each item ought to say on its face what it was, and that each State ought to be charged with the force that was employed in it.

Mr. FOWLER. Under what item of this bill is that lump sum provided for?

Mr. FERRIS. The item is eliminated from the bill entirely.

It appeared in the former law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This bill carries an item for contingencies and general incidental expenses, and the Secretary of the Interior found that from that fund they were employing annual employees at different agencies of the United States, and the commissioner stated that the Secretary took the position that these places that were filled by clerks annually employed ought to be specifically appropriated for. Consequently, we put those clerks in the bill in the proper places, dividing them among the States, and took the total from the appropriation that we otherwise would have made, so it does not add anything to the bill and is really better legislation.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like the gentleman to be more specific about the lump sum.

Mr. MANN. There was last year an item carried in the current law for contingencies in the Indian service, amounting to $\frac{\text{N115,000}}{\text{cond}}$, which provided for the payment of employees not otherwise provided. It is true in this bill, and I think this is the item under which these clerks have been heretofore carried. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. Fowler] has expired.

Mr. MANN Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The amount appropriated was $115,000, and I think in this bill it was cut to $89,000.

Mr. MANN. It is out entirely.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My recollection is, if it is out, it ought to be in the bill, and my recollection is that it is in the bill. We reduced it a few hundred dollars. I do not know just the amount. We reduced it by the further amount that these positions aggregate.

Mr. FERRIS and Mr. MANN rose.

FOWLER. I yield to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I thank the gentleman, but I have said what I wished to say

Mr. FERRIS. On page 4 of last year's Indian bill it provides in certain terms:

For contingencies of the Indian service; for traveling and incidental expenses of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and other officers and employees in the Indian service, including clerks detailed from the Bureau of Indian Affairs for special service in the field; for traveling and incidental expenses of special agents, at $3 per day when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses, including expenses of going to and from the seat of government and while remaining there under orders; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for pay of special agents, at $2,000 per annum each, $115,000.

A provision of that kind would separate the different amounts required at the different agencies.

Mr. MURDOCK. There is a remnant of that in this bill. Will the gentleman point it out in this bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. FOWLER. I do not yield the floor.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Just for a suggestion. My attention is called to the fact and I am not able to find the provision in the bill, but it was so reported and should be in the The item was $115,000, and we appropriated, as I recall, about $89,000 or $90,000, and it puts these few positions, which amounted to something like $14,000 or $15,000, in separate places in the bill; but we reduced the estimate by considerable, but I do not know what has become of the item for contingencies of the Indian service.

We did not intend to eliminate anything but Mr. FERRIS.

the $20,000 item.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. More than the twenty

Mr. FERRIS. They were asking twenty, and we distributed over the States something like—$12,690, I think, is the exact amount. It is better administration. It shows what was actually being done. It creates no new offices. It saves $8,000. It must therefore be a wholesome provision that will appeal to the good judgment of the committee and the Congress.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield to me?
Mr. FOWLER. Yes.
Mr. MILLER. It is contained on page 8 of the bill, and is the item as to which the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] made some remarks. The amount is $85,000. Is that not the item, the paragraph, that was also covered?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the item. It has been changed.

Mr. MILLER. It has been reduced from $115,000 to $85,000.
Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the extension of my time for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not yet understand, and no one has yet made it clear, where this lump sum, out of which this appropriation is taken-to 14.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Page 8 of the bill, lines 5

Mr. FOWLER. I see; but that does not satisfy me. It goes on with special agents at $2,000 each-

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes. Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman for his own informa-tion read lines 12, 13, and 14, on page 8? That answers his

Mr. FOWLER. Well, I have already read those lines. Mr. MURDOCK. It says, "for pay of employees not otherwise provided for, and for other necessary expenses of the Indian service for which no other appropriation is available, $85,000." That is broad enough to cover anything.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I desire further to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs how the Nez Perces Agency has been cared for in the past, which is now provided for by these two clerks?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Out of a larger appropriation in the lump sum.

Mr. FOWLER. Are there not other people who look after the clerical work that is intended to be looked after by these additional clerks?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Here is the language heretofore carried in the bill: "For pay of special agents at $2,000 per annum," etc., $150,000. That is on page 4 of the Public Document No. 454.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not satisfied with the explanation. I make the point of order.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is not subject to a point of order. Mr. FOWLER. I make the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order if he understands it.

Mr. FOWLER. If I understand it I will not. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The present law provides The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to be recognized in my own time. Or, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] be extended five minutes.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. The CHAIRMAN. Burke] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] be extended five minutes. Is there

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, if the gentleman will

Mr. FOWLER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota

[Mr. BURKE]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The present law provides: "For the contingent expenses of the Indian service, for salary and expenses of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and other employees of the Indian service," and so forth, and "for pay of other employees not otherwise provided for, and for pay of special agents at $2,000 per annum, $115,000." Now, out of that Now, out of that $115,000 there were employed at these agencies two clerks or employees for which we specifically appropriate now at the salaries stated in this item-the same salaries that are now being paid. The Secretary of the Interior suggested, so the commissioner informed us, that he thought it would be better administration and better legislation if such positions were specifically appropriated for, and the committee thought the suggestion a good one. Consequently we have put such employees in the bill at different places where they belong, dividing them up among the several States, and have deducted the amount of the aggregate of these several places from the $115,000, "and then some," and have made the item only $85,000, and have saved, as I remember, $8,000 by the transaction.
Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What other employees are there at these offices, and how are they paid?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is probably a superintendent

Mr. MANN. What is the superintendency paid out of?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Out of an appropriation that is provided.

Mr. MANN. But what is the theory of maintaining one office and paying one official out of one appropriation and his clerk out of another

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As to that I am unable to answer the gentleman. I understand that at these agencies they have certain employees that are carried in addition to what are known as the regular employees, and they have hereto-fore paid these particular persons from the contingent fund.

Mr. FERRIS. If I may suggest to the gentleman, in some cases where the Indians have money we draw from their funds, which makes the method of payment different in different agencies.

Mr. FOWLER. Have the duties performed by these clerks been performed by any other persons in the past?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that these employees have been employed right along, and have been paid these salaries that are stated here out of the lump-sum appropriation of $115,000. Now we simply provide that they shall be paid in salaries specifically appropriated for at the agencies where they are employed.

Mr. FOWLER. Who fixed the salaries heretofore?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The department.

Mr. FOWLER. Now you intend to create offices for places heretofore performed by employees.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; we do not create them.

Mr. FOWLER. You propose to create them and fix their salaries

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; we do not create anything. If the gentleman thinks it would be better administration to strike these items out and give them a lump sum, and give the department carte blanche to do as it desires, then he will insist upon his point of order. But it seems to me if the gentleman understood what the purpose of this change is, he would not press his point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not want the gentleman from South Dakota to presume too much on my ignorance, for I have been studying this subject very carefully for some time. I think I know full well the object of this legislation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think the fact will appear o the gentleman that it is better legislation as it is carried in the bill than it would be to present a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. MILLER. It seems to me that this is a start in the right direction, and a start that ought to have been made a long time ago, and one that, it seems to me, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] would naturally cooperate in. The Indian Department has been paying a large number of its employees out of a lump-sum appropriation intended for general purposes, and it is sometimes very difficult to find out just what rela-

Mr. FOWLER. Do they not still continue to do that out of the lump sum of $85,000?

Mr. MILLER. No.
Mr. FOWLER. It says "other employees."
Mr. MILLER. No; these employees would not or should not be paid out of that, and would not be paid out of that if they remained in here. If we strike this out we will have to go back and increase that former paragraph of $85,000 to $120,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Why do you not segregate the entire work of the different departments and make a specific appropriation for each one of them?

Mr. MILLER. That is just what I was talking about. job is too big to tackle all at once, but this is a start. No will say to the gentleman that there are certain general superintendents of agencies who are now being paid out of the educational fund. I do not think that is right. I do not think any general superintendent of an agency in the United States in the Indian service ought to be paid out of the educational fund. I think he ought to be paid specifically, the same as we are providing for these two clerks at this place.

Mr. FOWLER. Why did you not do that with all of the rest of the force and service provided for in the $S5,000?

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman asks a pertinent question, and I can only answer it by saying that the job is too big to tackle all at once, but that this is a start in the right direction.

Mr. FOWLER. If you had done that and segregated them there might have been less objection to the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. MILLER. It is absolutely impossible to make a general separation, covering all of the employees at one time.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not a fact that under the lump sum appropriation the person in control could put his force here and there, wherever there was work to be done; but in the segregation as you undertake to make it in the Nez Perce Agency, if there is no work to be done there by these two clerks they are idle, are they not?

Mr. MILLER. There is work for them to do or they would not be there

Mr. FOWLER. I have seen nothing to show that there has been a sufficient amount of work there at this agency to employ these two clerks.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, well, the assumption of the gentleman certainly is not well founded. They would not have been employed originally if there had not been work for them to do; and if the gentleman is familiar with the work at that agency he must know that there is work there for each of these clerks to perform.

Mr. FOWLER. How big is that agency?
Mr. MILLER. It is big enough to require more than these two.

Mr. FOWLER. Then why did you not provide for more?

Mr. MILLER. I have answered the gentleman's question. can not answer it more specifically.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows.

Sec. 6. For pay of one financial clerk, at $600, and one physician, at $480 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the Sac and Fox Agency, Iowa; in all, $1,080.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to that paragraph of the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, that is founded on the same facts as the last one ruled upon by the Chairman.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to be captious about any of these appropriations, but I do say that under the former rulings of the Chairmen of this committee, not only is this item subject to a point of order, but the last item against which a point of order was made was also subject to it.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the creation of new offices.

Mr. FOWLER. It is not only the creation of a new office, but it is a diversion of the money which has been appropriated

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, if my colleague will permit, I think it is the duty of the gentleman in charge of the bill to show any authorization of law for these officers, and where they have ever been created by law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That has been stated several

Mr. FOWLER. I do not desire to yield at this time. The second section of Rule XXI, found on page 400 of the Manual, provides that-

Manual, provides that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

On page 403 of the Manual:

On page 403 of the Manual:

An appropriation for a public work in excess of a fixed limit of cost or for extending a service beyond the limits assigned by an executive officer exercising a lawful discretion or by actual law or for purposes prohibited by law is out of order. * * In the administration of the rule it is the practice that those upholding an item of appropriation should have the burden of showing the law authorizing it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of decisions upon this question.

On page 404 there is a ruling by a former Chairman which held that the purchase of a separate and detached lot of land is not admitted. That decision is quoted at length in volume 4, paragraph 3776, of Hinds' Precedents:

Also a proposition to change a rule of the House is subject to a point of order. The object to be appropriated for may be described without violating the rule. Propositions to establish affirmative directions for executive officers, or to take away an authority or discretion conferred by law, are subject to the point of order. Limits of cost for public works may not be made or changed or contracts authorized.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of decisions holding that where a certain agency has been created for the use and administration of a certain fund, if the name of the agency is changed or if the appropriation be fixed from an indefinite to a definite sum of money, it is a new appropriation or new legislation and is subject to a point of order.

Mr. Hinds, in his Precedents, shows examples of former rulings in the House sustaining points of order of that character.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I have a precedent here in point. I cite Hinds' Precedents, page 502, volume 4, which is not just the point I had in mind, but it bears upon that same question:

the point I had in mind, but it bears upon that same question:

The Chair has found two precedents which may be claimed to sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois. The first is a ruling made by Mr. Hopkins, of Illinois, in the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, to be found on page 1192 of the Record for that session. In that case an amendment providing for the establishment of a manual-training school had been offered and a point of order was made against it. It appeared that the general object of educating the Indians was carried on at the place where this training school was intended to be located, but that no education of the class or kind described in the amendment had yet been undertaken. Upon that ground it was pressed upon the Chair that the amendment provided for something other than "a public work or object in progress," and upon that ground, apparently, the point of order was sustained.

Now, there is another holding that I do not leave the part had a

New, there is another holding that I do not lay my hand on just now where the Chair, in a former ruling in this House, held that where an appropriation had been made, as I recollect, practically in a lump sum for the purpose of carrying out certain objects, where it was sought to change it from a lump sum and segregate it to specific objects in which there was created certain offices with fixed salaries, it was held to be new legislation and subject to a point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the
Mr. FOWLER. Certainly.

Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman in that connection contend that where a lump sum has covered, say, the services of five men in the civil service, that a recitation in the law of the five men, naming their respective salaries, is new legislation? Does he claim it subjects the bill to a point of order; is that his

Mr. FOWLER. No; that is not exactly the point of order. The point of order is that you create here new offices and undertake to fix the salaries therefor.

Mr. MURDOCK. If this paragraph in issue does not create new offices, if these offices were covered in another paragraph in the current law, then does his point of order lie?

Mr. FOWLER. I think so, because it is a diversion from the channel which is authorized by the previous law, and this is a an office was created and paid out of a lump-sum appropriation, new law in which it is intended to create new offices or new positions, fixing the salaries, and thereby diverting the funds from the way in which there is authority under the law at present for that purpose.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the gentleman's point is good, is not Congress powerless to segregate a lump sum?

Mr. FOWLER. I think not.

Mr. MURDOCK. Why not?

Mr. FOWLER. Because of the fact that that matter can be reached any time Congress sees fit to reach it.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he thinks that a mere appropriation of a sum of money in an appropriation bill is an authorization for an office?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly, where under a lump sum carried as a contingent fund the same men have been employed.

Mr. CARTER. But does it follow that that is an authorization of law

Mr. MURDOCK. These precise offices have existed before.
Mr. FOWLER. No; that is not the contention by anybody that these offices have existed at all, because this lump sum has been appropriated and placed under the jurisdiction and control of a certain agency that carries that out by himself alone, and be has the disposal of the services and is the director himself.

But here there is an effort to divert that fund from the purpose for which it was intended. It is an attempt to segregate it and create two new offices and fix the salaries therefor.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will my colleague allow me to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question?

Mr. FOWLER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Under the old law, where $85,000 was appro-Mr. GRAHAM. priated as a lump sum-

One hundred and fifteen thousand dollars. Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. MURDOCK. One hundred and litteen thousand dollars. Mr. GRAHAM. Whatever the amount was, that could be paid out by the commissioner to such employees as he saw fit to employ. But this provision specifies two particular cases and takes it out of the power of the commissioner to change them, thereby creating two new offices.

Mr. MURDOCK. Would the gentleman think the point of order would lie against this very paragraph if it was included as a part of the paragraph, on page 8, which relates to contingent expenses?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes; if it specified two particular new offices in such a way that, in spite of the commissioner, those who held them should remain in them for one current year. Even though the work they are required to do should disappear the offices remain and they are not under the discretionary power of the Two new offices are thereby created over which commissioner. the commissioner would have no discretionary power or control. He could not abolish them or deprive the men holding them of their salaries, even though the work ceased.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the Chair for one moment to make myself clear on the proposition. The lump sum which has been appropriated heretofore, I presume, was under authority of law. That lump sum was placed under the control of the commissioner to carry out this work as he saw proper. He could hire a man 1 day or 20 days or a year, if he saw fit under that authorization, and pay him any sum agreed upon.

Now, it is proposed to take a portion of this work away from the control of the commissioner and give it to two specified created offices, entirely new, without any authorization under the law as it stands now, and fix their salaries, over which the commissioner has no control whatever. Therefore it becomes new legislation, creating new offices and fixing the salaries therefor, different from what the authorization is now, and hence, I take it. Mr. Chairman, it is new legislation. I do not desire to take up the time of the House, but I insist upon my point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it has been more or less of a controverted question in the House where a lump-sum appropriation was made under authority at law and an office was created by the person in charge of that lump-sum appropriation, as to whether that office could then be specifically carried in an appropriation bill by name at the same salary as under the lump-sum appropriation. I do not propose to discuss it at length, but perhaps the latest ruling made on the subject was during the discussion of the agricultural appropriation bill. There the question was distinctly presented on a point of order whether it was in order to appropriate specifically for an office at a specified salary, which office had heretofore been filled and paid out of a lump-sum appropriation. I have forgotten at present who was in the chair, but the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole at that time ruled distinctly that where that then it was in order for the committee to report in order on a bill making appropriations an item for that office with the salary carried which was already being paid. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that there is no doubt Congress, either by express provision of law or by reason of the policy of the Government, is entitled to maintain Indian agencies. I do not now recall just what was said, but I referred awhile ago to the fact that I made a point of order on the item in the bill for the Seminole Indians last year or the year before when it first appeared. I thought it was a perfectly good point of order. We were under no obligations, so far as treaties were concerned, to aid in the support of those Indians. So far as we were concerned, they were like other citizens of the United States, but for reasons which were then presented on the floor the then Chairman held that it was the policy of the United States, either by expressed law or by inference of law, to give aid and support to the Indians, and to the end of that policy it was in order to make an appropriation for the first time without specific treaty or other authority of law for the benefit of the Seminole Indians, and that item went into the bill and remained in the bill. The same rule would apply in general terms to the maintenance of the Indian agencies, would apply in general terms to the lump-sum items in the bill, or in the existing law out of which these officers are now paid, and if that rule is to be followed and then the ruling made recently by the Chair on the agricultural bill is the ruling made recently by the Chair on the agricultural bill is to be followed, why this item would have to be held in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair fully appreciates that the point of order made against the paragraph is similar to the one made against the previous paragraph. The Chair's ruling on that paragraph was based largely upon the information received from the committee, that this appropriation, for such it may be completed the committee of the large graph provided. be called, is merely an itemization of the lump sum provided on the previous page of the bill. Heretofore, as the Chair understands it, this appropriation has been made in a lump sum. and the manner of the distribution of the amount has been left to some other authority than the Congress. Under the action of the committee in this bill the committee has undertaken to distribute these items to the several States where they think they properly belong, and with that understanding the Chair held that the point of order was not well taken. If the Chair was right in the previous ruling, as he believes rulings of this sort have been made before, he must also overrule the point of order in this instance, and he does so, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one special agent at $1,100 and one financial clerk at $900 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the Mackinac Agency; in all, $2,000.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to this paragraph of the bill. I desire to ask if the services which are provided for here have been administered heretofore and dispensed by the commissioner?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this is the language carried in the last bill and in this:

For pay of one special agent, $1,100, and one financial clerk at $900 per annum.

The lump sum amounted to some $85,000 this year, and here-tofore it amounted to some $125,000, if I remember correctly, so there is a reduction, and it is on all fours with the other points of order which the gentleman has made.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not complaining of the amount of the appropriation at all. I want to congratulate the chairman and his committee upon their conservatism in making reductions and retrenchments in these appropriations; but, Mr. Chairman, I think that this is new legislation, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. That the paragraph creates new positions. It says, "For the pay of one special agent at $1,100," and there is no authorization for this special agent, Mr. Chairman. Then it provides for "one financial clerk at $900." There is no authorization for that clerk. I say there is no authorization under the law for those particular positions. It is subject, in my opinion, to the point of order, because it is without authorizawe have been discussing at length this afternoon—$85,000 in the present bill—and this one special agent was inserted for the State of Michigan, and it is the only special agent they have there. We are paying out of the lump sum for this special agent, and it is not a new office or a new officer and does not increase the amount, but decreases the amount of the lump sum.

Mr. FOWLER. What becomes of this new office?

What becomes of this new office? Is it in existence to-day?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is not a new office. The one special agent has always been used and heretofore appropriated for under the lump sum.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there any provision in the law for this special agent?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is a special agent now, and this amount will be segregated to pay for these positions.

Mr. FOWLER. Can you refer me to the law creating this special agent?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have general authority to run all these agents, or else they could not maintain them. They have the power to appoint them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on this unless the gentleman wishes to be heard further.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to be heard

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

MINNESOTA

SEC. 9. For support and education of 225 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., and for pay of superintendent, $39,175; for general repairs and improvements, $2,500; in all, $41,675.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "twenty-five hundred dollars," in line 10, page 15, and inserting in lieu therof "$4,500, $1,500 of which shall be used for the installation of an electric lighting system and $500 of which shall be used for the construction of coal sheds," and by striking out the word "forty-one," in line 11, on page 15, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "forty-three."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that at the time this matter was presented the bill had been made up and was not before the committee, and I have no objection to the item going into the bill, because it has been agreed to by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on his amendment?

Mr. HAMMOND. Just a word, Mr. Chairman. ment increases the appropriation by $2,000, $1,500 of which amount shall be appropriated for an electric lighting plant and $500 for coal sheds. The situation is this: There are about 200 pupils in the school. No provision for housing coal at all. About 1,000 tons are used each year, and the greater portion of it is left outside to be disintegrated by the elements and destroyed. The gas plant is an antiquated one. Seven out of the 12 buildings are lighted by gas generated from 4 separate generators. I do not desire to take up the time of the committee. I presented the matter to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and this amendment was accepted by the committee. Unless there are questions to be asked me I desire a vote upon the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to advance to the executive committee of the White Earth Band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the annual celebration of said band to be held June 14, 1912, out of the funds belonging to said band.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the last paragraph and desire to ask the chairman of the committee if the bridge for which this $1,000 is appropriated is exmittee if the bridge for which this $1,000 is appropriated is expected to be beneficial to this tribe of Indians.

Mr. MILLER. This is not a new item. It has been carried in every appropriation bill for many years. The Chippewa Indians of Minnesota have a reunion and sort of festival each year about the 14th of June. It has grown to be a great event. To this festival, as it may be so termed, Indians from the Dakotas come by invitation. They have elaborate ceremonics and games, and they comport themselves in a highly creditable manner, and I think it is the most picturesque and valuable entertainment among the Indians of anything in the Northwest. It is as dear to them almost as the hurial grounds of their It is as dear to them almost as the burial grounds of their fathers. They look forward to it as one great event. It is their own money. We are not appropriating any money belonging to the Government. Of course, the only way they can get the money is in this way.

Mr. MURDOCK. What is the action of the expenditure of the $1,000?

Mr. MILLER. A thousand dollars is simply part of what it costs. These Indians have in the Treasury about $10,000.000, and there are about $3,000,000 more for timberlands that have already been sold but not paid for.

Mr. FOWLER. About how many Indians congregate in this

Mr. MILLER. They congregate from every part of the Northwest, and I think they come from Canada now. I think, conservatively stated, there are 6,000 Indians who participate.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you think it has created a friendly feeling?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.
Mr. FOWLER. And has been beneficial in its results?
Mr. MILLER. Splendid. And they take up for discussion and consideration questions for their own benefit.

The FOWLER I withdraw my point of order, Mr. Chair-

The Clerk rend as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions on the Navajo Indian Reservation at Shiprock, N. Mex., with respect to the necessity of constructing a bridge across the San Juan River at Shiprock on said reservation, and also to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit cost for the construction of a suitable bridge at that place, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912, and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose herein authorized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to state, Mr. Chairman, that this bridge was washed out, I understand, last year. The abutments are still there, but the bridge has gone, and the main part of the Navajo Reservation is, I understand, on the south side of the river. This San Juan River is a tributary to the Colorado River of the West. A considerable portion of this Indian reservation is on the opposite side of the river from the railroad, and it has to be crossed by the Indians in order that they may get to the railroad points of shipment, and so forth. They must haul their wool and other products across this bridge. It is a dangerous mountain stream and unsafe to ford, and very often extremely dangerous when there is a rise in the The matter was submitted to our committee, and we were unanimously of the opinion that the bridge should be rebuilt for the benefit of these Indians.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it may be necessary. I do not know. It is only recently they have adopted the policy, I think, for building these bridges for the benefit of the Indians out of the General Treasury. A few years ago there were various propositions of this sort introduced in the House which went to the committee of which I had the honor to be a member and for a while the chairman. We never reported any of them favorably, but last year we put a provision in for three new bridges in Arizona and New Mexico, payable out of the General Treasury.

Now, here is the new State of New Mexico, which has some obligation in reference to building bridges. Here is an Indian reservation that ought to have some obligation in reference to the construction of bridges that are needed. On what principle do the gentlemen expect the Federal Treasury to pay for the construction of bridges in a State? We fought here for three whole days as to whether we would contribute the sum finally of $15,000 to help construct a bridge the necessity for which was caused by the Government taking possession of some property over in Massachusetts for a naval station of some kind. And yet offhand, without consideration and without knowledge, we propose to expend money in the State of New Mexico for the construction of a bridge which may or may not be needed. It certainly is not needed, so far as the convenience of the Government of the United States is concerned.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield at that point? Mr. MANN. I will yield at any point for information.

Mr. FERRIS. The Government did build the former bridge, and when the floods came they washed away a bridge that had been constructed by the Federal Government. It cuts off five or six hundred Indians from their trading point. The Department now asks in their estimate for $16,000 for the construction of We gave them an amount sufficient to go and inthis bridge. vestigate what the real situation was and to determine whether or not the Federal Government ought to build a bridge there again and to determine also what it should cost.

Mr. MANN. I should think that $1,000 for making an estimate on the cost of constructing a bridge that costs only $16,000 was an exceedingly liberal estimate of the estimated expenses of the estimate. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. Well, it is not required that more shall be expended than is necessary.

Mr. MANN. Does the Government maintain the roads that lead up to the bridge? Ah, the gentleman nods his head. But

Mr. FERRIS. I will say to the gentleman that I did not nod my head.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman who lives in the far West did. I am not referring to the gentleman from Oklahoma. Under what obligation does the Government rest, having built a bridge and given it to these people, now to rebuild it because it has been destroyed? We would think ourselves very lucky, indeed, in my town if we could get the Government to build a bridge the first time, much less follow it up and rebuild it every time it needs rebuilding.

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, you are not an Indian. [Laughter.]
Mr. MANN. We have more Indians in Chicago than there are in the United States outside of Chicago of red skin. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOEHNE. Of what tribe? [Laughter.] Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the item is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. The item is subject to a point of order, but I will withdraw the point of order, although the item should never have been in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one special agent at $1.050, one physician at $600, and one financial clerk at $600 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the New York Agency; in all, $2,250.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I have discovered, in comparing this bill with the law which was passed at the last session of the last Congress, that it appropriated for New York $10,500. Now, the same $10,500 is appropriated, and in addition to that there is $1,050 appropriated for a special agent, $600 for a physician, and $600 for a financial clerk. Mr. Chairman, I can not understand why it is that these three places should be created here in this section when they have not had any existence heretofore.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire of the gentleman now relative to some of these tribes. I see that the Senecas of New York are dealt with and that the Six Nations of New York are dealt with. I desire to ask if these two different appropriations are intended for two different and separate reservations?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are Indians in reservations, but under treaty stipulations with the United States Government. They are wards of the Government.

Mr. FOWLER. Do these two reservations approximate each other, or are they some distance apart?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have never been in that country, and I can not answer.

Mr. FOWLER. I should be glad to have an answer. Mr. FORNES. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, can answer. They are 50 miles apart.

Mr. FOWLER. I thank the gentleman. Now, I desire to know from the chairman of the committee, or some one else of the committee, where this special agent will be located that looks after these two different reservations?

Mr. FERRIS. In reply to that, if the gentleman desires an answer, I will say that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has full power to direct the agent to go from one part of the agency to the other, and has full power to send the agents out into the field, and from one agency to another. And I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is simply one of those items that have been segregated, and the amount in the aggregate is $8.000 less than the sum total of the general fund that we have segregated.

Mr. FOWLER. If he is a traveling agent you do not fix any limit to the expense for his mileage or traveling expenses.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, the department has some latitude with reference to that. I do not know exactly what it is. The commissioner has some general appropriation that he can use for that purpose.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is the physician located? Mr. FERRIS. Wherever the commissioner thinks his services are needed most.

Mr. FOWLER. These agencies are 50 miles apart, as I understand. Do you expect to send a physician 50 miles, back and forth, on a salary of $600 a year?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know what is in the mind of the commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have my time extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I can not understand the provision creating this position. It provides for only one physician. There are two agencies at least, and they are at least 50 miles apart.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman imagine that there could be several hundred Indians 50 miles apart that did not have an agency doctor?

Mr. FOWLER. That is the point I make. There is only one position created by this act. Now, where is he located? Is he on one of these reservations, or on the other, or on both? Do his duties require him to deal with both of these reservations?

Mr. McCULER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit,

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, it seems to me this paragraph locates this physician. The item says, "For pay of one special agent, at $1,050, one physician, at $600, and one financial clerk, at $600 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the New York Agency.' That is wherever the New York Agency is.

Mr. FOWLER. That is, in addition to what is otherwise provided for at the New York Agency this position is provided. Now, where is he located, and what services is he to perform?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. He is to perform the services for the Indians of the New York Agency-whatever Indians are accessible to that place. I take it that this is one of the smallest amounts appropriated for a physician. Not infrequently a large number of Indians will be living near a small place.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is the New York Agency located? Will the gentleman answer that? I want to get an understanding of your bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In the State of New York.

Mr. FOWLER. No; I mean at what definite point. Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do not know at what definite point. Evidently it is near some town, and the chances are that the physician lives in some town.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman does not give me any information.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman does not give me any opportunity to. Will the gentleman yield to me for a further statement?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. No; I do not yield further, Mr. Chairman, because the gentleman does not give me any further information. [Laughter.]

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman will not permit me to.

Mr. FOWLER. It is because the gentleman can not.
Mr. FORNES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; I yield. Mr. FORNES. In answer to the gentleman's question, I will say that one agency is in the western part of my county, near Lake Ontario, and the other is in Cattaraugus County, near the southern boundary of the State of New York.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is this physician to be located? He may be located at one place, but he at-Mr. FORNES. tends both these places. He is the consulting physician.
Mr. FOWLER. How far apart are these agencies?

Mr. FORNES. About 50 miles apart.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you run your doctor 50 miles, back and forth, at a salary of $600?

Mr. FORNES. He can go by rall from one agency to the

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is very kind in his explanation. I would like to insist upon my point of order, but inasmuch as the committee has shown a disposition to try to segregate this work and make it specific and more intelligent, I will withdraw my point of order. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as Iollows;

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, for the support of the agency and pay of employees maintained for their benefit, and he is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury the further sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, for the construction and equipment of an Indian hospital upon the Fort Sill Indian School Reservation in Oklahoma, to be used only for the benefit of Indians belonging to said tribes; in all, $65,000.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.
Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, for the past three years the Klowa Indian agent at Anadarko, Okla., has been constantly at work trying to secure a hospital and a home for the Indians of his reservation that are afflicted with trachoma and ophthalmia, diseases of the eyes. A physician was sent down there by the Indian Office last year to make an examination of the different schools, to see what per cent of the Indians were afflicted, and represented them to be. I have here and will read a statement of the result of that investigation which I think will show the grave necessity for this item. The physician who made the examination was Dr. W. H. Harrison, designated by the department to go out there and make the investigation.

I read from the hearing:

The total number of boys examined at the Fort Sill School was 92, 23 of whom had trachoma, 19 ophthalmia, and the percentage of those diseased was 45; 42 were under treatment. The total number of girls examined was 80, 23 of whom had trachoma, 30 ophthalmia, and 66 per cent were diseased; 53 were under treatment. The total number examined at the Fort Sill School was 172, 46 of whom had trachoma, 40 ophthalmia, and 55 per cent were diseased; 95 were under treatment. At the Riverside School—

These are two schools on the same reservation-the total number of boys examined was 66, 56 of whom had trachoma, 21 had ophthalmia, and 84 per cent were diseased; 56 were under treatment. There were 85 girls examined, 56 of whom had trachoma, 28 ophthalmia, and 66 per cent were diseased; 56 were under treatment. The total number examined at Riverside was 151, 112 of whom had trachoma, 49 ophthalmia, and 75 per cent were diseased; 112 were under treatment.

trachoma, 40 ophthalmia, and 75 per cent were diseased; 112 were under treatment.

At the St. Patrick's Catholic Indian School there were 36 boys examined, 21 of whom had trachoma, 10 ophthalmia, and 58 per cent were diseased; 21 were under treatment. There were 52 girls examined, of whom 39 had trachoma, 15 ophthalmia, and 75 per cent were diseased; 39 were under treatment. The total number of pupils examined at the St. Patrick School was 88, 60 of whom had trachoma, 25 ophthalmia, and 66 per cent were diseased; 60 were under treatment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma

Mr. FERRIS. I hope I may have 10 minutes in which to explain this matter. It is a very important matter, and I am anxious to lay the whole matter before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. FERRIS. He says:

At the Rainy Mountain School the number of boys examined was 69, 59 of whom had trachoma, 21 ophthalmia, and 85 per cent were diseased; 59 were under tractment. There were 72 girls examined, 61 of whom had trachoma, 18 ophthalmia, and 85 per cent were diseased; 61 were under treatment.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman state those figures again? Mr. FERRIS. He says there were 72 girls examined, 61 of whom had trachoma and 18 ophthalmia.

Mr. COOPER. Sixty-one and 18 added together making 79, or 7 more than the total number of girls,

Mr. FERRIS. He states that 85 per cent were diseased. It may refer to another school. There seems to be a slight discrepancy in those figures.

Mr. COOPER. What were the ages of these children?

Mr. FERRIS. From 6 years to 21 years. This statement is found on page 253 of the hearings. The total number examined at Rainy Mountain School was 141, 120 of whom had trachoma, 39 ophthalmia. Eighty-five per cent were diseased, and 120 were under treatment. Then, there is a telegram signed by 20 or 30 doctors, which reads as follows:

LAWTON, OKLA., December 15, 1911.

Hon. Scott Ferris, M. C., Washington, D. C.:

We, the physicians of Lawton, Okla., and members in good standing of Comanche County Medical Society, having had some hospital experience with Indians of this vicinity and knowing they are in great need of hospital attention and will be greatly benefited by same, urge that you spare no effort to secure the passage of the Stecker Hospital bill.

Very respectfully,

E. Brent Mitchell, M. D.; H. A. Angus, M. D.; E. S. Goch, M. D.; L. T. Goch, M. D.; P. G. Dulap, M. D.; Jackson Broshears, M. D.; W. N. Hitch, M. D.; B. D. Meeker, M. D.; James L. Lewis, M. D.; F. W. Hammond, M. D.; C. S. Mercdith, M. D.; E. S. Dunlap, M. D.; C. H. Hucs, M. D.; Louis A. Milne, M. D.; and D. A. Myers, M. D., secretary.

I have a letter from the agent-it is a very long one-to the effect that they will not admit these afflicted children to the regular hospital.

I want to explain that few of the Kiowa and Comanche Indians are far enough along with civilization to be readily admitted to the white hospital. They are almost blanket Indians.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman explain to us the reason for this appalling state of affairs?

Mr. FERRIS. I will give the gentleman the facts as I know them.

Mr. MURDOCK. How long has this condition obtained? Mr. FERRIS. This disease prevails among the old Indians as well as the young ones. They come to my office to see me about their matters, and their eyes are so glued together and stuck together from the disease that they have to be led.

Now, these people have in the Treasury over $4,000,000 to their credit and more than a million yet due them. I am not to see whether the conditions were as severe as the agent had lasking the Federal Government to appropriate it for them, but I think there ought to be a small sum withdrawn from their own funds for the present for the benefit of these Indians.

Mr. MURDOCK. Has this condition obtained for a long time or is it something of recent development?

Mr. FERRIS. It seems to be growing worse. there now about 11 years, and some of them have had eye diseases all that time. For awhile few, if any, knew what it was. I did not know what ailed them. I thought it was a kind of scrofula or something of that kind, but the physician of the Interior Department, Dr. Harrison, who was sent out there, and the local physicians who come in contact with it, call it ophthalmia and trachoma. They designate it in two ways. I am not able to distinguish which is which. The only thing I know is that they walk the streets of my town and neighboring towns with their eyes glued together and in a pitiable condition.

Mr. COOPER. Is it not understood that trachoma can be communicated by the use of the same towel or anything of that

Mr. FERRIS. I understand that is a well-recognized fact. Mr. COOPER. It is a most remarkable thing to read that out of 72 girls in a school there are 61 afflicted with that horrible disease.

Mr. FERRIS. I have merely read all of these things so that gentlemen may see how almost universal the disease prevails among them.

Mr. COOPER. It is a sickening recital.

Mr. FERRIS. It is, indeed.
Mr. COOPER. It is strange that such a condition, amounting almost to a pestilence, should have been raging there among these Indians in any such way as that.

Mr. FERRIS. Now, I want to read what the agent in charge

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.
Mr. KINDRED. May I inquire of the gentleman how many Indians is it proposed may use the hospital? How many are there to be accommodated?

Mr. FERRIS. About 4,081 Indians on this reservation. Mr. KINDRED. And all of them are to have the privilege of using a hospital to cost $40,000?

Mr. FERRIS. That is the intention. They would not all be here at once. The disease does not confine them to their beds. there at once.

Mr. KINDRED. Is it intended to have a hospital so constructed that these diseases can not be further communicated to other patients in the hospital?

Mr. FERRIS. I may say that it provides that the hospital shall be constructed near the center of the reservation, out in the country, where patients can be treated for these terrible diseases

Mr. KINDRED. Has not the gentleman observed that there are fewer cases of trachoma and ophthalmia among the Indians who are careful about the sanitary surroundings and observe the rules of personal cleanliness?

Mr. FERRIS. I think that is true. I think it prevails only among the backward tribes. They do not have it on the east side. where the Indians are well along with civilization and education.

Mr. KINDRED. That comports with the fact that it is a highly contagious disease, but flourishes mostly among those who are uncleanly.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentl Mr. FERRIS. With pleasure. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORGAN. I observe that the hospital is to be located on the Fort Sill Reservation.

Mr. MORGAN, Car Can the gentleman state any substantial reason why the hospital should be located at Fort Sill rather than at Anadarko or some other agency?

Mr. FERRIS. It is very near the center of the entire group of counties that have the Indians living in them. That is the first reason. The second reason is that it is near the largest Indian boarding school—the Fort Sill boarding school. An additional reason is that the lands that are to be sold from which the revenue is to be derived lie practically all in this locality. I think that will be satisfactory to the Indians, will be satisfactory to the white citizens, and satisfactory to all concerned when it is once explained.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman thinks that that would be a more suitable location than at the agency at Anadarko?

Mr. FERRIS. We thought so. It is 40 miles south to the Texas line, it is 40 or 50 miles to the extreme northern line of the reservation, and it is equally divided between the east and the west; it is 35 miles to the line to the former Indian Territory and about 35 or 40 miles west to the Greer County,

Mr. MORGAN. I did not hear all of the gentleman's statement, for I was out for a few moments, but I want to ask him if this hospital is intended simply for the children afflicted with diseased eyes, or is it for the infirm and old Indians as well as the young?

Mr. FERRIS. I take it, and it is so stated in all the conversations with the agents of the Indians, and the Indians themselves have expressed the hope that it will be for all of them.

Mr. MORGAN. The entire sum will be used to construct the hospital. Now, where is the provision for maintaining it?

Mr. FERRIS. I have an answer to that question. That has not been overlooked, but has been submitted to the department. They have little remnants of land left over from land sales and openings, and there has been a bill introduced and referred to the Indian Committee, on which a very emphatic and favorable report is to be made, to the effect that these remnant lands shall be sold and the proceeds therefrom go into a hospital fund for maintenance and original cost.

Mr. MORGAN. If the gentleman will permit me a word, a portion of these Indians, as the gentleman knows, live in the second congressional district

Mr. FERRIS. That is true. [The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] having expired, by unanimous consent he was given 10 minutes more.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, I was very much interested in this proposition, or in any other that will be for the benefit of the Indians in my district.

Mr. FERRIS. I understood the gentleman, and he has been interested at all times, and full credit should be given to the gentleman for his part in securing this legislation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may proceed a little further, I will read from a letter from the Kiowa agent:

There are under my supervision 4,081 Indians, and as far as ordinary business matters between man and man are concerned, 95 per cent of these people are noncompetent and require governmental supervision. They are scattered throughout 108 townships, or over an area 70 by 90 miles in extent, which makes it impossible to properly care for them from a medical standpoint, as it is a physical impossibility for the agency physician to cover so large a territory and keep in proper touch with his patients. Trachoma, tuberculosis, various other diseases, and the usual per cent of painful accidents prevail among them. When within reach of an agency physician they call on him for treatment, if the medicine man or woman does not get the patient first.

I will explain what he means. The Indians have been in the habit of using an herb. I think they call it pyote. They have a superstition that it is the only medicine that can be of any use in curing these diseases. There are a number of Indians who now think they do not want the hospital. They have talked to me about it and they have talked with several Members of the House. They think that a hospital ought not to be built. However, the older Indians, those afflicted with the diseases, want it built, and have so expressed themselves in my office within a few months. Three or four of the Indians came to Washington and said that they wanted a hospital, and wanted the Federal Government to pay for it. They did not want it paid for out of their funds. I said to them that they had $4,000,000 in the Treasury and had $1,000,000 yet due from lands that had been sold and are being paid for one-fifth each year, and that that money ought to be used to cure them.

The letter goes on to say:

The letter goes on to say:

If they have individual funds, the nearest practicing physician is called, and, in the case of necessary operations a transfer is frequently made to a hospital in one of the neighboring cities. These cases are expensive, and the Indians can not afford the financial drain on their limited resources.

The death rate among children is large, as there is no proper place provided where they can be treated under trained supervision; the physician's efforts invariably fail because his directions are not followed, and dieting is not understood by the Indians generally.

The establishment and maintenance of an Indian hospital is a necessity and should no longer be delayed. Once in operation it will prove a great blessing to these people and will be fully appreciated by them. It will provide a place where their own language is spoken, enabling them to explain intelligently their sufferings and bring them all the relief that science can command, free of cost.

This institution could be made self-supporting. The reserved agency lands herein recommended for sale can well be spared for this purpose, and I know of no better purpose to which the proceeds of such a sale could be applied.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact that aside from the schools the physicians have investigated that a large number of children on these reservations remain away from school because they are the severest cases—that their cases are so intensified that they are unable to go to school, and of those the gentleman has no report?

Mr. FERRIS. That is correct. Old men come hobbling up where there are no allotments, as it formerly belonged to Texas. on my porch leading each other by the hand afflicted with this

Now, it is a disease that can be cured. This record was submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the committee was almost appalled, and they uniformly authorized it to be inserted, and the Indian Commissioner stated in the hearings that he was in hearty accord with the proposal.

Now I want to refer to the objection of a few Indians. are a few Indians, as I have said, the young and stalwart, that are now and they now think they will be displeased with this provision. Some of them may have called on some of the Members of the House. They want a hospital, but they want the Federal Government to build it. I took the responsibility of this provision myself, and I think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Morgan] will share it with me, particularly as he has some of these Indians in his district. I think that where Indians have more than $4,000,000 to their credit and only 4,000 of them and have more than $1,000,000 due them, it will not do an injustice to them to withdraw a small sum of about $10 per capita, so that they may have a place where they can be treated. The agent told me himself he had found water running under the tents where women were giving birth to children, and where a physician would not go unless the Indian does pay the money for it. That is the situation that prevails. The agent is very anxious about this; he is familiar with every detail of this. He has lived in the barracks with some of these Indians while some of them were scout officers, as he has said in another part of the letter, for the past twenty-odd years, and shows that he is entirely familiar with the disease; that he is entirely familiar with the Indians and entirely familiar with the country, and he thinks that this ought to be given. Now, unless somebody cares to ask a question-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say I favor this appropriation, and in justification for taking the money of the Indians in this instance and appropriating it for the purpose of erecting a hospital for their benefit-in justification therefor I want to say that an agreement was made with the Kiowa and Comanche Indians some years ago by which they ceded and sold to the United States all of their reservation for a consideration of $1,000,000, and that agreement, of course, had to be ratified by Congress. received here it was ratified by the House and sent to the Senate, and a reservation was made in the agreement by which 480,000 acres was reserved for the use of the Indians as a pasture.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Five hundred and five thousand

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Four hundred and eighty thousand acres, as I remember.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then there was a small wood reservation reserved.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The treaty provided that the Indians cede and convey to the United States all their interest in the reservation for a consideration of $1,000,000, subject to 480,000 acres being reserved temporarily for their use as a pasture, as I have already stated. The balance of the reserva-tion was open to settlement and disposed of, with the exception that 25,000 acres was arbitrarily reserved by the Secretary of the Interior for the use of the Indians as a wood lot, as I recall it, without any authority of law. That 25,000 acres was reit, without any authority of law. That 25,000 acres was reserved and not disposed of, in addition to the 480,000 acres. By reason of the opening to settlement of the surplus lands, towns and cities sprung up, railroads were extended, and the lands increased very materially in value.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I ask that my time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota? The Chair [After a pause.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Of course, the Indian allotments greatly increased in value also by reason of this development, and later a bill was introduced by the distinguished gentleman, the present chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, Mr. Stephens of Texas, proposing to sell the 505,000 acres reserved, if that is the correct amount, and give to the Indians the proceeds. I opposed that bill in one Congress and it was defeated in the House. My opposition was based upon the theory that we had once purchased the land from the Indians and had paid them therefor a full consideration. That if there was no further use by the Indians of this undisposed of land then it belonged to the United States and it was not necessary for us to again purchase it from the Indians. Later a bill was again presented in another Congress and it finally passed and became a law, and the 505,000 acres were sold under conditions by which the lands sold to the highest bidder and brought on an average about $11 an acre. Am I correct?

Mr. FERRIS. Twelve dollars and a half.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Twelve dollars and a half an acre, so that we gave to these Indians, after having once purchased all the lands within their reservation, a fund of something like $5,000,000. Now, my own opinion is that they would probably be better off to-day if they never had had the 5,000,000; that the condition that the gentleman has described, which is certainly deplorable, would not prevail if it had not been that they had such a fund upon which they could depend for their support. Having given them the money, as I have already indicated, we certainly can and ought to appropriate it as in our judgment will be for their best interests, and I know of no better way of using some of this money than for the purpose that this $40,000 is to be used.

I was somewhat surprised to learn from the gentleman that the conditions are as deplorable as he has described, in view of the laudatory speeches which were made earlier in the afternoon as to the attitude of the people of Oklahoma toward the Indians; and it simply demonstrates, Mr. Chairman, that the Indian, I do not care whether he is in Oklahoma or wherever he is, has to depend upon the Federal Government or else he suffers when distress overcomes him. Now, I say again that I think this is a worthy proposition, and I think we could expend the money of the Indians in no better way than as provided for in this item.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that I hope this item in this bill will be adopted. I have passed through this reservation frequently in the last few years on my way from the Capital to my home, and I know the condition described by the gentleman from Oklahoma is true. I have seen these Indians, and these diseases of the eye are certainly not only painful, but there is great danger of infection. I understand that these diseases originated in Mexico among the Mexican Indians and came down through Arizona, passed through New Mexico to Oklahoma, and these Oklahoma Indians have become infected, as I have personally observed. therefore hope that this item in this bill will become a law and that this hospital will be built for these Indians.

Mr. MANN, Mr. Chairman, the Government is now employing between 100 and 150 physicians for the purpose of giving treatment to Indians. It maintains a hospital for the treatment of trachoma in Arizona, where extreme cases can be sent. The gentleman from Oklahoma gives to the House a statement concerning trachoma in Oklahoma which has no application whatever to the proposition pending before the House now.

There are something less than, I believe, 4,000-

Mr. FERRIS. Four thousand and eight, one.
Mr. MANN. Where does the gentleman get his figures? Mr. FERRIS. From the letter of the agent who has them in

Mr. MANN. If the letter of the agent is no better than some other figures furnished in the report of the committee or in the hearings before the committee, it is not worth much. I see, for instance, statistics of the department in one place give the census of the Indians as now proper that was taken 20 years ago and gives a statement of two or three thousand Indians, where the census of the United States, taken last year, gives a little over 1,000, and I apprehend the figures are somewhat similar in this case. My information is there are 2,880 members of the Klowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes in Oklahoma, covering a territory of 70 by 90 miles, scattered sparsely through that territory.

Talk about bringing these Indian women to a hospital in the center of it for childbirth. How absolutely ridiculous! last place they want to go is to a hospital, and they would not be able to gather together from over this territory 70 by 90 miles for that purpose. I apprehend there are not accidents enough to demand a hospital. There is $40,000 proposed for less than 3,000 individuals. That there may be some trachoma is extremely likely. I do not deny that there may be, but trachoma is not treated by segregating the patients in a hospital.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentieman has expired. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. MANN. I ask The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
Mr. FORNES. Would you consider it a useless effort to build a hospital in a town containing, say, about 3,000 people? It is claimed there are about 3,000 Indians here. Is it not as well to say those Indians ought to have some place to be sent in order to be treated as to say so where there is an aggregation of about 3,000?

Mr. MANN. The cases are quite different than putting a hospital in a territory covering about 70 by 90 miles square. But there is not a town in the United States with 3,000 that has a $40,000 hospital. But that is not all. Lawton, in this very reservation, has several hospitals that are open to these Indians.

A Member. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says I am mistaken, but I believe I am correct

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman believe the infectious diseases ought to be brought in in connection with others?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman believe that these contagious diseases should be brought into a hospital in connection with all the ills of mankind? That is what you propose to do. You propose to bring these diseases into hospitals where you have cases of childbirth and accident cases.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman not aware that buildings can be scattered over quite a distance, like they are here—a considerable distance apart?

Mr. MANN. You can not separate many by means of $40,000. Mr. KINDRED. Did not the gentleman from Oklahoma

Mr. MANN. I do not know what he stated. Ask him.

Mr. KINDRED. He asked that the eye diseases, and so forth, were to be detached from the main hospital. And that would obviate the objection of the-

Mr. MANN. The geutleman from New York knows that there is nothing of that kind here, nor is it the intention of the Indian agent to erect detached hospitals there. Nor did they expect, when it was first presented, to make it a hospital for trachoma. They find a sad state of affairs there and elsewhere in reference to trachoma, and they do not need a hospital to control it. What they need is better police regulations. What they need is to wipe Oklahoma off the map and have General Government control, but that is impossible to do. If Oklahoma were not a State, there would not be any trouble about trachoma there, because the gentleman would not control it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. Mann] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent that all debate be closed in five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I shall object to that. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] had 25 minutes, and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] had 20 minutes, and half of my time was taken by other gentlemen.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman agree to 10 minutes more?

Mr. MANN. So far as I am concerned, you can close debate

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The reason for that is that I wish to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olm-STED to bring up that part of the bill under the State of Pennsylvania, because I understand there is sickness in his family, and he desires to get away.

Mr. MANN. I can close in two minutes.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MANN. It depends upon how much time I have.
Mr. DAVENPORT. We will get you the time.
Mr. MANN. Then I yield.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Do you think if it were possible to wipe Oklahoma off the map and give the Indians the funds that have been withheld by the Government, it would wipe the disease out of the United States?

Mr. MANN. I would not wipe Oklahoma off the map under any circumstances. [Applause.] We know what they have done under the direction of the gentlemen of the Committee on Indian Affairs and Congress itself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not pretend to know whether this hospital ought to be constructed or not. The gentleman from Oklahoma stated that some Indians came here. Among other Members of the House, they visited me. Whether their statement in reference to the case is correct or not, I do not know. They said they did not need the hospital; that they do not want If the Government desires to build it out of the Federal Treasury, of course they would not object. Last February, only recently, when this matter was still pending in the Committee on Indian Affairs, these tribes asked the Indian Commissioner for permission to come to Washington and be heard before this committee.

This was his reply, dated February 20:

Answering your telegram of February 18, requesting permission to visit Washington to protest against the proposed erection of a hospital on the Kiowa Reservation, you are advised that, since the bill for the proposed hospital does not contemplate the use of tribal funds, the office sees no reason why your committee at this time should visit Washington, and your request is therefore not approved.

That is signed by Mr. Charles F. Hauke, Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and is transmitted through this Indian committee to the superintendent.

Now, it strikes me that under these circumstances these Indians are entitled to a hearing before their committee before their matter is foreclosed.

Mr. Chairman, I think the item is subject to a point of order. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, among other things, to withdraw from the Treasury $40,000 of funds on deposit to the credit of these Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes in Oklahoma for the construction and equipment of a hospital on the Fort Sill Indian School Reservation. Those funds are placed in the Treasury by reason of a law which provides with reference to their disposition, and there is no authority now existing for Congress to take that fund out of the Treasury for the purpose of constructing this hospital. I make the point of order.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the gentleman would not make the point of order, for the reason that I did not want to have him appear hostile to this proposition. fortunately for the Indian and fortunately for the community. the item is not, in my opinion, subject to a point of order, as I think I can demonstrate from the law. I read from the Revised Statutes, chapter 2580, page 213, which provides for the opening of the land from which this fund is derived, and under the subhead which provides for the disposition of these funds I

Provided. That the money arising from the sale of said lands shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of said tribe of Indians, and said deposit of money shall draw 4 per cent interest per annum, and the principal and interest of said deposit shall IC expended—

I want the committee to hear this last part-for the benefit of said Indians in such manner as Congress may direct.

This law is now in full force and effect. This is the act which opened that country to settlement. This is the law that governs the payment of these funds. After the gentleman reads that section I am sure that he will admit that the point of order is not good. Congress having full authority to expend the money for any purpose it desires, the committee having full jurisdiction over Indian matters, the amendment itself being germane, the law itself authorizing us to expend this money for whatsoever purposes Congress directs-all this renders the point of order not well taken, and the amendment is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is mistaken. Congress has the power by legislation to provide this hospital out of these funds, or make any other disposition of the funds. That is a matter of legislation. What we meet now is a point of order on an item in an appropriation bill, and the question is whether that item is authorized by law. Congress has not disposed by legislation of these funds. It is competent for Congress to do it. Why, Mr. Chairman, we have millions of money in the Treasury. Every dollar of it is subject to disposition by Congress. It does not require a statute law to say that Congress may appropriate every cent of it. But when it comes to an item in an appropriation bill you must have authority for the appropriation. We have the authority to legis-late and provide for the disposition of the funds, and this Committee on Indian Affairs undoubtedly has the authority to report a bill which is pending before it making provision for this hospital. But it has not reported such a bill. No such bill has been passed. There is no law providing for it, and so long as that is the case I maintain that there is no authority for the item in the appropriation bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I just desire to add one statement to the suggestion I made a few moments ago. gress of the United States and the Committee on Indian Affairs have the authority to appropriate money for the welfare of these Indians so long as it does not change an existing law. This authority was given when the act was passed opening the country which created this precise fund, and I do not think the gentleman ought seriously to contend that his point of order is

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to ask the indulgence of the committee until he investigates the matter.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent, or will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] to ask unanimous consent, if he wants to go to the other item, if the Chair desires to pass this one over temporarily.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will submit the request,

Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, let us have a ruling before we quit to-night, so that we will not have to hash the thing all over to-morrow.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that the Pennsylvania item may be called up out of its order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the Pennsylvania item be taken up out of its order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears nene.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask the Clerk to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

PENNSYLVANIA.

SEC. 20 For support and education of Indian pupils at the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., and for pay of superintendent, $132,000; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for completing steam heating plant, $7,500, to be immediately available; in all, $144,500.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted], for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 29, line 5, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "twelve," so that as amended it will read "for general repairs and improvements, $12,000."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] and the committee for the courtesy extended to me. I offer this amendment in the hope that it will be acceptable to the committee. I shall take but a moment to explain it.

The Carlisle Indian School is located on property which the Government has owned for nearly a century. It was formerly used as a Cavalry barracks. It has cost the Government something like a million of dollars. Some of the buildings are pretty old, and the cost of repairs is at least equal to that of any other school with similar buildings and capacity. allowed in this instance is very much lower than the needs of the institution require. Sherman Institute, California, which has 550 pupils, is allowed in the bill $10,000 for repairs and improvements. Haskell Institute, with 750 pupils, is allowed $10,000. Salem, Oreg., with 600 pupils, is allowed $9,000. Rapid City, S. Dak., with 250 pupils, is allowed $8,000, while Carlisle is allowed but $5,000. This institution needs $12,000 for resident to the bill state of the control of the co pairs. It had last year 1,228 pupils enrolled, and the average attendance was 1,021; so that if $12,000 be allowed for repairs and improvements to this institution, it will be less in proportion than the sum allowed in this bill to other schools, while the buildings at Carlisle are older and more repairs are needed. offer the amendment in the hope that the chairman [Mr. Ste-PHENS] will accept it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is a measure pending that will, I hope, transfer the 120 students at Hampton, Va., to Carlisle or some other school. I do not think the Hampton School is any better than the Carlisle School. I am simply making a statement of the reasons why I will agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania to meet him halfway. The estimate on this item was, I understand, $9,000 for improvements. The committee reduced that estimate, and if the gentleman will meet me on that halfway ground I will agree to that.

Mr. OLMSTED. I believe the estimate by the department was $9,000.

was $9,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.
Mr. OLMSTED. Since then the superintendent of the school has had an interview with the department, and he writes me that the department, if called upon, would approve $12,000. However, the Superintendent of Indian Affairs is not here today. He went to Carlisle yesterday to attend the commence-ment. I have had no communication with him, and am not authorized to speak for him. I do not wish to have any controversy at all with the Committee on Indian Affairs on this matter, and if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] will say $10,000, I will consent to modify my amendment, although the school really needs the $12,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it would be violating the precedents, or rather furnishing a bad one, for an Appropriation Committee to exceed a department estimate. The only reason I agree to $9,000 is because it is the amount the department asked for in their estimate. And for the further reason that I hope the students at Hampton will be transferred to this Indian school at Carlisle or some other equally good one; and the fur-ther reason that a great many of the buildings at Carlisle are old frame buildings and badly out of repair. I have visited the school frequently and know the conditions there. The number of students is greater than in any other Indian school in the United States, and they are conducting an excellent school there. In view of all the existing facts and conditions I am willing to let the amount stand as estimated by the department at $9,000.

Mr. OLMSTED. Very well, Mr. Chairman, if I may have consent, I will modify my amendment so as to make it $9,000 instead of $12,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the amendment by striking out "twelve" and inserting " nine."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I desire to say just a word on the point of order pending against the item for the hospital for the Kiowa and Comanche Indians at Fort Sill. My contention is that we have already by legislation provided that the proceeds from the sale of certain lands should be placed in the Treasury to the credit of these Indians. The money therefore is their money. It is not in the same status as are funds generally that belong to the United States that are in the Treasury. These moneys were deposited there to the credit of these Indians and belong to them; and in my judgment there is no question at all but what they are subject to appropriation without any additional legislation. Now, if it was general money in the Treasury, it would be a different proposition. We appropriate annually for these Indians for their care and support from the funds in the Treasury belonging to them, strictly in accordance with the law, and under the language of the act which was read by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] I can not see how it is possible to sustain the point of order that this is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to call the attention of the committee to section 822 of the House Manual and Digest:

Appropriations for new buildings and Government institutions have sometimes been admitted when intended for the purposes of the institutions; but later decisions, in view of the indefinite extent of the practice made possible by the early decisions, have ruled out propositions to appropriate for new buildings in navy yards and other establishments. Appropriations for new schoolhouses in the District of Columbia, for new Army hospitals, for new lighthouses, armor-plate factories, and for additional playgrounds for children in the District of Columbia have also been held not to be in continuation of a public work.

The citation by the gentleman from Oklahoma of the statute which he says authorizes this action by the committee seems to the Chair to provide that the funds of these Indians derived from the sale of lands shall be placed in the National Treasury to their credit and draw a specified interest. But it occurs to the Chair that after these funds are placed there by statutory enactment it would certainly require legislation of some sort to take these funds out and disburse them, and therefore require new legislation. The Chair is inclined to hold that the point of order by the gentleman from Illinois is well taken, and does so hold, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment to that same section.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas how long he intends to continue to-night, Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to reach the paragraph in relation to the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have an amendment that will probably take considerable time to discuss, and I would like to get away before long. It will come in on this same page.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We will determine that when we reach it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 23, after line 4, insert the following paragraph:
"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Klowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, and pay out the same for the benefit of said tribes for their maintenance and support and improvements of their homesteads, for the ensuing year, in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in justification of that item I desire to submit the following letter, dated March 19, 1912, from the department:

Three successive crop failures in Oklahoma, resulting from severe droughts, have left the Klowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians in a deplorable financial condition, and they are now in urgent need of assistance until a crop can be produced.

In this connection your attention is invited to the inclosed copy of a letter dated March 6, 1912, from Ernest Stecker, superintendent of the Klowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, setting out in detail the financial conditions of these Indians, particular attention being invited to the following paragraph from said letter:

"The years of 1909, 1910, and 1911 were disastrous on account of severe droughts, which burned up the crops year after year, and owing to these conditions and the large Indian credits outstanding business was paralyzed. Banks refused to make loans; wholesale houses are crowding the retailers, who, in turn, are crowding the Indians for a settlement. The money lenders harass them to such an extent that they are afraid to remain at home and they wander about, dodging the collectors, in state of unrest which is becoming a menace to their progress. Because of the fact that these three tribes have large funds and always enjoyed liberal payments, business of all kinds has taken long chances with them, and to-day I believe their section of the country is in a more embarrassing financial condition than any other section in the United States."

Here is what the department recommends:

I have the honor to recommend and urge that the proposed legislation receive the early and favorable consideration of your committee and the Congress.

This is the same item that the bill has been carrying year after year. The committee cut it out of our bill as reported to the House without knowing the condition of these Indians, and I therefore ask that this amendment be placed in the bill. It was estimated for by the department.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says that we have been carrying the item year after year.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. For four years.

Mr. MANN. On account of the drought conditions?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; we have been giving this amount of money, and we thought this year we could dispense with it. It is from their own funds.

Mr. MANN. I understand that, but we have given them appropriations several times on account of the drought down there. Does the gentleman think, as suggested by some one near me, that next year it will be a flood that we will be asked to provide against?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope not. Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof, as the Good Book says.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that the Indians have already been taught to believe that they can live on what they can get out of the Treasury of the United States, which belongs to them, it is true, and that they will not and do not do any work of any kind?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentieman from Texas a question or two. I would like to know if there is any provision made for the Cheyennes or Arapahoes?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; there is no request from the department in their behalf. Had there been, we would have investigated the matter and made the appropriation if the facts justified it. This amendment has been authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs and at the request of the agent of these Indians and of the department we have agreed to accept the amendment, and I have therefore offered it on the floor. Had the Cheyennes or any other Indians come before the committee and shown the same condition and state of facts, we would have treated them in the same way.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 500 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Chilocco, Okla., and for pay of superintendent $83,500; for general repairs and improvements, $6,500; in all, $90,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this item be passed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment and have it read for information and have it printed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 21, page 23, insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to enter Into an agreement with the Campbell Soil Co., of Lincoln, Nebr., or any other competent persons or company, for a demonstration by said soil-culture company of what is known as the Campbell system of Intensive, scientific soil culture and dry farming, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him; such contract to provide 640 acres out of what is known as the Chilococ Reservation, used in connection with the Chilococ Indian School, in Oklahoma, shall be entered upon by such soil-culture company so contracted with and used for intensive and scientific farming for a period of 20 years; said farm to be open at all times for Indians and other citizens of the United States wishing practical instruction in and information as to the value of such system of farming, the consideration for such instruction being the free use of said land for said period of 20 years: Provided, That the party or parties contracting to operate such farm shall give a sufficient bond, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, for the faithful performance on its part or their part of the conditions of the contract and the observance of the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the proposed amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.
Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. Underwood having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BARNHART, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20728—the Indian appropriation bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14918. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL. Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 20842. An act to provide for a tax on white phosphorus matches, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15471. An act making appropriations for repair, preservation, and exhibition of the trophy flags now in store at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.; and

H. R. 14918. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress. Very respectfully, yours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resignation is accepted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ELECTION OF COMMITTEE MEMBERS.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means and at the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], chairman of the conference of the minority, I nominate Mr. Charles A. Lindbergh, of Minnesota, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Olm-

STED, which has just been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri moves the election of Mr. Lindbergh, of Minnesota, to fill a vacancy on the Committee on the Election of President and Vice President.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.
Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move, at the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, that Mr. J. Hampton Moore, of Pennsylvania, be elected to fill a vacancy now existing on the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means and at the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], chairman of the conference of the minority, I nominate Hon. Marlin E. Olmsted, of Pennsylvania, to fill a vacancy on the Committee on Appropriations, and move his election.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, April 6, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to provision in Agriculture appropriation bill, approved March 4, 1911, statement of exenditures for national forest administration, etc. (H. Doc. No. 681), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Texas, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21960) to authorize the Port Arthur Pleasure Pier Co. to construct a bridge across the Sabine-Neches Canal, in front of the town of Port Arthur, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 502), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MONDELL, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21221) making a grant of lands for school purposes in block No. 31, town site of Powell, Shoshoni reclamation project, Wyoming, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 503), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 6, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. Underwood as Speaker pro tempore.

The Rev. N. H. Holmes, D. D., of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Lord Thou hast been our dwelling place for all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever Thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God."

Thou hast commanded all men everywhere to worship Thee in spirit and in truth; help us we beseech of Thee to do so here

Cause Thy blessing, we pray Thee, to rest upon Thy servant the Speaker of this House, and upon all its Members and their families; may neither death nor any evil befall any of them, nor any harm come near their dwelling places.

"Our Father who art in heaven" help these eminent representatives of a great people in the discharge of their grave responsibilities, and so guide them in their deliberations that they may give proof of not forgetting their accountability to God of infinite wisdom, who giveth of the same liberally to all men that asketh of Thee, and upbraideth not, be wisdom and strength to our President and his Cabinet, to the governors of the States and Territories, and to all in authority in the Nation. Cause them to let all the ends they aim at be their country's, their God's, and truth. For then shall their final award be, "Well done, good and faithful servant," and a grateful country shall hold them in everlasting remembrance.

Save our glorious land from the curse of intemperance, where awful wrecks of men and nations lie scattered adown the centuries of time. Help this generation to know and understand that no earthly power can deliver us from the "wee" of God hurled against the man "who putteth the bottle to his neighbor's mouth and maketh him drunken also."

O God, our help in ages past, our hope for time to come, by the prayers and tears and the bloody sweat of heroic sires, and the unspeakable valor of their worthy sons, Thou hast raised up this Nation to be a great power and inspiration in this world for righteousness and good government, and to incite men and nations to struggle against tyranny and oppression, hear our prayers for our Union, strong and great, for our glorious ship of state. Oh, keep her a-sailing ten thousand years; and Thine shall be the glory and praise now and forever.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6078. An act amending the act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and for other purposes," approved February 19, 1912; and

S. J. Res. 96. Joint resolution appropriating $10,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levee at Mound City, Ill.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows

S. 6078. An act amending the act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and for other purposes," approved February 19, 1912; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, on account of illness in my family in Georgia I necessarily have to be absent for a few days, but before going I desire to make a short statement and submit a request to the House. As is known, matters from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce are not privileged, and therefore they have to take their chances in the course of business. Heretofore, however, I am glad to acknowledge, the House has always been extremely affable, and we have never had the slightest difficulty in securing an agreement on any important matters which we have brought forward for consideration. At this time we have on the calendar a number of important measures reported from our committee, one of them of transcending importance. We have waited until the tariff bills could be disposed of, and the appropriation bills could be well advanced, all of which have now been accom- in the consideration of bills.

plished. The session is now far gone, and we are compelled to ask that the House take some order for the consideration of the bill to which I refer for the maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone. I do not think it stands on a plane with any other measure before the House. I do not think anybody ought to object to its being considered without having to wait on appropriation bills. The latter take two or three weeks each in this House and go to the other end of the Capitol, where they are disposed of in two or three hours. Already we have been chided for not pressing more aggressively for consideration, and apprehension has been expressed that legislation may fail of enactment at this session. I am going to ask unanimous consent that following the Post Office appropriation bill the Panama Canal bill be in order and stand as the continuing order until disposed of subject to the conference reports, Calendar Wednesday, suspension, and unanimous-consent business, and other privileged matters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the Panama Canal bill shall be the continuing order of business, not to interfere with conference reports, suspension days, and Calendar Wednesday, and

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how much time will the bill take?
Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think it will take much

I do not think it will take much time. Certainly not as much as the appropriation bills. It will take a good deal more time at the other end of the Capitol than at this end.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to state to the gentleman that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill has been waiting for four weeks. We have been waiting to get the right of way. Unless the gentleman can indicate about how much time the bill will take, and a very reasonable time, I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have no idea that our bill will consume more than two days' time in general debate and one day under the five-minute rule. The difficulty is that the appropriation bill which the gentleman refers to will perhaps take a couple of weeks in this House, postponing our matter a good deal longer than the consideration of our matter would postpone his business in this House, and his bill will be readily disposed of when it reaches the Senate while our bill would probably be delayed over there by long debate. I believe two or three days will dispose of the bill in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Johnson] to the fact that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson] thinks it will not interfere with privileged bills. All appropriation bills are privileged bills.

Mr. ADAMSON. I refer to such incidental matters as may come up in the course of business. I do not think that we should wait on appropriation bills, because they will take so much time and this will not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the importance of the bill to which the gentleman refers, and there is no question that the House ought to pass the bill and that it ought to become a law before this session of Congress adjourns, and undoubtedly will, but I do not think a continuing order should be made that will interfere with the passage and consideration of appropriation bills. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia to modify his request so it will not interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit-Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

MANNI.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that if the gentleman would ask unanimous consent that this bill would have the same status as the bill reported from a committee, with the right to call it up at any time, that that would give the bill a privileged status, and it could be determined afterwards by agreement between the gentlemen in charge of bills whether it should precede or if some appropriation bills should precede.

Mr. ADAMSON. The great difficulty in the way, Mr. Speaker, is that if we give way to one of the other bills it will mean two weeks' delay; if the other bills give way to this it means perhaps two or three days, and they would even up the time at the other end of the Capitol. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that all I want is to reach some understanding in the House whereby we may come to an early consideration of

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman could get the consent, I suggest he could undoubtedly arrange with the gentleman from South Carolina and others in charge of appropriation bills, or possibly arrange in reference to the time which would be taken The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson] modify his request?

Mr. ADAMSON. I believe I am willing to act on the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if it is proper to do so, and request that this bill have the same status as those other bills which are privileged, with the right to have it called up at any time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request of the gentleman from Georgia is that the canal bill, which is already designated as such, shall have the status of the other bills which are privileged, with the right to call it up at any time on recognition of the Speaker. Is there objection?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to ob-

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Georgia agree that his bill shall consume not more than two days? If so, I am willing to consent that the bill shall have the right of way.

Mr. ADAMSON. The trouble is, Mr. Speaker, that I would not be able to bind all gentlemen by my agreement. I am willing for my part to make only a very short speech myself, but I can not say as to others. However, I do not think it will be possible that we shall consume more than three days.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am willing if the gentleman will agree that the consideration of this bill will not consume more than three days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Spenker, I would like to ask whether it is the intention of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to give those members of the committee who have signed a minority report a fair allotment of time? As I understand it, if this order goes through, the bill can be called up at any time and it would not require unanimous consent as to the allotment of time.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will not denominate that question "a work of supererogation," in the language of Scripture, but I think the gentleman from California [Mr. Know-LAND | knows that I am perfectly willing to be fair with him and the Members signing the minority report, as far as I am concerned, and so far as I can control the time he shall have a fair portion of it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. There have been sufficient requests to those signing the minority report, I think, to occupy a full day in debate, and maybe longer.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will not insist upon anything else than fairness and I will not consent to anything else.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker—— The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose did the gentleman rise?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. To a question of privilege. I see, Mr. Speaker, in this morning's Washington Post a statement as follows:

That Representative Choice B. Randell of Texas "exaggerated" when he charged in the House Thursday that nearly every Member of the House and Senate is "approachable" and "in the employ of some interest or subject to some influence," was the opinion expressed generally at the Capitol yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order. The gentleman from Texas rises to a question of personal privilege, and the Chair desires to hear distinctly what the gentleman may say in order to judge of the character of the question.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. This is a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The statement goes on:

Mr. RANDELL of Texas declared that he did not mean they are corrupt. He has a bill to make it unlawful for Senators and Representatives to receive retainers from corporations engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia will state his point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Chair has not decided that the matter presented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] is a matter of personal privilege or a matter of privilege respecting the House. Which is it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. So far as the gentleman has stated it, it is not a question of personal privilege under the rules.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will pardon me, I rose to a question of privilege. It was the Speaker that misunderstood me and stated that I rose to a question of personal privilege. I rose to a question of privilege, and if the Speaker will pardon me a moment, I will state that the ground on which I claim the right to speak on the question of privilege is that the newspaper statement says I stated on the floor of the House that "nearly every Member of the House and Sen-ate is approachable," putting "approachable" in quotation marks, which means that they were susceptible to corrupt approach. I say that that is a reflection upon the dignity and the honor and the proper procedure of this House, and I rise to a question of privilege. Mr. BARTLETT rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. I merely rose, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of having the precedents set right. Does the Chair decide that the question mentioned is one affecting the privileges of the House's

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Rule IX, relating to questions of privilege, states that-

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of Members, individually, in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to adjourn.

The Chair holds that the language used brings the statement of the gentleman from Texas within the rule, and he is recognized as a matter of privilege.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am sorry indeed that from misapprehension or other reason such a charge should have been made. I can readily understand that men may be inaccurate in their hearing and that possibly some person may have misunderstood what was said on Thursday, but the statement itself is so absurd, when taken in connection with the sentence following it, that it appears to me at least that gentlemen who publish these things in the papers-and they have a right to publish them-would have been put upon inquiry as to whether or not there was a misunderstanding in reference to the statement, To say that nearly every Member of this House and of the Senate is approachable, in the sense that it is published, simply means that they have their hands behind them, wanting something to be put into them fraudulently and clandestinely. To follow that with a statement that "I did not mean they are corrupt" is absolutely absurd; as much so as to say I think that a man is a horse thief, but that I do not question his integrity. Why, if the party understood me to say that he would say, "Why, I certainly am mistaken; I will ask him about that before I publish it."

Mr. Speeker and gentlement I decime to take only a chart

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I desire to take only a short portion of your time. The business of the House is such that we ought to proceed with it in a little while. But it seems to me that I should be derelict in my duty to myself and to you if I did not, on this occasion, call attention to this matter and disabuse the minds of any who may not have read the RECORD, but who did see the statements in the press.

This is not the only report of that kind that has been made in the papers. I am very sorry, indeed, that the misunder-standing occurred. For the benefit of those who have not seen the RECORD and of those who may not see that particular copy, and for the benefit of those who desire to know what the facts are, I will read the only part of my remarks con-cerning which I can understand how a mistake of that kind might have been made. In my remarks on Thursday I said, among other things-

Not only that, but those of us who are not in the employment of "the interests" have rights in the premises. Under present conditions

Mark my language here-and I hope every Member of this House will do me the justice and the courtesy to read every word of my speech of Thursday—

Under present conditions practically every Member is subject to the general suspicion which may apply to so many.

That is very plain. If the law permits Members to be employed by and be the agents or attorneys or officers of corporations, how does any man know whether I am or not? It may be that some may think that is perfectly proper, and others may not think it improper. One may think it violates the ethics, and another may think it does not violate the ethics, but if it is a matter of any consequence, it is a matter worthy of consideration.

And I have no doubt-

Mark every word here-

And I have no doubt that an investigation would show that the majority of the Members of this House, and of the Congress, are engaged in employments to-day which the passage of that bill would stop-

Referring to my bill,

I believe it is true-

Mark what I say-that nine-tenths or perhaps a much larger percentage of those employments are absolutely innocent in themselves, but the situation is there

Now, suppose that bill does cut out employment by any corporation, no matter how innocent the employment. If the condition is such, if the interest of the public is such, that a general law which is intended to reach a special condition would cut that off, the fact remains that while such would be the effect it ought not to stand in the way of a just reform. But it does not follow that the parties are necessarily wrong in engaging in such employment while it is not prohibited by law, and the question would simply arise, "Shall this employment be cut out in order to accomplish the elimination of other employments which we do not desire to continue?" It might be that there were only 10 per cent, or only 5 per cent-there might not be more than one in a hundred-and yet the bill might be good.

Suppose the law against bribery had never been enacted, and the question to-day was to pass a law against bribery. In order to support that have we got to say that the Members of this House, or any number of them, are susceptible to bribery, or taking bribes, or liable to take bribes? Not at all. We simply mean that such a thing might be, and if it ever did occur it ought to be against the law.

Now, here is a bill that refers not to a criminal bargain in reference to a Member's vote, but which refers to a situation of employment, a business connection that might have and would naturally have some personal influence upon the mind of the party engaged. That makes a proper question for consideration. That is not a matter of insult to anybody. If the bill is meritorious, it ought to be passed; if not, it ought to be considered in all seriousness and not passed.

But, my friends, the idea of those on the outside who want to fight this proposition that has been pending here so long seems to be to make a fight between the advocates of the proposition and the Members of Congress. Of course, if it is only a quarrel between the advocates of the bill and the Members of the House and Senate, the advocates of the bill would have very little chance of success. The question is between the people and "the interests" that the people do not want to see have personal business with their Representatives while serving here.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Texas is not now discussing a matter of privilege, either affecting the privileges of the House or of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Texas will please proceed in order.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to trespass either upon the ruling of the Speaker or any proper rule of debate. In order to understand the ruling, I would like to ask the Speaker if he means

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that he was discussing a bill which is pending before the House and not a question of privilege when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] made his point of The gentleman, under the rules of the House, is required to confine his discussion to the pending question of privilege. The Chair will ask the gentleman to proceed in

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I do not understand the Chair to rule that I can not discuss the terms of the bill, in reference to the matters that I did discuss here, but that in general I ought not to discuss the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas was discussing the purposes and merits of a bill pending in Congress, and not the question of privilege to which he rose.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I think there is very little difference in the mind of the Speaker and myself in reference to the rule; but there were some things I have said that probably are not strictly within the rule; but the question, as I understand it, is about and pertaining to everything that I said on this subject before the House on Thursday. desire to read my speech, which I made on that day, in detail. I think I understand the ruling, however, and I will endeavor to keep within it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no objection to the gentleman having all the time he wishes, by unanimous consent, to discuss the bill or to discuss any other proposition he wants to discuss before this House; but I do think it is a bad precedent to establish that under the guise of a privilege, either a privilege affecting the rights of the House or a personal privilege affecting the rights of a Member, we should discuss measures here under a grant of right to discuss them as a matter of personal privilege when the opportunity probably would not be otherwise accorded to discuss the bill.

Now, I desire to say to the gentleman from Texas that if he wants to discuss his bill or any other matter pertaining thereto I am willing that he shall have unanimous consent as long as he desires, but I do not think he ought to do it under a claim of privilege

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I need unanimous consent. The gentleman could not give unanimous consent. I do not think I am any more likely to act under a "guise of privilege" than anyone else that is honest.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not mean it in any offensive way; I meant under any grant of privilege.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Now, Mr. Speaker, the charge goes on to say that certain distinguished Members of Congress have given their views. One begins with Senator Dillingham, of Vermont, chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and it says he said that-

Regardless whether or not such employment in big legal cases would influence a Senator, public sentiment is such that he could not accept. I have no way of knowing how many Members of Congress would come under the provision of the Randell bill, but I think the percentage would be very small.

There are other quotations, Mr. Speaker, which I ask to put in my remarks, because I want all Members of the House to read what I have to say, and I ask unanimous consent that I may print these statements from the paper and extracts from the Record showing what different public men have said on this matter

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record.

Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, there is a misapprehension in reference to this matter that is likely to mislead Members. For instance, they take it that this bill is directed The statement in the paper shows that such at the lawvers. is the idea of gentlemen in this House and in the Senate. Mr. Speaker, on that subject I want to disabuse the minds of my brother Members at both ends of the Capitol. The statement I made in the House, and on the bill about which they were made, is no attack on the lawyers; it is no attack on any particular business in the country. On the contrary, it does not apply to any particular class of men. It expressly forbids that any Member shall be an agent or officer or representative or an attorney of any corporation or other persons interested in legislation.

So you see that the statement in the press that my bill is against receiving retainers was a misstatement of the bill and its scope

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to ask the gentleman if he intended by his remarks the other day, or intends to-day, to cast any reflection upon the Judiciary Committee of the House or any member of that committee in reference to his particular bill?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I am glad the gentleman from Kentucky asked me that question, because I am glad to say that not a word nor a line in my speech has any such tendency. On the contrary, if one will take the speech and read it over and notice everything that is said that pertains to the bill and to the committee he will find that it not only compliments that great committee, but also the honorable gentlemen who occupy positions upon it.

Mr. THOMAS. The gentleman does not intend now to cast any reflection on the committee?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Certainly not; I am not here to reflect on the committee nor on any Member of the House.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Certainly.
Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman did say in his speech this: And I have no doubt an investigation would show that a majority of the Members of this House and of Congress are engaged in employment to-day which the passage of this bill would stop.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Certainly I said that. Mr. MURDOCK. That was in connection with the gentleman's statement about Members of Congress and the big interests in this country being in control—the newspapers generally all over the country carried the statement that the gentleman said he believed that the majority of the Members of Congress were influenced by the so-called big interests. Now, the gentleman did not say any such thing. Is not that true?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I think that is exactly the case. If the gentleman was in when I began my speech this morn-

Mr. MURDOCK. I have listened to the gentleman intently, and I have been here through all the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Then let me repeat for the benefit of every Member of the House and all who may be interested in the subject that it seems to me the statement I complain about in the newspaper was made under a misapprehension and a misunderstanding of what I said in that very sentence the gentleman has read.

Mr MURDOCK. The gentleman did not say then and does not say now that a majority of the Members of Congress are susceptible to influences of big interests. He did not say it then and he does not say it now?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. No; I did not say it then and I do not say it now. The charge was also made that I said they were "approachable." I did not say that. I said that they were in a position where they could be employed, so far as the law was concerned; and I said an investigation of the matter, in my opinion, would disclose the fact that a majority of the In my opinion, would disclose the fact that a majority of the Members of this House and of the Senate were engaged in employments which were prohibited by my bill. I said in that very connection that, in my opinion, nine-tenths, and perhaps a much larger per cent, of these employments were absolutely innocent. In other words, what I meant by "innocent" was that, so far as the purpose of my bill was concerned, if no other employment existed except such innocent employments, then there would be no reason for the bill; that the bill was intended to reach the situation that could not be reached except by a general law prohibiting such employment, and thereby you would cut out many employments absolutely innocent in them-

Now, it is said in this Post article that the honorable Speaker. Mr. Clark, says that he does not believe that more than 5 or 10 per cent of the Members of the House are engaged in occupa-tions where the employment might affect legislation. Why, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that practically was my statement. If 10 per cent, if 5 per cent, of the Members of this House have employments that would be against public policy the bill ought to pass. That is not a statement that these men are corrupt.

Gentlemen, I will not take more of your time. I ask you again to do me the courtesy and the favor to read my bill, to read my speech on the bill, to read the quotations that I will put in with these remarks, and then I ask every Member of this House and of the Senate to do his duty by the people of the United States. No matter whether the papers may criticize me, no matter whether they misunderstand or abuse me, I want you to understand that I am here for the honor of Congress and not for the discredit or dishonor of any Member of it. I am here to speak and work along the line I am talking now and not to reflect upon the motives of my brother Members. If anyone here is in favor of the bill let him go to work for it. There are many Members here on this side and on that side of the Chamber who openly say that it ought to be the law. Then go work for the bill. I thank you, gentleman, for the courtesy. Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EDWARDS. In making the statement that there are men in Congress who are being reached by improper influ-

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I did not say that.

Mr. EDWARDS. In substance.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I did not say it in substanceand with all courtesy to the gentleman, it is rather taxing my patience for such language to be reiterated.

Well, in making the charges you have Mr. EDWARDS.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. That is all right.

Mr. EDWARDS. Does not the gentleman think it is fair to the membership of this House and to the membership of Congress that the gentleman would certainly make no such charges unless he had the facts to back them up, and does not the gentleman think it is fair to the Congress and to the country to give the names of the Members and give the facts? [Applause.]

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Why, Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to give to the Congress nor to the Members the name of any Member that I think is engaged in any such practice, and I say to the gentlemen, the few who applauded that remark, that there is not one of you but who knows that there are Members of Congress engaged in employment which this bill, if you pass

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. Does not the gentleman think his statement that a majority of the Members here are employed in representing corporations

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I did not say that.

Mr. JAMES (continuing). Or interstate concerns that are prohibited by the provisions of his law—does not the gentleman think that is too broad a statement?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I did not say that.

Mr. JAMES. Well, I understood the gentleman-Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I would like Members of the House to listen and hear me repeat again what I said, and this is in cold type in my speech in the RECORD.

Mr. JAMES. If the gentleman will pardon me, I listened a moment ago to the gentleman's statement, and I am not propounding this question in a controversial sense-

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I understand that. Mr. JAMES (continuing). Because I voted for a bill upon this question the gentleman introduced when it was up before, and I stand ready to vote now for a bill prohibiting Members of Congress from representing corporations doing an interstate business; but some Members of Congress like myself on this floor take exception to remarks that are a wholesale denunciation of the entire membership upon this floor, including myself and others who supported the gentleman's bill. Now, I do not believe-and I may say I know the gentleman well, having served with him upon a committee—that the gentleman means to cast any personal reflection upon any Member upon this floor; but they do not like those remarks which he uttered a moment ago, and I called the attention at the time of some of my colleagues sitting near to the gentleman's statement that he believed a majority of the Members were employed whose employ-ment would be forbidden by this bill. Speaking for myself, I desire to say that I have never accepted any case of any sort from any corporation or interstate concern since I have been a Member of Congress.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I simply will reiterate what I said Thursday, and here is the exact language. I know it by heart, but I will read it:

And I have no doubt that an investigation would show that the majority of the Members of this House and of the Congress are engaged in employments to-day which the passage of that bill would stop. I believe it is true that nine-tenths, or perhaps a much larger percentage, of those employments are absolutely innocent in themselves, but the situation is there.

Now, what employment? Is it simply to take a retainer? Why, a man may be a bank president. I do not claim that it is any discredit to remain one when he comes to Congress. He may be an officer of various corporations and receive a salary. My bill would prohibit these things. He may be an agent of various corporations. My bill would prohibit that. He may be an attorney for a municipal corporation. My bill in its present form would stop him from that employment. In the wisdom of the House in passing upon the bill they can make such exceptions as they may desire. They can say the hill shell not be made and the stop of the House in passing upon the bill they can make such exceptions as they may desire. They can say the hill shell not be made as they may desire. ceptions as they may desire. They can say the bill shall not apply to an organization not organized for profit. They may say it shall not apply to municipal corporations; and they might make various exceptions.

It is only my opinion that it would stop some employments now engaged in by a majority of the Members of the House.

Now, is that any reflection on anyone?

Mr. JAMES. The impression that was gathered by the pub-Mr. JAMES. The impression that was gathered by the public, I am sure, from reading the remarks of the gentleman and the drift of the speech was this, that a majority of the membership of this House were engaged in accepting retainers and in employments and businesses upon which they were called upon to legislate-

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I did not say that.

Mr. JAMES. And I ask the gentleman—

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I am glad the gentleman calls attention to that, because it specially emphasizes what I am saying. I am not apologizing to anybody, but I am simply endeavoring to get this matter straight.

Mr. JAMES. That unfortunately is the impression the newspapers sought to give that might be gathered from the remarks.

papers sought to give that might be gathered from the remarks of the gentleman.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. That is the reason I rose to a question of privilege.

Mr. HAMH/TON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Certainly.
Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does not the gentleman know from his experience here on the floor of this House and his knowledge of the membership of the House that man after man who has served here for any length of time has absolutely given up his whole law practice, and has no practice at all and never receives a retainer of any kind, and would not the imputation which has been given circulation be a reflection upon such a man as that?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I think not, because I am one of them, an attorney

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Then the gentleman ought to be fair to himself.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I am, and that is the reason I have been advocating this bill.

Mr. HAMIL/TON of Michigan. Man after man has come here and gone out of the Congress poorer than when he came in, and those men ought to receive fair credit.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. That is all true, and I stand here for the honor of those men and for the honor of the Congress. and I do not cast any reflection upon any man because he is a Member of Congress. On the contrary, I stand for the honor of the Congress when I say——
Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. There is one thing I want to say in this connection right now, before my time is up.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas yielded the floor a few minutes ago, and then, without permission, took the floor again to answer a question propounded by my colleague from Georgia, and now my point of order is, having yielded the floor, the gen-tieman has no further right to the floor at all.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] did not yield the floor. He merely indicated that he was going to quit speaking, and at that moment he was interrupted. I hope the gentleman will not be taken off his feet by a point of order.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to say all he wants on this subject. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox | made the point of order that the gentleman had already yielded the floor. The Chair holds that the gentleman had not yielded the floor, because he had not taken his seat.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I want to call the unprejudiced and unbiased attention of the gentlemen of this House—and I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, because in his tone, if I mistake not, he is not altogether feeling right, although I do not understand why he should not. [Laughter.] It will be a great source of regret to have anyone—especially the gentleman from Alabama-have any personal feeling about this. I say this because of the applause which followed his peculiar tone and manner.

Mr. CLAYTON. I said that in perfect good faith. I am in no wise responsible for the laughter and applause that might follow what I may have said, nor am I responsible for any derision that may have followed your remarks.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want the attention of every Member of the House, and I ask him just to lay aside all matters of feeling and look squarely at the proposition. If a statement that the majority of this Congress are engaged in business that would be prohibited by my bill is a reflection upon them, is not that sufficient proof that the bill ought to pass? Just stop and think about it. If it is an insult to say you have such engagements, then ought not such engagements to be prohibited? If the bill has no merit, then this statement has no insult. But the bill has merit, and the statement is not an insult. The bill is intended to prohibit employment not best for the proper consideration of the public business. In other words, Members of Congress should not be officers, agents, employees, or attorneys of corporations and others interested in legislation while serving the people in the making of laws.

Mr. GARNER. I understood my colleague to say that his contention was that a man was unfit for Congress if he should devote his attention to the public interests, according to your law?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I did not say anything of the kind. The gentleman will pardon me. I do not see why he thought so.

Mr. GARNER. That is why I thought so.
Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The gentleman was here and helped the Democrats put the Republicans in a hole on this question, and every Democrat voting on this side was in favor of the measure, and I suppose the gentleman was. I am in favor of the bill, and the bill says that a Member shall not be an officer, agent, or attorney of corporations or any person having an interest in legislation.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I want to ask the gentleman a question. A minute ago, in answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Garner], he said the gentleman from Texas helped to put the Republicans in the hole. Does the gentleman want to convey the suggestion that Republicans are engaged in transactions that would make them amenable to the provisions of his bill any more than Democrats?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I meant to say this, that when the penal law was up I offered amendments practically the same as my bill, and the Democrats voted to put them in the law and the Republicans voted against them, and the Record will show there were 88 votes on this side and 109 on that side; and I say that everyone on this side was a Democrat and every one of the 109 were Republicans but 3.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. You do not mean to suggest that everybody who voted against your bill was corrupt?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. In my opinion, we did show to the country that the Republicans were not in favor of a reform like this and that the Democrats were in favor of it; and I think it had something to do perhaps with the election of 1908. Now, as to whether or not one man is more corrupt than another man, I have nothing to say.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman believe a man, when he is elected to Congress, ought to devote his time and attention to the practice of law whether he represents a corporation or not?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What was the date of that vote?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. January, 1908.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Was it in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. It was when we were considering the codification of the criminal law.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Was it a record vote?
Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Yes; it was in the Record. I will read it to you.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Was it an "aye" and "no" vote?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. No; it was in Committee of the Whole; a record vote could not be taken.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas rose sometime ago to speak to a question of privilege. He has spoken nearly an hour, and debate has now assumed a phase with ref-erence to a bill that passed in 1908.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I know the Chair and the House will not hold me entirely responsible for the digression. conform to the rule. I wish again to appeal to every Member of the House, regardless of party, to consider this question about which we are talking. Do not let it resolve itself into any question between you and me. Consider the measure and do your duty to yourselves and to your country. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed for 20 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker-Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Oklahoma will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] asks unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, we are found in this attitude: We are here in the middle of an appropriation bill, it is late in the session, and Congress is trying to proceed with the business of the House. I do not know what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henny] has in his mind to speak upon, but I take it that it is on a question of personal privilege just presented by his colleague, Mr. RANDELL. Of course, I dislike to stand in the gentleman's way, but the Indian bill ought to be finished to-day.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If there is any objection to it, Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House this morning. It is in regard to the matter that has been discussed-pertaining to that subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his request.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker—
Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes in which to make some remarks with reference to the matter referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL].

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the proposition now resolves itself into this: Two gentlemen have now elected to reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL]. There may be 20 others who will elect to reply. The charges involve every man in the House equally. I expect at this rate that the proceedings could be indefinitely prolonged, so that each one of the 394 Members of the House may desire to reply. I do not think that the House should consider this matter at such great length. The gentleman has said he meant no reflection. We are paying too much attention to an evident misunderstanding.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman from Oklahoma think that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, before which the bill referred to by the gentleman from Texre [Mr. RANDELL] is now pending, ought at least to have the courtesy extended to him of making a reply to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask for five minutes in which to make a brief statement.

MANN. Make it 10 minutes.

Mr. Sp

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman be allowed 10 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. James] a moment ago suggested that there is some reason why the gentheman from Alabama [Mr. Clayton] should be heard rather than any other person. I have read the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL], and I must admit that I do not see why the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Clayton] should be permitted to reply more than the chairman of any other committee who was not present when the remarks were delivered.

Mr. JAMES. I did not say that I understood that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary was not present when the remarks were made, but he is the chairman of the committee which has custody and jurisdiction of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL], and I think the gentleman from Oklahoma will see the propriety of permitting him to make a statement.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that at the expiration of the 10 minutes the Indian appropriation bill be

Mr. JAMES. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Clayton] be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. I hope there will be no objection to that. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I now give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I shall object to any further extension of time after the expiration of the 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Clayton] asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, this is an occasion calling for the calm consideration on the part of the House of the matters and things that have been referred to in the course of the remarks made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] could, if the rules of this House permitted me so to do, tell to the membership here that perhaps too much regard for the feelings of the gentleman from Texas has kept the Committee on the Judiciary from making an announcement on his measure to

Mr. Speaker, measures are presented to Congress for different purposes. I do not stop here and now to go into that matter, or to intimate for what purpose the particular bill was introduced by the gentleman from Texas. I am not concerned with his purposes or with his motives.

The Committee on the Judiciary of this House is charged with the high responsibility of passing upon the constitutionality and the wisdom and the necessity for measures that go to that com-It is a delicate and difficult duty to meet in most cases. It has been peculiarly delicate and difficult in this case because of the personal relations between some of the members of the committee and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL]-a very kind and cordial feeling.

The committee—if I were permitted to transcend the rules of the House—has had under consideration not only once, but often, his measure, and had accorded to him, not only once, but several times, the opportunity to be heard in behalf of his bill, in advocacy of it. There has been accorded to him a full hearing, let me repeat. The committee has considered his bill as deliberately and dispassionately as Members of this House and as honest men should consider every legislative proposition. [Applause.] As lawyers, as honest men, the members of that committee have unanimously reached the conclusion, so far as I am able to ascertain or state it, that the gentleman's bill ought not for a multitude of reasons to be enacted into law. [Apause.] We have analyzed the bill-Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Sp plause.]

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. I have but a few minutes, and the gentleman knows the embarrassment under which I labor by reason of this limited time.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman inform me when the committee came to that conclusion?

Mr. CLAYTON. I say the members of that committee

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Has not the subcommittee reported a number of amendments to the bill to the full committee?

Mr. CLAYTON. I think that some of the amendments were ridiculous, and I may say that I also think some of the proposed provisions of the bill are absurd.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. They were ridiculous, were they? Mr. CLAYTON. In my opinion some of those amendments were ridiculous. I am expressing my opinion and making no charge. But in order to give some reason for reporting the gentleman's bill to the full committee certain amendments were suggested that addded nothing to the supposed merits of the bill, if it ever had any; and I, for one, would not agree to such.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I may say that I had the aid of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Davis]—and I want to stop here long enough to say that there is no better lawyer in the whole scope of my acquaintance than the gentleman from West Virginia [applause]—and we have studied that bill, anxious, if we could, to please the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL]. We have analyzed it, and we find that all that there is in the bill calling for legislation that would be wise is now the law. For instance, the matter of free passes. That is a restricted term. The gentleman from Texas does not want free passes to be given. The law already prevents transportation companies from furnishing transportation—a broader term than "free passes," to which the gentleman would narrow the terms of the existing law.

Now, the prohibition of free passes provided in the bill is on the statute books in broader and better terms than those employed by the gentleman in his bill. And what is the necessity for a statute on that subject when it is now the law? If that statute be not sufficiently comprehensive let the gentleman amend it by a bill for that purpose. And as to claims against the Government, that is provided for by existing law. No Member of Congress can prosecute claims against the Government.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The gentleman does not mean to say that my bill covers claims against the Government? The bill does not touch that.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am of the opinion that some phases of it do touch that. And so when you go through with the analysis of the different propositions involved it could be stripped down to one proposition, in the opinion of some of the members of the committee. Possibly a bill could be passed limiting it to lawyers for transportation companies. I say possibly it could be stripped to that, and I merely express the opinion of some of the members of the committee.

Now, I have here with me this analysis, and I ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] in so important a matter to let me put before the House the analysis of this bill, and leave it to the judgment of the Members of this body whether or not this committee have acted wisely in not reporting the measure of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] to this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama have 15 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, I ask that debate on this question be confined to 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this is a request for unanimous consent, and only one request can be submitted at a time. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I am very much obliged to the other gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] for his indulgence.

Before putting this analysis in its entirety before the House, permit me to say in behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary that we have not only given full and patient hearing to this bill, but to many other matters that have come before that committee at this session of Congress, and we have invariably tried to be fair, to meet public necessities, and to recommend to this House the passage of wise laws. We have also into this House the passage of wise laws. We have also invariably tried, Mr. Speaker, not to bring into this House anything that was indefensible. The membership of that committee would scorn to so prostitute their intellectual integrity as to bring from the great law committee of this House a measure that was indefensible in order to take care of their own fortunes in a campaign or to promote the political fortunes of any Member of this House in his campaign. [Applause.] We act deliberately and conscientiously.

Let me also say that I am a member of a working and longsuffering committee. And whenever any of you get on the Judiciary Committee you will realize that the problems that vexed the patience of Job were minor in their nature; and if Job had been put up against the vexations and annoyances that harass that committee and its members he would have thought his troubles were light ones. Gentlemen, you would welcome some of the afflictions of that ancient celebrity; you would rather have boils all over you and be unable to sit even in the ashes, as he sat, than to have such troubles put upon you as are thrust upon the members of the Judiciary Committee of this House. [Laughter.] So, with Job-like patience here and before the committee, I have listened and the committee have listened to many gentlemen with their complaints and with their ideas, real or imaginary. It is not every man that thinks he is charged with an idea who has an idea. Some men imagine they are thinking. Some men imagine they are proposing legislation. Some men imagine that they need a bill for campaign purposes. Often gentlemen labor here under a mistaken belief of what the people will say about our conduct, because it is feared that somebody back at home will misunderstand them. I wish I had more time to talk on that subject. Let us trust to the honesty and the good sense of the people always.

But to the analysis of this bill. I ask those of you who are lawyers and you intelligent laymen to listen to this analysis. And let me say on behalf of myself that three months ago, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I asked that we come before this House with this analysis of this bill and the reasons for our action, and stand upon our position as being right, and meet all the criticisms that might be hurled at us here or else-

Section 1 of this bill forbids all persons, natural and artificial, within five enumerated classes, to give any Member of either branch of Congress or the Federal judiciary any free transportation of persons or property, any frank or franking privilege, any money or other thing of value, or to transfer, directly or indirectly, anything of value for an inadequate consideration.

The class of donors inveighed against are: (a) Any railroad company, or sleeping-car, dining-car, steam-beat, express, telegraph, or telephone company; in other words, common carriers and companies already subject to the act to regulate commerce and prohibited from doing the things denounced in this bill.

(b) "Any company incorporated by or under an act of the Congress of the United States"; chief among which are, of course, the national banks.

(c) Companies "organized under the laws of any State," which includes, of course, all that great host of corporations, both large and small, by which the bulk of the commercial business of the country is now carried on, no matter how trifling their size or how restricted their purpose, and also all municipal, quasi public, and eleemosynary corporations.

(d) "Any corporation, person, or firm engaged in interstate commerce" which would fairly include every individual engaged in manufacturing, mining, or merchandizing in the United States on any other than the most restricted scale.

In its scope this bill is as boundless almost as God Almighty's It is as boundless in its scope as the whole territory of the United States, including every kind of business and almost every kind of occupation imaginable, so that it would prevent Members of Congress from doing well-nigh everything except to come here and be Members of Congress. You could not engage in any activity of life that an ordinary man engages Have we fallen so low, has the American Congress become so despicable, that we must pass this bill? During the vacations of Congress you, Mr. Speaker, and I could not follow some pursuit to supplement our salaries to support our families. Have the people gotten so suspicious of us that we must by this sort of sweeping and drastic statute cut ourselves off from everything else? I apprehend not. Returning to the analysis:

Any corporation, person, or firm "that is directly interested in proposed or pending legislation in the Congress. class, in view of the multitude and diversity of the subjects proposed and offered for congressional action, may be fairly said to open at some time or other for every citizen of the United States and the dependencies thereof.

It will be seen that this bill is not aimed at bribery, a crime sufficiently covered by existing law. It does not content itself with denouncing gifts made with criminal intent to influence the action, vote, or decision of Members of Congress in their official capacity, but announces the far broader doctrine, new to the law as we have it, that any gift made to any Member of Congress or to any Federal judge by any of the persons named, whether the motive be one of friendship, courtesy, or charity, and with whatsoever absence of intent to affect his official conduct, is so inimical to the public welfare and so severe a strain upon the moral fiber of the recipient as to be per se criminal.

Questions as to the value of the thing given, the relationship existing between the donor and donee, all these are brushed aside along with the benign and universal maxim of the criminal law that nemo reus est nisi mens sit rea. The gift of a box of cigars from a friendly wholesale merchant on Christmas is clearly within the purview of this bill. Without delaying to suggest them, countless illustrations will present themselves where, in the customary intercourse of daily life, such a doctrine reduces itself-using the word in no unkind sense-to an absurdity.

In so far as free transportation, franks, or franking privileges are concerned, these subjects are already embraced within the laws to regulate commerce, and the inhibition is therein extended, as it should be, not only to Members of Congress but to the public at large.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may finish this.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have time to conclude the statement that he is now making,

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How long a time does the gentleman want?

Mr. CLAYTON. I should say it would take me 5 or 10 minutes

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabana may conclude his statement.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I shall have to object to that. Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent that he may conclude his statement, not to exceed 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman modifies his request, and asks unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for not exceeding 10 minutes.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question. I think that is only fair to me.

Mr. CLAYTON. Very well; the gentleman sees the difficulty under which I labor on account of the limited time.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I do not want to object, but I want to understand the gentleman. Is the statement that the gentleman is reading from a statement from the committee or one prepared by the gentleman himself or by somebody else?

Mr. CLAYTON. I can easily answer that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Mr. CLAYTON. I will state to the gentleman that this is a statement, the joint product of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Davis] and myself.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Did the gentleman ever give me the benefit of it during any hearings before the committee?

Mr. CLAYTON. We did not.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Or of any of the statements contained in it?

Mr. CLAYTON. We did not; and we did not feel called upon to do it. There is no reason why we should have done so; but I want to say that on yesterday, after the gentleman's remarks had been printed, some members of the committee and other Members of the House expressed great dissatisfaction, and took exceptions to some of the statements made by the gentleman from Texas. I said to the gentleman from Texas in the cloakroom, "I hope you will stay over here next week, because I think the committee will at least agree with me that cause I think the committee will at least agree with me that we ought to make a public statement in regard to your bill on the floor of the House. I think it but fair to you that you should be here in the city." That was the substance of it, and that is the reason I told him. He told me that he might go to Texas. I then told him that I could not tell what the committee would do, but very likely the committee would make a statement to the House in regard to his bill.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. This is the statement that the continuous from Alphanus referred to?

gentleman from Alabama referred to?
Mr. CLAYTON. This is a statement that was in preparation and would have been submitted to the committee, and I believe that the committee would have unanimously indorsed this statement which I am now making. But in order that the gentle-man from Texas may be perfectly at rest, the committee will take action on the matter and doubtless will favor an expression in entire accord with the statement I am now making. Of course the gentleman from Texas knows that he could have moved to discharge the committee from the consideration of this bill at any time, and the gentleman knows that I told him that neither I nor any other member of the committee would oppose such a motion. In this way it was possible for the gentleman to have gotten his bill before the House.

Returning to the analysis. Moreover, broad as are the classes of donors named, including in express terms all of the corporations of the country, municipal, quasi public and private, com-mercial and eleemosynary, and most of its active citizenship, what reason can be assigned why they should not be further broadened, if the principle of the measure is to obtain, so as to include expressly all persons, both natural and artificial, and all unincorporated associations of natural persons, such as the various labor organizations, trades unions, farmers' alliances, temperance organizations, and fraternal orders, all of which are from time to time aroused to interest in legislation and in litigation?

Section 2 of the bill denounces the receipt by Members of Congress or judges of any free transportation, frank or franking privilege, or gift of money or other thing of value, but for some reason unknown to your committee the enumeration of prohibited donors is different from that of section 1. This will appear when the several classes are similarly arranged; for example:

(a) Any railroad, steamboat, sleeping-car, dining-car, or express company, telegraph, or telephone company.

(b) Any company chartered by an act of Congress.(c) Any company "organized under the laws of any State."

(d) Any corporation or firm engaged in interstate commerce, or

(e) Officers or agents of any such firm, company, or companies.

Thus the last class in section 1-corporations, firms, or persons directly interested in proposed or pending legislation-

Is omitted, and officers or agents of the corporations named are added. Nor does this section contain the inhibition of the first against the transferring, "directly or indirectly, of anything of value for an inadequate consideration." Your comthing of value for an inadequate consideration." mittee can see no reason for this difference.

Section 3 goes beyond the mere interchange of gifts, and forbids any Member of Congress to-Directly or indirectly hold or take any office, employment, or service, or receive any salary, fee, or pay as officer, agent, representative, or attorney from any—

(a) Railroad company, or ship, express, telegraph, telephone, or sleeping-car company, or any public-service corporation—

If the railroad attorney is to be excluded, why not exclude

the ambulance chaser? [Applause.]

the ambulance chaser? [Applause.]

(b) Any corporation chartered by an act of Congress of the United States, or

(c) Organized under the laws of any State, or

(d) Any firm, company, or corporation organized or conducted in violation of the antitrust laws of the United States, or

(e) That is charged with or has been convicted of a violation of any of the antitrust laws of the United States, or

(f) Any corporation engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, traffic, or business, or commerce, or business between any Territories, or any State or Territory, or between the District of Columbia and any State or Territory of the United States, or any foreign power, or

(g) Any person, firm, or corporation interested in legislation or other business of Congress (character not specified), existing or anticipated.

Lines 8 to 16, page 4 of the bill, embrace the attempted penal clause of this section, which, referring as it does to any "company or person" or "officer or agent of such company or companies" violating its provisions, is clearly misplaced, and lacks connection with the residue of the section, while section 4 of the bill defines the crime of the Member or the judge violating its provisions as a "high misdemeanor," and prescribes severe

No comment need be made upon the broad field of employment or service from which it is thus sought to exclude Members of Had the bill forbidden them to accept during their terms of office any employment of any other character whatsoever, it would have been easier to understand its purpose. Your committee assumes that every Member of Congress agrees that during his term of office no outside concerns should be permitted to interfere with the discharge of his official duties; but, on the other hand, it is unquestionably true that from time to time, more especially during the recesses of Congress, he may, without subtracting in the least from his efficiency as a Member, give some attention to other matters. Nor, indeed, could it be otherwise so long as Members of Congress are taken from the ranks of men active in the affairs of their various communities. Apparently the draftsman of the bill realized this, and so the exclusion is not absolute nor the bill based upon this predicate.

But the clear inference of this section of the bill is that employment in any capacity, although entirely disconnected from official duties, by any person of the classes named is incompatible with independence on the part of the Member employed and thus hostile to the public interest. Your committee can not concur in this suggestion. Many, perhaps a majority of the Members of Congress in both branches, have been, are, and no doubt will be, lawyers; no grosser reflection could be made, not only upon them, but upon the profession as a whole, than the assertion that they were unable to draw with conscientious nicety the line between professional employment and public duty.

That lawyers have done so in all times the history of the profession in all ages attests. Nor, as to the Members of Congress who are not lawyers is there any warrant for the imputation that personal independence and public loyalty are at the command of any chance employer. If there be any instances to the contrary, they may be safely left to the judgment of their constituencies.

Nor is this third section of the bill more consistent than those which precede it. If employees of all the various classes named are to be excluded on the ground of the employer's prospective or possible interest in legislation or "business of Congress," why not also the officers, agents, representatives, or attorneys of labor organizations, trades-unions, temperance societies, or farmers alliances; or why not those whose interests in trade or litigation or in legislation would be or are adverse to the various classes enumerated? Or if the officer of a national bank or the attorney of a mining or manufacturing corporation, for instance, is to be forbidden a seat in Congress, why should the principal stockholder or the chief owner of either-whose interest is certain and direct and not the tenuous connection of a chance employment-be permitted to sit?

Your committee is unwilling to believe that the moral stamina of those holding positions in the legislative or judicial department of the Government is so weak that it demands the pretense of support offered by this bill. Were it so, it would be indeed a sad day for the country.

We repeat that in so far as the crime of bribery is concerned, the most drastic and sweeping provisions are to be found in the existing law. And in so far as the prohibition of free transportation and franking privileges are concerned, by common carriers of whatever class, the act to regulate commerce and the several acts amendatory thereof are broad and ample.

Of the measure as a whole your committee can only say that it is, in their judgment, not only an unnecessary piece of legislation, but one the passage of which would cast reflection upon the honor of any person holding any of the positions of public trust specified, which would fan the flames of popular distrust against the legislative and judicial branches of the Government, and would bring both them and those responsible for the passage of the bill into well-merited contempt.

Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that attorneys and agents of so many concerns are inveighed against in this bill, and the stockholders, the people who own the companies, are left free to come into Congress? Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that the attorneys of almost every kind of a corporation are said by this bill to be unfit to sit in Congress? And why is it that the damage-suit lawyers, who by themselves or their agents chase every ambulance, or the "ambulance chasers," as they are ordinarily termed, are permitted by this bill to sit in high places? Is a damage-suit lawyer any better than any other sort of a lawyer? In order that the state of the existing law as to bribery and corruption may appear, let me here quote certain sections of the act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, passed March 4, 1909, and now in force, known as the Criminal Code:

set the Criminal Code:

Sec. 39. Whoever shall promise, offer, or give, or cause or procure to be promised, offered, or given, any money or other thing of value, or shall make or tender any contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money, or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, to any officer of the United States, or to any person acting for or on behalf of the United States in any official function, under or by authority of any department or office of the Government thereof, or to any officer or person acting for or on behalf of either House of Congress, or of any committee of either House, or both Houses thereof, with intent to influence his decision or action on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may at any time be pending, or which may by law be brought before him in his official capacity, or in his place of trust or profit, or with intent to influence him to commit or aid in committing, or to collude in, or allow, any fraud, or make opportunity for the commission of any fraud, on the United States, or to induce him to do or omit to do any act in violation of his lawful duty, shall be fined not more than three times the amount of money or value of the thing so offered, promised, given, made, or tendered, or caused or procured to be so offered, promised, given, made, or tendered, and imprisoned not more than three years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first present a personal request.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LITTLEPAGE was granted leave of absence, for six days, on account of important business.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20728, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20728, the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. BARNHART in the chair.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the Chilocco School matters are now pending, but I desire to ask unanimous consent to turn to page 22, line 15, an Oklahoma item, and ask to reoffer an amendment, after the word "benefit," in line 21, down to the end of the paragraph. I will nt, in line 21, down to the end of the paragraph. I will modify that request by offering the whole paragraph, beginning with page 22, line 15, and ending on line 4, page 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] asks unanimous consent to return to page 22 for the reconsideration of the paragraph beginning with line 15 to page 23, line 4. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment, beginning with line 15, on page 22, and ending with line 4, on page 23—the original paragraph. Will the Clerk please report the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state the amendment again?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The amendment begins with line 15, page 22, and ends with line 4, page 23, of the bill. It reinstates the paragraph that went out yesterday on a point of order. We desire to reconsider that matter, and I offer it as an amendment in lieu of the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, for the support of the agency and pay of employees maintained for their benefit, and he is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury the further sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, for the construction and equipment of an Indian hospital upon the Fort Sill Indian School Reservation in Oklahoma, to be used only for the benefit of Indians belonging to said tribes; in all, $65,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment for the purpose of saying this is a paragraph that I made a point of order on yesterday and on which it was stricken out. I had some doubt yesterday in regard to the advisability of making this appropriation. Usually I resolve those doubts in favor of the committee, and especially on health matters. While I have still some doubt, I have concluded, so far as I am concerned now, to resolve the doubt in favor of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], and therefore I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, just before the committee rose on yesterday I offered an amendment, which was read, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make a lease of certain lands belonging to the Chilocco Indian Reservation to a company, or any person, for the purpose of experimenting with intensive farming. And to that amendment the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire] reserved a point of order. to speak briefly to the merits of the amendment without refering to the point of order involved. The Chilocco Indian Reservation embraces 13½ sections of land, about a section and a quarter of which is now under cultivation. The remainder is raw prairie and good land in a rich, agricultural county in one of the very best sections of our whole country. is used merely for raising grass. The hay is cut in season and sold by the Chilocco Indian School. The object of this amendment is to establish, under the supervision of that school, an experimental farm for intensive farming. It is not intended that it shall be a farm solely to demonstrate the value of dry farming, for indeed we have generally seasonable rains there. But the purpose is to have a farm there upon which the best methods of farming may be practiced and taught. Everybody knows now that farmers differ one from another in the success they achieve upon their farms, and that the reason for the difference in their success is not in the soil necessarily, not in the climate necessarily, but the manner in which the soil is cultivated and the farming carried on.

I was at the White House some months ago and saw a number of boys ranging in age from 9 to 15. It was learned they were boys who had been engaged in intensive farming and were at the White House at the request of the President, who highly commended them. It was stated that each of them had cultivated 1 acre of ground and had raised corn upon that 1 acre to the amount of from 80 to 211 bushels to the acre. A farmer cultivating 160 acres of land out in the midcontinent thinks he has a good crop of corn if he has 35 and 40 bushels to the acre. It would be better for him and better for the country if the farmers throughout the land knew how to produce 100, 150, or 200 bushels to the acre. The Campbell system, intensive or dry farming—and by the way, I have no connection with it, although I think and know how it should be done—

Mr. MANN. I suppose it is a desire to have a distinguished

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not at all, although the name is worthy. Mr. MANN. It does not require proof. You will admit it. [Laughter.] But a man by the name of Campbell did demonstrate that with certain systems farming could be carried on successfully in dry sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas

[Mr. CAMPBELL] has expired.
Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question? Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Under this scientific style or culture system. which is advocated by this Campbell Co., can you not produce larger crops than are otherwise produced in that part of the country?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Why do they not buy 600 acres and make more money than they are now able to do, by using their own systems?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is a pertinent question. This company is teaching farming. The company is in Omaha, I understand, and has established farms at points throughout the country and is teaching farming, showing that by their system better crops can be produced than by the system usually followed throughout the country.

Mr. MANN. If that is the case, why do not they get rich by farming?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Let me ask, Does the gentleman from Illinois, who is a practical farmer, deny that by intensive farming increased crops can be produced?

Mr. MANN. Why, not at all. But I doubt very much whether there is any occasion for the Government to give the use of land for the purpose of demonstrating the fact that careful culture and intensive farming will produce better crops. If these people have a patent method for producing larger crops, why do they not apply it for their own benefit?

Mr. CAMPBELL. For the same reason that the gentleman from Illinois, who is a practical farmer and knows that by intensive farming crops can be doubled and even quadrupled, and he does not engage extensively in intensive farming. The land in question is rich and raises nothing but prairie hay. Without expense to the Government or to the Indians, this land could be used in such a way as to be highly valuable to that whole section of country. Now it is raw land that is producing nothing.

Mr. MANN. I am thinking of doing that instead of staying here. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope the gentleman will not decide to We have 12½ sections of raw land, producing prairie hay, that ought to be utilized in demonstrating the value of intensive farming in that section of the country.

If the American Indian is not to be driven off the face of the earth entirely, his future will continue on the farm. He will be a farmer rather than a mechanic or a business man. I see no reason why, under the direction of that school, it would not be wiser to utilize 1 section of the 12 sections of land in establishing and maintaining a model farm than to leave it as raw prairie. It is true that gentlemen can ask questions, Why do this? I say do it because it will be of value to the Indian; do it because it will be of value to that property and to that portion of our country. I would rather have that 1 section of land after it had been cultivated for 20 years by this company, or any other company, than have it as raw land at the end of 20 years. It will be more valuable to that school, and it will be more valuable to the people of the United States, and it will dians and to that section of the country The fact that it has not been done before is not a reason why it should not be done now. The fact that this company would profit by it is not an argument against it, because at the same time that this company is profiting by the use of the land, so will every Indian who attends that school and that whole be more valuable during all that period of 20 years to the In-country profit by it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had asked unanimous consent for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to ask for five minutes.

It was 10. I ask for 5 minutes more, Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there ob-

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It has been suggested that it is unfair to that section of the country to ask Congress to authorize the leasing of a section of land for dry farming, for fear that it will give the country the impression that that country is in a semiarid section. The purpose is not to demonstrate the value solely of dry farming, but to demonstrate the value of intensive scientific farming for the benefit of the Indian, for the benefit of the white man, for the benefit of everybody in that whole section of the country.

I have some resolutions here that have been drawn up and adopted at Arkansas City, near that section of the country, and a letter, which I shall ask leave to insert as a part of my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Camp-BELL] asks unanimous consent to insert a letter and a resolution in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection,

Following is the letter and resolution referred to:

THE COMMERCIAL CLUB OF ARKANSAS CITY, KANS., January 17, 1912.

Hon. P. P. CAMPBELL, M. C., Washington, D. C.:

Our Commercial Club and the farmers of this section of the country have been giving careful and serious attention and study to W. H. Campbell's system of intensive scientific soil culture and farming during the past two years. We have satisfied ourselves that in most seasons our section of country has a sufficient rainfall, if properly conserved, to mature any crops that can be grown in our section of country. In a crude way some of our farmers have been experimenting by following as nearly as they could the system advocated by Mr. Campbell.

The Campbell Soil Culture Co., of Lincoln, Nebr., who have capitalized the ideas of Mr. Campbell on the question of scientific farming, have made a proposition to our Commercial Club which we believe, with some modifications, perhaps, is a practical proposition. And we are anxious to have the same carried through, and we believe that if it can be that it will result in grent good in developing our farming interests in this section of the country and the obtaining of results from farming that will place our soil as the most productive of any in the world.

interests in this section of the country and the obtaining of results from farming that will place our soil as the most productive of any in the world.

The average farmer says in regard to the Campbell system that it is all right, but it can not be successfully carried on in large farming. The Campbell Soil Culture Co. proposes to take 640 acres and to carry on an experimental demonstration farm upon this tract of land for a period of not less than 10 years—our idea would be to make it not less than 20—conducting a model farm in every way, in improvements, machinery, culture of the soil, and commercial truck gardening in the most intense and scientific manner; pure seed, horticulture fruit, and ornamental trees and shrubbery, and to show to the people, and farmers in particular, that this farming can be carried on successfully on a large farm as well as upon a small tract. The farm would always be open to agricultural students who may wish to secure firsthand information on genuine farming. This instruction by observation would be without cost.

The Government owns 13½ sections of land immediately south of this city, known as the Chilocco Reservation, used in connection with the Chilocco Indian Schools. What better thing could Congress do than to authorize the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of the General Land Office to enter into a contract with the Campbell Soil Culture Co., agreeing that if it will maintain an experimental demonstration farm on 640 acres of this land on the lines suggested above for a period of not less than 15 years, and 25 years if they could be induced to enter into a contract for that length of time, that at then the Government would convey to it said land in fee simple.

The Government is expending hundreds of thousands of dollars annually in maintaining experimental stations at all of our State agricultural schools and at other stations. This proposition is in line with what the Government is comment to will not adopt any means that would be more effective and cost as l

J. Mack Love, President. WM. Klunerly, Secretary Commercial Club of Arkansas City, Kans.

ARKANSAS CITY, KANS., January 19, 1912.

Hon. P. P. CAMPBELL, Washington, D. C.

Hon. P. P. Campbell, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Ma. Campbell: I want to supplement the official commercial club letter which I herewith inclose you by a personal appeal of my own in support of this proposition.

I have been investigating Mr. H. W. Campbell's system of scientific intense soil culture for the past six or eight years and have observed the results growing out of an intelligent application of his theories in different parts of the country. And I have satisfied myself that in the semiarid sections of our country it is the most efficient idea that has been advanced to improve our farming methods. It does not require any extra expenditure of money in the way of improvements such as surface irrigation or subirrigation would necessitate. It requires very little additional labor, but it does require a scientific knowledge of your soil and its conditions and requirements, what to do, and when to do it, with practically the same tools that have been used by our farmers in the past. This knowledge and intelligence applied to farming, I am satisfied, will bring as great results as this letter inclosed predicts.

I know that there are some most respectable authorities that are not favorably impressed with Mr. Campbell's idea. I know that some of the employees in the Bureau of Agriculture are not enthusiastic over his idea. Some of these people have theories of their own. I have investigated different theories and they all have more or less merit in them, but my observation and experience leads me to believe that there are none of them that equals Mr. Campbell's.

Here is a proposition that will do, in my opinion, more good for the farming interests of Kansas and Oklahoma than any other proposition that can be encourage this scheme. Most of the farmers, you know, are "from Missouri and must be shown," and a practical experimental demonstration farm successfully conducted and managed as this one must be will do more to start the farmers on the right line than all of the papers and schools that you could gather t

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak to the merits of this amendment for a minute. This Chilocco Indian Reservation, as has been stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell], comprises 13½ sections. It lies adjacent to the Kansas line. The nearest point is 4 miles from the city of Arkansas City, in Kansas, in the third district of Kansas, represented by the gentleman from Kansas. Just south of it, 5 miles from the nearest point of the reservation, is the county seat of Kay County, Okla., the county in which this land is located—the town of Newkirk.

With a view to supporting the measure if possible I took up.

With a view to supporting the measure, if possible, I took up the matter with the citizens of Kay County, Okla. I wanted, if possible, to indorse this proposed amendment. Every person from whom I heard on the subject was opposed to it. They are citizens of Kay County. The gentlemen asking for it are in Kansas. The only person in Kansas from whom I have heard concerning it was an attorney, a friend of mine, living at Arkansas City, the place in which I understand the resolutions to be printed in the RECORD were produced.

In the first place, this is not an arid country. There is not an acre of that land in its wild state that is worth less than $40. The improved land in this same section sells for in the neighborhood of $100 an acre. Land when leased in this section of the State of Oklahoma leases for about $4 per acre.

Now, observe: This amendment proposes to lease this land for 20 years. The 640 acres are worth about $2,500 a year and in 20 years would net in cash—that is, the rental given to these parties—more than $50,000. It is nothing more and nothing less than a proposed speculation by these gentlemen who want this land.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I understand that it is simply giving to these people 640 acres of free land?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes; if it could be done. Not only that, but here is an agricultural college within 50 miles of it, where the most scientific farming is carried on. I doubt whether the Campbell Co. would do any more in the way of scientific experimentation than the agricultural college of Oklahoma is doing. homa is doing.

More than that, we have now editing in the State of Oklahoma a farm journal one of the best posted men in Oklahoma, and one who was at the head of the Oklahoma State Agri-cultural College for many years. He would take this land and pay a rental for it for any number of years. I doubt if there is a more skillful or more scientific farmer in America than the editor of that paper.

So it resolves itself into this proposition: Certain gentlemen would like to secure a section of as fine land as there is anywhere in the State of Oklahoma, and I never saw a finer agricultural country. The land there is very much like the agricultural land in southern Illinois. That is what it means—to give these parties this land.

Now, just a word as to the point of order. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let the gentleman make the point of order.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it changes existing law, that it is unauthor-The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order on the amendment. Does the gentleman want to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. For a moment. The act of May 17, 1882, contains this provision of law:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause to be constructed, at a point in the Indian Territory adjacent to the southern boundary of the State of Kansas and near to the Ponca and Pawnee Reservations, and upon a section of land suitable in quality and location for the industrial purposes of said school, which section of land is hereby reserved for said purpose, a building suitable in size and convenience for the instruction and care of 150 Indian children; and shall cause to be instructed therein in the English language and in industrial pursuits the children of such of the Indian tribes located in the Indian Territory as are least provided for under existing treaties or laws; and for this purpose there is hereby appropriated the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available: Provided, That not exceeding $15,000 of this sum shall be expended in the erection, completion, and furnishing of said building.

That is the law that we have upon this subject. The President of the United States, after this institution was located, promulgated this proclamation:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 12, 1884.

It is hereby ordered that the following-described tracts of country in the Indian Territory, viz, sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, and the east half of sections 17, 20, and 29, all in township No. 29 north, range No. 2 east of the Indian meridian, be, and the same are hereby, reserved and set apart for the settlement of such friendly

Indians belonging within the Indian Territory as have been or who may hereafter be educated at the Chilocco Indian Industrial School in

That proclamation was July 12, 1884.

This region, or what is now the State of Oklahoma, was then all designated in the law as the Indian Territory.

This same country was opened to settlement for white people on the 16th day of September, 1893. I do not know what authority the President had for the proclamation of 1884. as the question at issue is concerned, it makes no difference. Congress evidently desired, before the country was opened to settlement, to give validity to the President's proclamation, and the following provision of law was passed in March, 1893, and the country was opened to settlement on the 16th of September, Sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, and the east half of sections 17, 20, and 29, all in township No. 29 north of range No. 2 east of the Indian meridian, the same being lands reserved by Executive order dated July 12, 1884, for use of and in connection with the Chilocco Indian Industrial School, in the Indian Territory, shall not be subject to public settlement, but shall, until the further action of Congress, continue to be reserved for the purposes for which they were set apart in the said Executive order. And the President of the United States, in any order or proclamation which he shall make for the opening of the lands for settlement, may make such other reservations of lands for public purposes as he may deem wise and desirable.

It will be noticed that the President's proclamation, which is now in force, and which can only be changed by the enactment of law, reserves this land and sets it apart for the settlement of such friendly Indians belonging within the Indian Territory as have been or may hereafter be educated at the Chilocco Industrial School in such Territory.

The situation in that country at that time was this: There were no settlements. The entire State of Oklahoma, excepting the Five Civilized Tribes, was all grazing territory. There were various Indian tribes located there, but they were not farming. The land was grazed by southern cattle, which roamed over it in immense herds. They were encroaching upon the territory adjacent to the school, and the history of it is that the Indians would bring their children there, but they had no places to camp, no places to stop, no places to pitch their tepees, and the President reserved these sections of land for them to live upon while they were in attendance there at that school, and the purpose set forth in that proclamation has not been changed. In fact, the proclamation has been given validity by the Congress of the United States. Therefore it requires an act of Congress to change the terms of it. The terms are that these sections are reserved for these friendly Indians who desire to educate their children.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think there can be no question that this is new legislation. This land, 7,000 or 8,000 acres in extent, is reserved for school purposes and is now being used for those purposes. Of course, if it can be diverted to any other channel, new legislation is necessary to divert it from the channel in which it is now being used. think there is no question about it being subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there is no warrant of constitutional or statutory authority authorizing an agent of the Government to enter into a contract with a company or corporation for such a purpose as this amendment proposes. The amendment clearly provides a new venture in experimental farming, and it also provides compensation therefor, the proceeds of the farm, for 20 years. There is no question in the opinion of the Chair but that all of these features of the amendment are new legislation. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one stenographer and typewriter, $900 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the Shawnee Agency.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the paragraph just read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this is the same kind of an item that the Chair ruled on three times yesterday. It has been recently ruled on by other Chairmen. This item provides for the pay of one stenographer and typewriter, $900 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the Shawnee Agency. This item is now segregated instead of being included in the lump sum. It creates no new office and no new conditions concerning it, except to transfer it from one part of the bill to another.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard briefly on the point of order. The statute which gives the authority for the appropriation for this agency I have before me.

reads as follows:

Each head of a department is authorized to employ in his department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law and such messengers and assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

That is section 169 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and is found on page 27. Section 158 provides for the different departments in name, such as the Department of Justice, the Department of the Navy, the Department of War, and the Post Office Department, enumerating all of the executive departments.

The rule of the House which relates to this question is paragraph 2 of Rule XXI, found on page 400 of the Rules of this House:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto.

It was said on yesterday by my distinguished colleague from Illinois, Mr. Mann, that the recent rulings of the Chair during this session of Congress had been to overrule points of order made against provisions in appropriation bills which provide for new offices and fix the salaries thereof. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia. On page 65 of that bill for this session was a provision for one sanitary and food inspector. There was a point of order made against that provision of the bill, which was There was a point sustained by the Chair.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FOWLER. I had a systematic way of presenting this question, and I had desired to do it in my own way, but I will yield.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not care to interrupt the gentleman, only to say that that was a clear case of creating a new office, whereas the paragraph under consideration does not add a single office.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I think I will be able to show that this section does create a new office absolutely. In an appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture for this session of Congress there was, on page 62, a provision for 10 skilled laborers at $840 each. A point of order was made to this provision of the bill and it was sustained by the Chair. On page 69 of the same bill there was a provision for increasing the salary of a clerk, one executive clerk, $1,600; the amount provided for in the existing law was $1,400, an increase of $200. A point of order was made to that provision of the bill and the Chair sustained the point of order. The paragraph under consideration provides for one stenographer and typewriter, and fixes the salary at $900 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the Shawnee Agency.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly clear that the work which is intended to be done by this typewriter has been done by the clerk of the Shawnee Agency, who had no fixed identity nor a fixed salary. Now, here is an effort to divide that work, to give it to an additional new officer created by this bill and at a fixed salary. The authority for the performance of the duties at that agency is under the section of the law which I have read here-169 of the Revised Statutes. Up to this time there has been no designated officer for that agency by law. The only way that the work has ever been done by that agency has been by and under the authority and direction of the head of that department, by employing whatever labor was necessary in order to discharge the duties of that agency.

Now, it is sought here to designate and set apart a new position known as the typewriter and stenographer, whereas in fact there has been in the past no such office. To contend that this paragraph does not create an office and fix the salary thereof is to deny the plain intent and meaning of the English language

I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a famous ruling upon this question by a famous chairman in the past:

On February 27, 1906, the Army appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when certain paragraphs were read providing for certain clerks, watchmen, and so forth, at the headquarters of the division of the Department of the Army. Mr. James A. Tawney, of Minnesota, made the point of order to these expenditures that they were not authorized by law. On February 28 there was a debate upon this proposition and the ruling of the Chair, Mr. Hull, of Iowa, in which he said:

The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order that the items on pages 9 and 10, providing for an increase in the number of clerks, messengers, and laborers at the headquarters of the division of the department and office of the Chief of Staff are obnoxious to clause 2, Rule XXI. So much of that clause as applies to this case is as follows.

Then he read section 169 of the Revised Statutes, the same as that which I have just read.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield for a correction? Mr. FOWLER. I will yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Hull, had charge of the bill on the floor and was not in the chair.

Mr. FOWLER. I was only speaking from recollection; not having been here, I depended on my recollection from reading the decision. It may possibly be, but my recollection still is that Mr. Hull was in the chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He was chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and had charge of the bill on the floor, and endeavored to have the point of order overruled.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Tawney, made the point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; and the gentleman from Iowa resisted the point of order, and contended that the item was not subject to a point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. That may be true, Mr. Chairman. I believe
Mr. Boutelle, of Illinois, was in the chair. In passing upon the question further the Chairman said:

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] makes the point of order that the items on pages 9 and 10 for an increase in the number of clerks, messengers, and laborers at headquarters of divisions and departments and the office of Chief of Staff are obnoxious to clause 2 of Rule XXI. So much of that clause as applies to this case is as order that the Hems on pages 9 and 10 for an increase in the number of cierks, messengers, and laborers at headquarters of divisions and departments and the office of Chief of Staff are obnoxious to clause 2 of Rule XXI. So much of that clause as applies to this case is as follows:

"No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law."

The first question is, What law authorizes this appropriation? The only law referred to is that contained in section 160 of the Revised Statutes, which is as follows:

"Bach head of a department is authorized to employ in his department such number of cierks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copylists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rate of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year."

The next question, of course, is whether these cierks referred to intens to which objection has seen patternt. The employed by the head of the chair of the chair law. Hopkins], as referred to on page 2404 of the RECORD, third session Fifty-fifth Congress, but it appears at that time the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole was not familiar with the ruling of the Attorney General, which has been submitted to. In that ruling, which was referred to in the following year in the decision made by the occupant of the chair at that time [Mr. Sheman, of New York) overruling the decision of Mr. Hopkins, are found these words defining a department:

"The department, with its bureaus or branches, is, in contemplation of the law, an establishment distinct from the branches of the public service and the officers thereof which are under its supervision."

This will be found in volume 13 of the opinions of the Attorney General, on page 207. It seems, therefore, that in arriving at a conclusion on this question the present occupant of the clair must hold that a department, as referred to i

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; I will yield.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I take it the gentleman is assuming that this creates a position and that the Secretary of the Interior has the power to create such a position. Is that his position?

Mr. FOWLER. My position is, Mr. Chairman, that this paragraph creates a new office not authorized by law and fixes a salary not authorized by law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. FOWLER. No; I do not care to be interrupted, unless the gentleman wants to ask a question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to cite a statute which I am sure the gentleman has overlooked.

Mr. FOWLER. If the gentleman desires to read a statute

I have no objection whatever.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then I will read a statute,

This is contained in the act of June 7, 1897, a reenactment of the act of 1875, and provides:

That hereafter not more than $10,000 shall be paid in any one year for salaries or compensation of employees regularly employed at any one agency for its conduct and management, and the number and kind of employees at each agency shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, up to the limitation of not exceeding $10,000 the Secretary of the Interior has the authority to employ these people. They are now employed, and now we are simply providing for them specifically out of the lump sum. Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I will finish the decision of the Chair in a former ruling in this House, which I was reading when interrupted by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr.

It would appear, therefore, from the ruling of the Attorney General and from these decisions that the clerks of the Government outside of the departments in Washington must be provided for by specific law, and that items in an appropriation bill providing for such clerks or increasing their number beyond that previously provided by law would not be in order. The Chair therefore is constrained to sustain the point of order. of order.

I desire to call the attention of the Chair to another famous ruling, made by Mr. Hull, of Iowa, upon this same point of order in 1896; in which my contention is sustained.

in 1896, in which my contention is sustained.

3080. The law having established an office and fixed the salary it is not in order on an appropriation bill to provide for an unauthorized office and salary in lieu of it. On February 17, 1896, the Agricultural appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The paragraph relating to the salaries in the Burcau of Animal Industry having been reached Mr. Leonidas F. Livingston, of Georgia, made the point of order that the appropriation of salary for the chief clerk had been omitted, although the statute organizing the department specified that there should be such cierk and fixed his salary, and that an assistant chief of division not authorized by law was appropriated for.

The Chairman ruled that the point of order was well taken.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state to the gentleman that these are provided for in the lump sum of $85,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, that is no information to me at all. I can understand, and I have tried to make myself clear, that there is a distinction in the authority to create clerks and places in the city of Washington at the heads of departments and creating them in the various departments outside of the city of Washington.

The law itself makes this distinction, the Attorney General of the United States makes this distinction in his ruling, and the rulings of the former Chairmen of this House have followed that ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair trusts that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] will be brief.

Mr. FOWLER. I will take but little more time, Mr. Chairman. There is this distinction, Mr. Chairman, between this provision in this bill and the provision that the Chair has ruled upon in the past: The provisions that were made in the previous portions of this bill were made for the purpose of doing certain work, as that of a clerk at an agency, which has been performed by employment by the head of the bureau. That is not a case of a clerk, but is the case of employing clerical help, designating him as a typewriter and stenographer, and fixing salary therefor. Now, Mr. Chairman, the ruling during this session of Congress has been, invariably, whenever a position of this character has been created by a provision in an appropriation bill, to sustain a point of order whenever it has been made, and there is not an exception to the statement which I have made up to the time of the consideration of this bill, and I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the creation of this typewriter and stenographer is not a necessary incident to the Shawnee Agency, because any servant who has been performing these duties in the past, or any laborer who has been hired for that purpose, or anyone who, by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, has been appointed at that agency for the purpose of discharging this duty might have also been required to perform the general duties of a clerk. Now it is proposed by this bill to separate this duty into two parts by leaving the general work of the clerk to be done the same as heretofore, by appointment by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at a sum fixed by the commissioner, and to create the office of stenographer and typewriter, and, further, to also take away from the commissioner the right to fix the salary.

The power to create one position of this character for this agency carries with it the authority to create two positions or any number of like positions. The right to fix $900 as the salary of this office carries with it the power to fix it at $9,000 or any other sum, however great. To hold that this is not new legislation and subject to a point of order is to destroy the rule which is here invoked. The Chair ought to sustain the point of order or have the rule repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois in his elabobecause I would like to bring it to the attention of the Chair. rate and careful presentation has gone into a good many details not relative to the point of order, as the Chair sees it. For instance, he cites, I believe, in the first reference that a clerk in some previous ruling had had a salary increased by $200. That was clearly new legislation and subject to a point of order. Later he gives numerous citations which pertain entirely to employees and departments within the District, and last he gives a citation on the increase of clerks and of salaries. The Chair has held, as he believes he has authority for so doing, that this appropriation for these clerks is already provided in this bill in a lump sum. The committee has not sought to usurp any legislative authority, because it is already authorized by law to do that very thing. The committee has seen fit to subdivide this lump appropriation into subsequent paragraphs and specify thereby what shall be done with the lumpsum appropriation. That, in the opinion of the Chair, is not new legislation, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one assistant clerk at $720, one constable at $540, and one lease clerk at $800 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the Sac and Fox Agency, Okla.; in all, $2,060.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the paragraph just read. I do not desire to be heard.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire the Chair to rule. This is on all fours with the previous paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one financial clerk at $720, one assistant clerk at $780 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the Seneca Agency; in all, $1,500.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to this paragraph of the bill. I do not care to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

SEC. 18. For expense of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees. $150,000: Provided, That $25,000, or so much as may be necessary, of the above amount is hereby appropriated and made immediately available for payment of salaries of persons employed in connection with the work of advertising and sale of surplus and unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, no money shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes, except for schools, without specific appropriation by Congress.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order on this paragraph. I am a member of the committee.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr.

MILLER] make a point of order? Mr. MILLER. I make a point of order on so much of the paragraph just read as is contained in lines 13 to 24, inclusive. It means a new proviso.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the full paragraph, and I do not desire to be heard on it.

[Mr. MILLER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, as I said some time ago in the colloquy with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], I want to get the form of his point of order settled before I address my remarks to it. Did the gentleman make two points of order as to the two different provisos?

Mr. MILLER. No; I made one point of order; but I said the argument would be a little different on each of the two provisions.

Mr. FERRIS. The matters are entirely foreign to each other. Will the gentleman now allow the point of order to be passed upon which affects the first proviso? If so, I can then address my remarks to the second.

Mr. MILLER. I will ask the gentleman if he would rather do it in that way than to have the point of order sustained as to both and then offer the other as an amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. I concede the point of order as to the deficiency appropriation, and I suggest that that be disposed of, in order that we may then bring before the committee the second matter. If the gentleman will not agree to that, then I will have to offer the second proposition as an amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I will accommodate the gentleman. Mr. FERRIS. Then if the Chair will rule on the point of order as to the first proviso, I concede that it is good. I had rather hoped the gentleman would not make it, because it gives them $25,000 to pay the deficiency with that they seem to have accumulated.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think it would be more advisable to have the Chair rule on the entire point of order, pages 8 and 9.]

because then the Chair would express an opinion upon each proposition? Perhaps, then, the gentleman from Oklahoma might be able to persuade the gentleman from Minnesota to leave the first item in the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. No; I really do not think so for the reason it would merely cumber the RECORD to reoffer and reinsert the paragraph without really accomplishing anything, so far as I can see. They are, as a matter of fact, two distinct propositions, hence I can see no wrong in the procedure suggested by me. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's point of order may be segregated and the first proviso be passed upon which I concede. That will leave the bill with the second proviso in, which is the limitation on the department in expending Indian funds, the only thing at issue.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order as to the first proviso is sustained.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota, at great length, produces numerous and sundry laws which he says this provision repeals. About that I have no question and will not debate with him for one moment. I do not think we are at variance so far as the facts are concerned so far as they apply to the pending point of order. It does repeal the remnants of laws scattered over several appropriation bills, scattered over several special acts, scattered through many previous laws; but, to take up the gentleman's argument where he left it, he concedes that it is a wiping out and reduction of officers, and in order to emphasize that point I will read the so-called Holman rule:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously outhorized by law—

Now, if it stopped there the gentleman's argument would certainly be good, our case would be lost, and the Chair would have nothing to bewilder him or perplex him in ruling. But look what follows:

unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

This would not and could not confuse the Chair, for it has no application here.

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto, changing existing law, be in order except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill—

No one will question the germaneness of the provision, for this is the Indian Committee, having jurisdiction over Indian matters. Let me proceed with the rule—shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States—

The gentleman's whole argument is that we are going to work havoc and ruin because we are going to do what? Because we are going to retrench and cut down the officers and their salaries-211 of them now, under one roof in one block. Let me continue:

by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of, such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs giving the expenditures for the Five Civilized Tribes for the last fiscal year. Let me call it to the attention of the committee.

In relation to money expended in connection with the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma the Secretary of the Interior, in response to Senate resolution of January 9, 1911, sent to the Senate a communication from the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, dated February 3, 1911, transmitting therewith a statement taken from the records of his office, showing the expenditures from congressional appropriations of $2,791,840 68 from March 3, 1893, to December 31, 1910, and showing the total area allotted to the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes to be 15,945,260,12 acres, at a cost per capita of $27.58 to each of the 101,227 citizens allotted.

There was also transmitted a copy of a letter from the acting superintendent of the Union Agency, dated January 28, 1911, submitting, a statement of expenditures in connection with schools among the Five Civilized Tribes from July 1, 1808, to June 30, 1910, aggregating $5.832,291.15, of which amount $4.693,697.25 was paid from tribal funds, $1,021,983.77 from congressional appropriation fund "Indian schools, Five Civilized Tribes," $108,927.10 from the fund "Indian schools, Five Civilized Tribes, surplus court fees," and $7,683.03 from the fund "Care orphan Indian children." Mr. FERRIS. This is from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and was brought out in reply to a question asked by myself in the Committee on Indian Affairs while the matter was being inquired about. I have printed above the figures of the gentleman from South Dakota so the House will have both sets of figures before it. The total amount of expenditures for the Five Civilized Tribes was $1,308,023.98. The gentleman from South Dakota had some amended figures which he has put in the RECORD in the same connection, and they show that we have expended $1,177,833.04, making a difference of something over $100,000. I shall neither deny nor affirm the correctness of his figures, for either set of figures will answer the purpose of this argument.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Oklahoma ought to concede that the second figures are correct.

Mr. FERRIS. They may be so; I have no reason to think otherwise. The figures first read were the figures supplied to me in the hearings; the gentleman from South Dakota got his afterwards. I have no reason to change my figures. Both sets came from the Indian Office. I repeat, for the purpose of this argument—either set will do—either set is bad enough.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think in fairness to myself and this committee the gentleman should say that the figures I have presented were accompanied by a letter from the commissioner explaining that they were correct, and how the error crept into the other figures.

Mr. FERRIS. I know; the gentleman from South Dakota does not assume that my figures were not supplied as I have related and from the source I have stated. Now, I hold in my hand the names and salaries of the people that work at the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma. Two hundred and eleven of them in number. One agency has 211 officers. For all purposes they expended last year over $1,000.000. Some one may say they need this large sum. I deny it, and join issue squarely at the start. It is too large a sum. Some one may say that it is not all for salaries and expenses. That is true; but as the commissioner gave us in the hearings the exact figures, I want to read it item by item, so that the House can know what has transpired there. This is a statement showing the total amount of money used during the year 1911 for all purposes, including the tribal funds, furnished the committee for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911. There was paid for administration of affairs, salaries, and so forth, $444,925.65; attorneys' fees, $57.828.27; support and civilization, $674,422.46; for per capita payments, or equalization, $130,847.60.

Of the amount that actually reached the Indians' pocketbook there was $130,847, the sum last named.

Now, out of the total expenditure during the last fiscal year of $1,308,000, if my figures are correct, there reached the Indians approximately $130,847.60. Now, what is the natural thing for us to conclude? The conclusion can be but one, and that is that too many officers and too much salary and expenses down there. Five years ago our State came into the Union. On March 4, 1907, the tribal rolls were closed. There has not been any Indian enrolled since that time.

The completion and closing of the rolls in 1907 obviates that expense since that time. That expense has been fully done away with. No enrolling board has been kept there, and no one has been enrolled since that time, unless the department has done it here in Washington. Of the salaries of these employees, for which they ask this deficiency appropriation of $25,000, independent of the $1,308,000, I hold a list in my hand. They are 211 in number ·

MEMORANDUM.

Chairman Stephens and Mr. Scott Ferris, of the Indian Committee, have requested that the Indian Office prepare a statement by States, and each State to be on a separate memorandum:

The number of Indians in each State.

The amount appropriated last year for the Indians of each State by tribes, giving the total, this to include the school, irrigation, and contingency appropriations.

Also a statement by States, showing the amount paid to mission, sectarian, or other contract schools of all classes, giving the name of denomination of each school for the past fiscal year.

This statement is to include all moneys expended by the Indian Service for the Indians of each State.

Mr. MUPDOCK. Are these men paid out of the tribal funds.

Mr. MURDOCK. Are those men paid out of the tribal funds or by action of this Congress?

Mr. FERRIS. They are paid both ways. Congress pays part of them out of United States funds. The bill carried $275,000 last year, and there were some other acts also prior thereto which allowed the Government to expend part of the proceeds of leasing, sales, and so forth, but most of it comes out of Indian

Mr. MURDOCK. There was over $1,000,000 spent in this service.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true; to be accurate, $1,308,023.98. Mr. MURDOCK. But Congress only passed upon $275,000?

Mr. FERRIS. That is pretty near to it. I think that is it

I am sure it is.

Mr. MURDOCK. Who audits the balance of the expenditure? Mr. FERRIS. The Department of the Interior and various arms and offices created by them. Now, on the east side of Oklahoma there are 101,000 allottees. That includes freedmen. They were slaves of the Indians, and they were allotted by the Federal Government Indian lands. In addition to that, that term includes the intermarried white people who have not a drop of Indian blood in their veins. It includes those who are practically white citizens. In five of the counties in my district, known as the Chickasaw country, the men on reception committees who meet me and other public men who visit the towns are Indian allottees, who are Indian citizens, bankers, and leading citizens. Some of them are leading lawyers and candidates for office, and really are the leading citizens of the country. Why, then, should we thus inflict such detailed supervision upon them that they do not need or desire? Some may say havoc and trouble may result if we cut this off. This belief is only indulged in by the people who hold the jobs and the people they can influence. They are most all allowed expenses in addition to their salaries, and this is always a dangerous provision, for it is so often abused. What do they do without money for traveling expenses? They journey to Washington to perpetuate them selves. They scream out against those who would curtail them, and say they alone are keeping the Indians from disaster, want, and plunder. It is not true. Our State is well organized with a full quota of officers, and there are few who feel longer a necessity of perpetuating any such expense or any such number of officers to supervise in a State which needs little, if any, supervision from without. The sovereign State, with its million and three-quarters population, does not want the Federal Government to inflict its supervisors upon it or its citizens, who do not need them. I do not desire to speak offensively of any one of them, as I think they are good men, but they should not be kept in Oklahoma and transact business for people who know as much about business as they do, sometimes more. In any event, the time has come to cut loose from all of those white men and near-white men.

When the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter] came to Congress he could not sell his land, and it is still restricted; the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen] could not sell his land, and it is still restricted. Can anyone view with mild contemplation any such spectacle as that? Can anyone justify such procedure as that, a $2,000 clerk supervising men whom a sovereign State is willing to and does elect to Congress and the Senate? The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] has, with great eloquence and | homa. It is a lament and a sigh on the lips of every Indian in precision, called our attention to what would happen if we withdraw. I answer his eloquence and his argument with the blunt statement that we are not withdrawing. We are still specifically reappropriating $150,000 in this identical bill that will employ 60 people at $2,500 per year each. This is plenty. It may be too much.

Mr. MANN. Yesterday, when some of us were trying to reduce the appropriation for Indian police, partly in the Five Civilized Tribes, the gentleman from Oklahoma vigorously resisted the amendments and he stated that it was often necessary to have somebody to watch over a portion of these peoplenot the eminent lawyers or the bankers, but a very large population of these Indian tribes who needed assistance. How does the gentleman reconcile that with his statements now that all of them are competent to transact their own business?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman misstates my position.

Mr. MANN. His whole argument was that all of them were

Mr. FERRIS. That is not my argument. We have in certain parts of the Choctaw Nation some people who may need supervision and help as yet, and I am not one who wants to withdraw that protection from all of them. That is what I said yesterday. The Kiowa-Comanche country, where I live, only spent $25,000 last year, the year before, and that is all they got this year; and we are giving to these people $150,000 specifically for Oklahoma in addition to all the general appropriations on the subject, any part of which can be used in Oklahoma for any character of service the department desires. minority members and other members on that side of the House contend that havoc will result if those 211 officers are not re-I am one of those who think otherwise. Are we to let tained. 211 officeholders in one-half of Oklahoma use up in salaries and expenses the Indian funds, and use them all up in four or five years? Are we going to permit the Secretary to go on using the Indians' funds when the treaties stipulate against it? Are we going to allow them to spend money for service we do not need and the Indians do not want? This is not the mission of the Federal Government; this will lay our Government open to just criticism, which none of us crave. It is the duty of the Federal Government to keep its promises and not use up all of their money in salaries.

I do not mean to inject any criticism into this debate, but let me tell you the history of how these 211 officers got on the pay roll of that one agency. I shall not overstep the bounds of propriety when I state it. Nineteen years ago the Federal Government-and there are men here who remember it-took upon themselves the task of going down to administer upon the estate of these Five Tribes people. They admonished and instructed the commissioners who went down into this country that the job probably would not last more than two years, and they themselves at that time did not expect that it would last half that long. Nineteen long years have passed, and still they are there, and instead of retrenching and getting out they are increasing and sticking tighter to their jobs.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman is speaking of the Dawes Commission.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; the Dawes Commission. Nineteen long years have passed. The first year they expended approximately $14,000. They have now, when the business of the tribe is practically all completed, only a few little remnants of land left, the Indians about all civilized, the sale of the coal and mineral lands were provided for in a separate bill this session, the bill carrying an appropriation of $50,000, so the Muskogen Agency would not be troubled with the matter to pay all expenses in-The bill even establishes a temporary agency cident thereto. at McAlester, that inflicts no duties upon these union agencies and their 211 employees. Now, when we come in and try to limit this and try to get rid of some part of these 211 unnecessary officers in the interest of economy, in the interest of justice, in the interest of a safe and sane guardianship, what are we met with? We are met with the proposition that we are trying to destroy ourselves and trying to destroy our Indian people. It is farcical; it is unsound; it will not bear the understanding of this House. Let me drop back to the history

Mr. MONDELL. This is the old union agency?
Mr. FERRIS. Yes. Let me drop back to the history of this. They began with an appropriation of about $14,000-or, rather, they expended that amount the first year. Last year they expended $1,308,023.98. I may be inaccurate as to a few hundred dollars, but it is $1,177,000, as stated by the gentleman from South Dakota. Instead of having finished up their guar-dianship in two years, as was expected, they have accumulated and crept up in the expenditures year by year. It is a joke and a smile of derision on the lips of every white man in OklaOklahoma that there are no means whereby they may be relieved from this too much detailed supervision.

But to the end that I might be mistaken and overzealous in my statement, let me call attention to what the Indian Commissioner said in the hearings on the bill. We had hearings on this very proposition. This was debated and fought out at length in the committee. Now, let me call the attention of the committee to what the commissioner said. We were talking on this particular item in the hearings during the preparation of the bill. He called attention to the fact that we could not close it up, from the fact that we had 34,000 suits pending, but as Congress appropriated for the Department of Justice, or, rather, through the regular appropriation committee, $50,000 each year to carry on those suits, this union agency has nothing to do with those suits. Quoting from printed hearings, which are available and are not disputed or controverted:

Mr. Ferris. But inasmuch as that matter is being handled almost exclusively from the Department of Justice—I think I am right about that—do you not think it fair to say that these expenses ought to be diminished and that this agency force ought to be cut down?

Commissioner VALENTINE. I have no quarrel with you on that point. I think it ought to be cut down and terminated as early as practicable.

Let me read further:

Mr. FERRIS. And no havoc or disaster would be the result if a marked cut was made, would there?

Commissioner VALENTINE. I think not.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him just one question?

Mr. FERRIS. I asked him this further question:

And do you think there could be considerable economy practiced at the Muskogee Agency?

Commissioner VALENTINE. There is no question in my mind.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask just a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will. Mr. MILLER. If a man was afflicted with an affection in his ear, would the gentleman suggest that his head should be cut off? Mr. FERRIS. Not at all. We have left $150,000 in this bill. The gentleman has stated that we are leaving no protection so much that it must be ringing in the gentleman's ears. We have appropriated in appropriate terms in this very bill $150,000 for the administration of the Five Civilized Tribes, and I am not sure, after hearing the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] on yesterday, but what that may be too large a sum rather than too small.

Oklahoma has been admitted into the Union more than five

Mr. MANN. You were sure, then, the appropriation ought not to be cut down?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman mistakes my position all the It has not been my purpose to withdraw entirely, but I imagine I will go a long way further than the gentleman will go toward cutting down appropriations for salaries of needless Much worse things could happen to our State than to cut down even yet the appropriation. That is not the thing we have suffered from most. I do not charge anything wrong against the Secretary of the Interior or his department. I do not charge anything in the way of a dishonest act on their part. I do not think there really is any unless it be the crime of omission. But it has been a constant accumulation of the pay roll by people who want jobs-a case of some person coming up here and thinking he would like to do this for the Indians, or do that for the Indians and some one imagining in his own mind that he can cook up some kind of a service that would do the Indians good. The Indian has been a kind of an experiment station which never passes the propaganda period. The thing that the Indians need most-not only the intermarried whites, but also the Indian mixed bloods and those who have a little strain of Indian blood in them-is to be given their money the Federal Government is holding and their property, and then to be let alone.

The Five Civilized Tribes Agency ought to be cut down to about the size of the Kiowa Indian Agency. The appropriation for it ought to be cut down to at least $100,000 the first year; and there ought to be down there 8 or 10, or perhaps 20, good. keen, honest, straightforward men who would assist in the management of the affairs of those people. The supervision has been too acute, too minute. It has made the Indian dependent rather than independent. It is all wrong in theory and in fact. The Department of Justice is sending its men down there to sue whether the Indian wants suits or not. Some of them are all right, but most of them are ill-advised. The Commissioner The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is sending his men to enforce the rules and regulations and check up the other officers. It is a network of details with no results. We are suffering from too many officers. We are suffering from too much detailed supervision. You are destroying our State and spoiling the Indian. We have offered an amendment, and the committee has adopted it, which will save money for the Government and save money for the

It was said a little while ago-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there for a question, for information?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. MANN. Is it at this agency that they pass upon the question of removing restrictions upon alienation?

Mr. FERRIS. I am glad the gentleman asked that question.

Mr. MANN. I am asking it for information.
Mr. FERRIS. I am glad the gentleman asked it, and I am glad to give the information to him. They are merely advisory. They can not finally settle anything. They merely report up This is the course they pursue: The applicant files an application with the field agent, and the field agent transmits it to J. George Wright, and J. George Wright transmits it to David H. Kelsey, and David H. Kelsey transmits it to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the commissioner then sends it to the Secretary, and so on to Mr. Fisher or to Mr. Adams, one of the two officials who finally pass upon it. It is almost like a cat chasing its tail, and the details are so numerous and the delays so great that little good is accomplished.

Mr. MANN. Some one makes an investigation?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Do the people in this office who are paid out of the tribal funds, or of any other office that are paid out of tribal funds, make the investigation of competency?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; they pretend to make an investigation, but it is not final. These field men only report conditions, a thing the Indian farmer or Indian police could do.

Mr. MANN. What would happen if you would cut out the appropriation of the tribal funds in reference to the question of competency and the removal of restrictions?

Mr. FERRIS. I can answer the gentleman. Congress in its wisdom, in 1908, very rightfully and justly, as I believe, passed an act providing that all Indians of less than half Indian blood should have their restrictions removed. They are made full citizens by the statehood act, as the gentleman from Illinois knows. That act released the greater part of them from restrictions. It went further than that. It stated that as to all Indians between half and three-quarters blood the restrictions as to the surplus should be removed, and they were required to keep the homesteads.

As to those of three-quarters blood and up to full blood, they are still restricted, both as to homestead and surplus, so that you see Congress itself has stepped in and said whose restriction shall be removed and whose restriction shall not be removed; and, at the same time, Congress has declared that the tribal roll of the Five Civilized Tribes shall be final as to the quantum of Indian blood of those on that roll. So that is the solution of the restriction, legislation, and conditions on that particular point.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish unduly to interrupt the gentleman.

I am asking for information-

Mr. FERRIS. I am glad the gentleman does. I am very glad to give him any information I may have-

Mr. MANN. But the statement has been made repeatedly that there is a large number of members of these Indian tribes who are still incompetent under the law, whose restrictions have not been removed. Can the gentleman tell how many of those there are?

Mr. FERRIS. Their books show that there are about 35,000 still restricted, but lots of them are as competent as we are. Some of them are on the roll as full bloods and three-quarter bloods when they have little Indian blood in their veins. Lots of white men fraudulently got onto the rolls.

Mr. MANN. Are not some of those seeking to have thefr restrictions removed?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; some of them, but few of them ever realize on their ambitions through the department.

Mr. MANN. That requires investigation. What I wanted to get at is whether this provision would prevent proper investigation or require that all the expense of that investigation should be paid out of the Treasury. And in the same connection let me ask the gentleman about leases and things of that sort.

Mr. FERRIS. I will be glad to answer the gentleman if I can.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. FERRIS. I was just going to answer the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Oklahoma is giving the gentleman from Illinois some information which I do not think he would give if he would permit me to point this out to him: The gentleman does not wish to give to the House the information that those who pass upon the question of the removal of restrictions are paid in part of their compensation or expenses from the tribal funds?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, yes. The commissioner says that a great deal of money is paid out for that purpose. He says that J. George Wright is spending a great deal of tribal money, and says they are using lots of funds from the leasing and royalty

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that not one dollar of it has been expended in that way, and the gentleman can not find it in the record where a single, solitary cent has been expended out of the tribal funds, out of the Union Agency, or the commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, except in the sale and advertising of lands and the collecting of the money therefrom.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, well, the gentleman seeks to say that they have expended the tribal funds only for certain specific I do not know how he arrives at that conclusion. The commissioner himself, when I asked him the question, said that J. George Wright, the commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, does expend a great deal of the Indian tribal moneys. He may not expend it for a certain kind of officers, but he does expend it for some officers, and a great deal of it at that. He expends the difference between $275,000, the amount that is appropriated from the Federal Treasury, and the $1,308,000 that was spent altogether.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How much does J. George

Wright spend?

Wright spend?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, I have given the amounts. I do not care who spends it, whether it be the Secretary, or J. George Wright, or who. I invite the gentleman and the House to read the printed hearings on this bill and see what the Indian Commissioner says about spending tribal funds. They spend it, and that is enough to know. Any quibble about it is unimportant. The treaty says they shall not spend it, but they do.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The tribal funds, as I understand, are very large and as long as the money belongs to the Indians and there large, and as long as the money belongs to the Indians and there are tribal funds and this service is for the Indians, why should are tribal funds and this service is for the Indians, why should not the expense be paid for from the tribal funds?

Mr. FERRIS. The question of the gentleman is one that should be answered, and I am glad to give him my answer. It is nevertheless true that the Atoka agreement, the Cherokee treaty, and so forth, with which my colleagues, Mr. Carter and Mr. Davenfort are much more familiar than I, is to the effect and in substance that if the Fire Civiliand Fither whether and in substance that if the Five Civilized Tribes, who have maintained a government of their own for more than 50 years, owning their own lands, would allow the whites to come in there and open up the lands and settle up the estate the Federal Gov-and open up the lands and settle up the estate the Federal Government would bear all the expenses of settling up the affairs.

Mr. CANNON. Then the contract should be carried out.

Mr. FERRIS. I knew the gentleman would answer that way.

That should be done in all fairness. The Indians' affairs are so nearly completed that we do not want officers now. As a State we do not need the officers that perform no good service, but are anxiety to be relieved from their generalists. but are anxious to be relieved from their supervision, which has long since become offensive to these Indians and whites alike. Our State is well equipped to take care of all but a few full bloods, who are incompetent, and I measure my words when I say few. The fact that they are restricted is not the test.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman permit just a short statement?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman seems to be going into the merits of the case as well as discussing the point of order

Mr. FERRIS. I had not intended to do so, except by way of reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Minnesota. It will be recalled that he used a good deal of latitude in the matter.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Since the matter has arisen, I hope the gentleman will call the attention of the committee to the fact that this involves a section of country as large in area as the State of Indiana, and that nearly a third of all the Indians of the United States are there, with all these complications.

Now, I would like to ask the gentleman whether he has made any computation with respect to the same number of Indians in other sections of the United States, and as to whether the expenditures connected with the governing of the same number of Indians here are any larger than they are for 100,000 Indians on other reservations? My understanding is that the expenditures here are very much less. I understood that word came from the Indian Department. I have not looked it up, because I know the gentleman is prepared on all these matters

Mr. FERRIS. There is no other agency in the United States the expenses of which are as great as this. Nothing even approaches it within my knowledge, and I was on the subcommittee of three that made this bill.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. 1 mean combined agencies dealing with the same number of Indians.

Mr. FERRIS. The expenditures here are more unusual than at any other agency that I know of. Now, let me give the committee some of the facts with reference to what they collect, and something as to what they expend in the different tribes. The receipts, by tribes, as shown by the annual report of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes first, then immediately following the receipts are the amount expended for each tribe as shown by the Indian Commissioner, developed in the hearings on the Indian appropriation bill. They are as follows:

ACCOUNTS DIVISION.

Mr. FERRIS. A casual observance and comparison of these figures will show administration more fantastic and weird than has yet been heard of. It will show a vanishing of the Indian funds by a process more rapid than should longer be permitted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. MANN. It is very evident that the committee can not get through this matter to-night. It is quite evident that it will probably require a large attendance here. To-morrow will be Easter Sunday, and in the performance of my religious duties I should like to get away. I hope the gentleman will yield for a motion to rise.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not care to detain the committee or to proceed to-night—— Mr. CANNON. The gentleman will have the floor when we come together again.

Mr. FERRIS. If the suggestion is agreeable to the committee, I have no objection. I yield the floor to the chairman of the committee for the purpose of making a motion that the com-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Underwood having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BARNHART, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 8, 1912, at 12 o'clock

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting estimates of deficiencies in appropriations required by the Interior Department for the public-land service (H. Doc. No. 683); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of the Pascagoula River, Miss. (H. Doc. No. 682); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

Monday, April 8, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

DESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE. Mr. LODGE took the chair as Presiding Officer and said: Acting under the resolution of the Senate, in the absence of the Vice President, I call the Senate to order.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is proper, Mr. President, that I should state that on Friday last the Vice President called my attention to the fact that he would be absent from the Senate today, and it was my purpose during the day to ask that the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] should be selected as President pro tempore for this day. It quite escaped my mind that that duty rested upon me and it was neglected.

I now, Mr. President, ask unanimous consent that the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] be designated to act as President pro tempore for this day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Georgia

[Mr. Bacon] be designated as President pro tempore for this day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BACON thereupon took the chair as President pro tem-

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the following resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire that it shall be acted upon before the Journal is read?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it ought to be. It relates to the selection of a President pro tempore.

The resolution (S. Res. 277) submitted by Mr. Gallinger was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office this day in the absence of the Vice President.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 278), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office this day in the absence of the Vice President.

THE JOURNAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the Journal of the last legislative day.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. Smoot and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MOTOR AND OTHER VEHICLES IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 496).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting in response to a resolution of the 25th ultimo certain information relative to the number of carriages, motor vehicles, etc., owned and operated by the Government and used by the Department of Commerce and Labor, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MEMORIAL OF LEGISLATURE OF ARIZONA.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, in this connection, if it is appropriate, and I confess myself as yet unfamiliar with the rules of the Senate, I presented a day or two ago, soon after my first introduction to this body, a joint resolution from the State Legislature of Arizona that touched on the question of the confirmation of a public officer appointed by the President. It was ruled by the Vice President that the memorial must be referred to the executive session of the Senate. I for the time consented to the ruling. I have since considered the matter, and I am convinced that the resolution of a State legislature directed to this body is not to be forever buried in the darkness and silence of the executive session, but that it is entitled to publication in the RECORD.

I ask unanimous consent that the memorial passed by the Legislature of Arizona remonstrating against the confirmation of R. E. Slean as judge of the District Court for the District of Arizona be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I only want to make another motion in case unanimous consent is not granted.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, all matters relating to the confirmation of nominees are part of the executive business. though treaties have been discussed on two occasions in public, which are also executive business, I have never known a confirmation discussed, and papers relating to the confirmation of nominees have always been held to be executive documents.

The practice of printing resolutions of legislatures in the RECORD is, I think, not a matter of rule but only of courtesy. It seems to me this resolution, if submitted at all, ought to be submitted in executive session. It can there be spread upon | zona yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

the journal of the executive session. I think it would be very dangerous to set the precedent of presenting in open session papers relating to confirmations. We are all well aware that papers relating to the character and fitness of nominees often contain assertions which are entirely unfounded, and it would do great damage to the individual if published. They are submitted only to committees for consideration and are guarded with the greatest confidence and care. I think to break through that precedent would be most unfortunate.

In this case it is impossible to suggest that there is any desire of maintaining secrecy about this paper, because it is a public document. All I am contending for is the preservation of what seems to me a very essential rule in the consideration of the executive business in regard to confirmations.

Mr. GALLINGER. The rule has never been violated.

Mr. LODGE. I am not aware that the rule has ever been broken through. Moreover, Mr. President, there are many resolutions in favor of this nominee. If we print the resolutions of the legislature, we must print also in the RECORD the resolutions of the minority of the legislature in favor of the confirmation of Mr. Sloan; we must print resolutions of the bar association in his favor, and I think we open the door to a very dangerous practice.

I therefore object to unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I appreciate fully the dangers to which the Senator from Massachusetts alludes in printing in the Record personal petitions or private letters or charges against a nominee, but he is going entirely outside of the present proposition when he fails to discriminate between the solemn resolution of a State legislature, addressed to the Senate of the United States in temperate, proper, and modest language, being denied publication in the RECORD and a private petition which might vilify and assail the character of a nominee. It appears at once that these questions stand on different grounds.

I am only at this time carrying out the request of the legislature of my State, which asked me to present this memorial. I have looked over the RECORD as far as I could, and I have failed to discover a single case where the printing of the memorial of a State legislature has been refused. I do not know what has been the rule of the Senate, but as far as I can discover from recent investigation the resolutions of a State legislature have been printed in the RECORD. I have looked the precedents over, and I have not found a single case where a resolution of a State legislature, no matter what it touched upon, was hidden forever from the proceedings of the session of the legislative body.

I therefore move the Senate that the resolutions to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will send the resolution to the desk and the Secretary will state it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point of order that it is not in order to print in the RECORD a document relating to executive session.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The very question for the Senate to decide is whether it is in order.

decide is whether it is in order.

Mr. LODGE. It is a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the document has been presented and is a part of the files of the executive session, the Chair would regard the point of order as well taken. Chair would regard the point of order as well taken. The Chair was not present at the last session of the Senate and therefore is not personally advised as to whether or not this paper belongs to the executive files.

Mr. LODGE. The Vice President, at the last session, ruled that it was out of order to present it in open session. There has been no opportunity to present it in executive session since, that I am aware.

that I am aware of.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit an interruption, I did not present it in executive session. The memorial was sent to me and to my colleague for presentation before the Senate and not in executive session. I refused to present it in executive session. The President of the Senate did rule on my first application that it was executive business." fessing my want of knowledge of the rule, I consented that it should be passed over for the time. The Vice President may or may not have presented it in executive session. I have nothing to say about that. I have presented the resolution here. I do not know whether the Vice President presented it in executive session or not. I simply take the position that the resolution of a State legislature has the privilege of being printed in the RECORD. I could get it in the RECORD by rising and reading it. would not infringe a single law of the Senate or any rule of it under any conditions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ari-

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not interrupt the Senator. I thought he had concluded. I desire to say a word in my own

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. This is all I have to say. I am in an embarrassing position on account of not knowing the rules of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the exact status of this case is that the Senator from Arizona offered this memorial as coming from the State legislature, stating the purport of it.

Manifestly it related to executive business. The Vice President, Manifestly it related to executive business. as I think properly, ruled that it could not be received in open session, and thereupon the Senator from Arizona, as I remember, withdrew the memorial. No executive session has supervened that I recall and it is again presented in open session.

Now, Mr. President, I have been here a good while and I have never known an instance where a matter relating to the confirmation of a nomination sent to the Senate by the President of the United States was presented, or at least was admitted in open session, and I think when the Senator from Arizona comes to consider this matter fully he will see that it would be a very unfortunate thing if the Senate should break down that well-established rule, which, so far as I know, has never been called in question. I therefore trust that the pres-ent occupant of the chair will rule that it can not be received in open session, inasmuch as it is a matter pertaining to the executive business of this body.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I call attention to Rule XXIX, which expressly provides how communications and resolutions from the legislature of a State of the University.

lutions from the legislature of a State of the Union may be received. The rule provides that motions to print shall go to the Committee on Printing unless the Senate otherwise orders, and the Senator from Arizona has moved that the matter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the particular point that the Senator makes on that rule?

Mr. CULBERSON. The particular point is that it is for the Senate at this time to decide the matter on the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. LODGE. That rule relates to printing; not to publication in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the present occupant of the chair, being but a temporary occupant of it, would not undertake to overrule the ruling made by the Vice President, but the Chair will submit the point of order to the Senate if it is so desired. If it is desired that the point of order shall be submitted to the Senate, the Chair occupying the embarrassing position which has just been stated, will submit it to the Senate. If it were an original proposition submitted to the Chair, of course the Chair would take the responsibility of ruling upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I was not thinking of the absence of the Vice President at the time I made the motion, but if the present occupant of the chair would prefer to leave it to the Vice President upon his return or feels any embarrassment in now acting, I will defer the matter to a near future day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would prefer that that should be done, because of the embarrassment which necessarily would be involved in a reconsideration by the present occupant of the chair of what has already been decided by the permanent presiding officer of the body.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Appreciating that situation, I withdraw the motion for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion for the present is withdrawn.

Committee on Fisheries and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OLIVER submitted an amendment proposing to create an additional division of the Railway Mail Service at Pittsbugh, Pa., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill, H. R. 21279 (with accompanying paper), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

PARTY FUNDS (S. DOC. NO. 495).

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I present a pamphlet prepared by Perry Belmont on the abolition of the secrecy of party funds, the origin of the movement, its purposes, and effect. I move that the pamphlet be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AND EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY (S. DOC. No. 479).

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a number of letters which have been transmitted to me from trainmen's organizations relative to the pending workmen's compensation bill. I do not ask that the letters be printed in the RECORD or that they be referred. move that they be printed as a Senate document. The motion was agreed to.

COST OF LIVING IN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that 500 additional copies of House Document 617 be printed, 150 copies for the use of the Department of State and 350 copies for the use of the Senate document room, The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order will be entered.

The order as agreed to was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed 500 additional copies of House Document No. 617, "Cooperation and Cost of Living in Certain Foreign Countries," of which 150 copies shall be for the use of the Department of State, and 350 copies for the Senate document room.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AND EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that 1,000 additional copies of Senate Document 475, being the opinions of the State Supreme Courts of New York, Massachusetts, Washington, Montana, Wisconsin, and Ohio construing the workmen's compensation and industrial insurance laws of those States, and the Supreme Court of the United States in the second employers' liability cases, January 15, 1912, be printed for the use of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order will be entered.

The order as agreed to was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That 1,000 additional copies of Senate Document 475, "Workmen's Compensation and Employers' Liability," be printed for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate.

LEVEE PROTECTION AT MOUND CITY, ILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 96) appropriating $10,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levee at Mound City, Ill., which was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the appropriation made by the act entitled "An act appropriating $350,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on the Mississippi River," approved April 3, 1912, is hereby made available for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on rivers tributary to the Mississippi River.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the amendment be concurred in. The motion was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to amend an act entitled 'An act appropriating $350,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on the Mississippi River,' approved April 3, 1912."

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AND EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to have placed before the Senate the bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroads engaged in inerstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill referred to by the Senator from Oregon, in the absence of objection, will be considered as before the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERIAIN. Mr. President, I would have much pre-ferred to have had the distinguished chairman of the commission [Mr. Sutherland] address the Senate in the opening discussion upon this bill, but he prefers to have me first address the Senate, reserving what he has to say in the matter to some further stage of the bill.

Mr. President, the whole purpose of the bill now under consideration, the principles involved, both as to the law governing such legislation and the facts necessary to be considered in the preparation thereof, are so fully discussed and presented in the report of the commission, of which I had the honor to be a member, to the President of the United States and by him transmitted in a special message to Congress, that it would seem to be a work of supererogation to attempt to further dis-cuss the subject. It is a measure, however, of such vast import, involving the rights of so many employers and employees engaged in interstate transportation and affecting such immense financial interests that even if it be difficult to add anything of value to what has been said in the report of the commission, yet I deem it proper, at the risk of repetition, to discuss the subject briefly here.

The principle of compensation for injury or death was first recognized by Congress in the act entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of employment," approved May 30, 1908. That act provides for the payment of compensation for injuries to any person employed by the United States as an artisan or laborer in any of the manufacturing establishments, arsenals, or navy yards, or in the construction of river and harbor or fortification work, or in hazardous employment on construction work in the reclamation of arid lands, or the management or control of the same, or in hazardous employment under the Isthmian Canal Commission, where such injury was received in the course of such employment, unless such injury is due to the negligence or misconduct of the employee injured, and where the injury continues more than 15 days. It provides, further, for the payment to certain next of kin and dependents of the employee in case death results from the injury, and the methods of procedure in case of injury or death are prescribed at length by the act.

It will thus be seen that the justice as well as the policy of the payment of compensation by the Government to its own employees has been fully recognized by Congress.

But the act under consideration is one of first impression, so far as it seeks to regulate interstate commerce or those engaged therein, and its importance necessitates a discussion of the constitutional provision out of which must be derived the power of Congress to legislate upon the subject as well as those provisions which, from the viewpoint of those who oppose the same, seem to restrict, limit, or prohibit the exercise of such power.

As a preliminary step to the discussion it seems pertinent to call attention to conditions which exist with reference to those engaged in interstate commerce and to the necessities which, from the standpoint of a sound public policy, a due regard for justice and the safety of the public, the employees, and those dependent upon them have given birth to the suggestion of the propriety of legislation fixing the liability of the employer and the compensation of the employee or his representatives in case of death.

It is unfortunate that reliable statistics in the United States are not accessible to show the total number of injuries and deaths as the result thereof in the different, and particularly in the hazardous, employments of the country. Nor is it possible to show, except approximately, what employment here is the most hazardous, or what rank in that respect employment in the railway service bears. It would be fair, however, it seems to me, to apply as a standard of comparison, the result of reliable information obtained in England as to the death rate from injuries of those engaged in the different employments. There the annual mortality has been found to be as follows:

Seamen, per 10,000

Miners, per 10,000
Quarrymen, per 10,000
Rallway employees, per 10,000

Nontextile factory operatives, per 10,000

Textile factory operatives, per 10,000

From this it would appear that railway employees rank fourth in the list of mortality per annum, but statistics prove that the annual mortality rate in this country among railway employees is far greater than in Great Britain or in any of the countries of Europe. Railway employment must be ranked as one of the most hazardous of employments in the United States, judging from the carefully compiled statistics of other countries. Certain it is that if the number of those killed and countries. Certain it is that if the number of those killed and injured in all other hazardous employments were added to those killed and injured in railway employment, the figures would not only be terribly appalling, but would shock the minds, hearts, and consciences of the American people, who, as they come and go in the ordinary avocations of life, do not stop to think that for almost every moment of time in each day of the year one or more of their fellow men are being killed or so eximpled and mained as to be thrown upon the cold charities. crippled and maimed as to be thrown upon the cold charities of the world absolutely without hope, themselves and fami-lies dependent upon the private and public charities of the country.

An examination of the statistics furnished by the Interstate Commerce Commission discloses that from June 30, 1809, to June 30, 1907, there were engaged in railway employment for each year the number of persons following.

Mr. President, I am not going to tire the Senate by reading statistics, but I make the general request, without repeating it in each instance, that the statistics I intend to embody in my remarks may be printed in the Record without reading them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I deem it sufficient to say simply that in 1899 there were 928,924 men employed, and in 1907 their number had increased to 1,672,074:

1899	928, 924
1900	1, 017, 653
1901	1, 071, 169

1905	1, 382, 196
1906	1, 521, 355
1907	1, 672, 074

In this connection I submit certain comparative statements and analysis thereof contained in one of the briefs submitted to the commission in the course of the hearings had on the bill under consideration, covering the period from June 30, 1888, to

ANALYSIS OF SUMMARIES.

ANALYSIS OF SUMMARIES.

Summary A.—The first summary presented shows the number of railway employees killed, the number injured, and the total casualties for 20 years from 1888, the first year after the establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to 1907, inclusive. During this period 53,046 employees lost their lives at the post of duty and over 800,000 employees were either maimed or crippled. The total casualties numbered 865,227, an average for the 20 years covered of over 43,000 a year. The per cent column is introduced to facilitate comparison of the years given with the total figures for the entire period.

Summary B.—The next summary shows the number of employees in service and the proportion killed and injured. The falling off in the number employed, as indicated by the figures for the years 1894 to 1898, was due to the panic of 1893, and reflects one of the economics introduced by the railway managements during the hard times following this financial crisis. The per cent column for employees killed clearly indicates the constant recurring death risk of the railway employee. There is hardly any perceptible fluctuation of this ratio for the years shown, and means approximately that 1 employee out of every 400 in service was killed each year. The proportion of injured has gradually increased each year until for 1907, the last year covered, the 5.24 per cent given indicates that 1 employee out of every 20 in service is injured, or that an employee in the service of a railway for 10 years has an even chance of being injured.

Summary C.—This summary, showing the mileage operated and the number of employees killed and injured per 100 miles of line, reflects from another angle the constant recurring death risk year after year. The number linjured increases each year in a greater ratio than the mileage operated, and apparently substantiates the results shown by the injured column of Summary B.

Summary D.—The last summary presented shows the number of minutes clapsing for each casualty and the averag

It is instructive to compare the figures of other countries with those given above, and I draw your attention to those in continental Europe, where workmen's compensation laws have been generally adopted. The figures show that the number of killed and injured in this country, as I have heretofore stated, is much larger in proportion to the number of employees engaged in railway traffic than in continental Europe.

For the years 1908, 1909, and 1910 our commission has made an exhaustive and searching inquiry into the accidents to railroad employees in the United States, a subcommittee (of which I had the honor of being chairman) being formed for that purpose, and blanks being specially devised by the efficient secretary of the commission, Mr. Launcelot Packer, to ascertain the relative seriousness of the injuries, their relation to the numbers employed, and the economic loss to the country as well as to the railroads during that period. The results having been published with our report, I need only call attention to the startling fact that calculations, based on the age of those killed and the actual days of disability of those injured, indicate that approximately 161,634,000 possible days' work were withdrawn from the productive energy of the country solely through accidents to railroad employees. The figures tabulated are indeed appalling, and it is not to be wondered, in view of these facts that in the past 25 years, or I may say within the past decade, there has been a loud and persistent demand on the part of employees engaged in all forms of hazardous employment for a modification of the doctrines which have prevailed and which, in their ultimate effect, have practically cast the burdens of industrial accidents upon the employees and their families, who are least able to bear them, and who have been, in the majority of instances, forced to become objects of public charity or else have been assisted and supported by the insurance organizations of employees themselves that have been created to meet the conditions of modern industrial life. One would suppose that because of the laws which have been passed from time to time requiring the installation of safety appliances and other instrumentalities for the prevention of accidents to employees within the past few years the percentage of employees killed and injured, notwithstanding the increase in the number of such employees, would have gradually diminished, but the contrary is true, and in consequence the number of injured and helpless men and their dependents has been steadily growing larger. The burden of their support, no matter from whence that support comes, gradually became heavier and in consequence, thinking men, whether of the class of employers or employees, in every civilized country have been drawn to a profound consideration of the whole question. The trend of opinion is toward a policy that will make every business bear the burden of industrial accident where human agencies are involved, just as it does and has always done with respect to the inanimate instrumentalities employed.

Let us inquire into the relations of the master and servant as it existed originally, and at common law, and its gradual modification to meet varying social and industrial conditions. The subject is so large that it would be out of place to do more than to state general principles, and that in a most general way. While the fundamental rules may not differ essentially in the various civilized countries, they have found different application, not only in other countries, but as well in the several States of the Union. It was because of the harshness of the modern law of negligence, its injustice to the employee, and the economic waste that has always followed attempts to enforce the claims of employees against the employers that has had much to do with crystallizing the idea of compensation, irrespective of negligence, into concrete legislation whereby the burdens of industrial accident in all employments are being shifted from the employee to the employer and hence upon the business itself.

Strange as it may seem, the United States and the several States of the Union have been rather behind other countries in legislation along the lines of the bill under consideration for the amelioration of conditions growing out of industrial accident. Only within very recent years has the subject been brought to general attention and discussion, although for more than a quarter of a century compensatory legislation has been in force on the Continent of Europe and elsewhere. Changes in the form of this legislation are gradually taking place everywhere as experience suggests them. It is not possible that an ideal condition can ever be attained, but there is certainly reason to hope, judging the future by the past, that the time is not far distant when employer and employee will be brought closer together, and the condition of both be very much improved by wholesome legislation for compensating employees for industrial accidents.

The history of responsibility for tortious acts shows several stages of development common to the leading nations of the These successive stages represented adjustments of the law by legislatures and by courts to the prevailing social policy of the times. There was at first an absolute liability irrespective of negligence for tortious acts, a voluntary act causing harm being inevitably followed by civil responsibility. A successive stage then recognized certain defenses to that absolute liability by appeal to some standard of moral blame, such as "inevitable modern law of negligence with its "command or consent test" of responsibility, which in the last century developed into the test of "implied command from a general command or authority known as the doctrine of 'respondent superior.'" Very similar developments took place in all countries with reference to the liability of the master to his servant for injuries received in the course of his employment, and it became the rule, briefly and generally stated, that the injured servant could not recover from the master except by showing that he was guilty of negligence; in other words, that he had failed in a given case to exercise a proper degree of care or to perform some duty required by the express or implied terms of his contract, and that the injury had resulted therefrom. This rule was adopted when the conditions of industrial life were entirely different from those which exist to-day. The relations between the master and servant were of the simplest kind, and not only did the master come in direct contact with the servant, but each was known to the other, and the servant generally received instructions directly from the master without the intervention of an agent or other person. With the development in social and industrial life these conditions have entirely changed, and relations which were formerly simple have become exceedingly complex. master now is generally not the individual, but an aggregation of individuals in the form of a corporation, employing thousands and some times hundreds of thousands of men, all receiving employment and instructions through numerous agencies in the different departments of the master's work. Not only that, but the master in the great majority of cases does not know his servants and never comes in touch or contact with them. earliest departure from the common-law rule of liability is to earliest departure from the common-law rule of hability is to be found in the case of Priestly v. Fowler (3 Mees, and W_v , 1), decided by Lord Abinger in 1837, where it was held that a master could not be held responsible for an injury to his servant if such injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, and that "the principles of justice and good sense require that a workman should take on himself all the ordinary risks of his employment.'

In 1841 the Supreme Court of South Carolina, in Murray v. South Carolina R. R. (1 McMullan, 385), laid down the doctrine that wherever a company, or an individual, employs several persons to effect by a joint effort any business, each person so employed takes on himself all the risks of the service which do not result from the mismanagement or improper conduct of the company itself, and each servant agrees to take on himself the risk of all injuries to result from the mismanagement or negligence of the other servants of the company engaged in the same undertaking.

In Farwell v. Boston & Worcester R. R. Corporation (4 Met., 49) the question was whether, for damages sustained by one of the persons in the employ of the defendant, by means of the carelessness and negligence of another, the plaintiff has a remedy against the common employer. The court, through Judge Shaw, stated: "The general rule resulting from considera-The court, through tions as well of justice as of policy is that he who engages in the employment of another for the performance of specified duties and services for compensation takes upon himself the natural and ordinary risks and perils incident to the performance of such services, and, in legal presumption, the compensation is adjusted accordingly, and we are not aware of any principle which should except the perils arising from the carelessness and negligence of those who are in the same employment."

These decisions form the basis, largely, of all subsequent decisions involving the relations of master and servant in cases of negligence, and have become as firmly established as the law of the land as if their origin were traced to legislative enact-The result has been to place the burden of accidents caused by the carelessness of a fellow servant on the employee and to compel the employee to assume as a part of his contract of employment the burden of all risks inherent in the trade or business in which he is engaged.

It would be interesting to trace the modification and application of these doctrines of defense, which, together with that of contributory negligence, have their birth in the decisions of the courts rather than in legislative enactment, but it is not practicable to do so. There are as many applications of the rules growing out of them as there are States in the Union, and one might with entire propriety say, as there are courts administering the law in the various States of the Union. It is only necessary to state the underlying principle of the law of negligence as it exists to-day as a result of the decisions of the courts, and in a general way to add that the same restrictions put upon it have prevailed in the Federal as well as in the State courts, where there has been no legislative modification thereof. That law is, that the employer is liable only in case necessity." From this stage developed by degrees the more he is at fault—that is, he must have been negligent in some respect-and this negligence must have been the proximate and sole cause of the accident. Under it the contract of employment carries with it four obligations on the part of the employer. and these are: First, to provide and maintain a reasonably safe place to work; second, to supply reasonably safe machinery, tools, and appliances with which to work; third, to furnish reasonably competent servants to assist in the work; fourth, to promulgate rules and regulations to conduct business on a The default of the employer in any of these safe system. respects resulting in injury to the servant while the servant himself was in the exercise of due care for his own safety, rendered the master liable for such injury. In the same contract, on the other hand, it is agreed on the part of the servant, either expressly or by implication, first, that the servant would assume the ordinary risks of the service which he engaged to perform, including the risk of injury from the negligence of his fellow servants; and, second, that he himself would use rea-sonable care to avoid injury. The defenses which, through the sonable care to avoid injury. The defenses which, through the decisions of the courts, were thus made available to the master to defeat the claims of the servant were, first, that the injury was the result of the negligence of a fellow servant; second, that the injury was one of the risks which the servant had assumed as incident to the employment; and, third, that the servant was not in the exercise of due care or was guilty of contributory negligence.

The result in practice of the application of these rules as enunciated by the courts, with the burden of proof upon the employee, who in the very nature of things has not the facilities for obtaining the evidence necessary to sustain his case, has made recovery impossible in the great majority of cases involving claims of employees for damages for injuries received in the course of their employment.

Nor is that the only result. The negligence basis for compensating for industrial injuries engenders hostility and bitter antagonism between employer and employee; it renders uncertain the claims of those injured, where uncertainty, above all things, should be eliminated, and entails litigation which is tedious, sometimes endless, and always expensive; it makes possible the ambulance-chasing lawyer, who, whether the injured employee has a just claim or not, induces the execution of a contract, under the terms of which he is to receive for his services from 25 per cent to 50 per cent of any amount that may be recovered; it causes great economic waste, and a large part of the money which ought to be paid to the injured employee is dissipated in vexatious litigation, with all its concomitant evils; and, finally, it in effect shifts the burdens of industrial accident from the employer, or, in the final analysis, from the business where it should fall, to the employee, who is least able to bear it.

Many of the States of the Union have gradually modified and some have abolished one or other of the defenses of fellow-servant fault, assumption of risk, and contributory negligence, in some instances measurably restoring the relation between the employer and employee as it existed prior to the decision in Priestly against Fowler, supra, and the other leading cases to which I have referred, making the master liable to the servant for injuries received in the course of his employment; but it may be stated with reasonable certainty that no two States have adopted uniform statutes governing the subject, so that it is practically impossible to harmonize the various decisions of the courts except as to the general principle involved.

It was in this state of the law and under such conditions growing out of its application in the several Commonwealths that Congress passed the employers' liability law, which was approved June 11, 1906, whereby it undertook to establish the relation between employer and employee, abolished the defense of fellow-servant fault, and alleviated the harshness of the doctrine of contributory negligence by providing that in all actions thereafter brought against any common carrier to recover damages for personal injuries to an employee, or where such injuries have resulted in his death, the fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery where his contributory negligence was slight and that of the employer was gross in comparison, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee.

The constitutionality of the act was successfully called in question; not, however, on account of any lack of power upon the part of Congress to legislate upon and to regulate the relations between employers and employees, and between the latter amongst themselves, when engaged in interstate commerce, but because it included many subjects wholly beyond the power to regulate commerce, although dependent for its sanction upon that authority. On the contrary, the power of Congress over the subject of the agencies of interstate commerce, whether animate or inanimate, while so engaged is expressly recognized, and I shall refer to the decision later in this argument.

To meet the objections raised by the Supreme Court, Congress passed the act approved April 22, 1908, which reenacted the provision of the former act with respect to contributory negligence, abolished the fellow-servant rule, and modified that of assumption of risk. The constitutionality of this last act was assailed, but was sustained by the Supreme Court in a decision to which I shall later refer.

While both of these statutes are steps in the right direction, in that they tend to alleviate the conditions of employees engaged in interstate commerce, they yet fail to meet the necessities of the situation, because in the final analysis they afford relief to the comparatively few who can establish negligence on the part of the employer and leave the majority of the employees without any remedy for injuries resulting from risks inherent in the business and in cases not covered in terms by the provisions of the act.

Reliable statistics are not obtainable in this country showing the proportion of accidents due to the carelessness of the employee, those due to the employee, and those inherent in the trade or business; but the Imperial Insurance Office of Germany publishes at 10-year intervals special studies of industrial accidents compensated under the national accident insurance system for workmen. It would be fair to use the figures thus compiled for purposes of comparison here, for it is probable that the results would not be materially different in this country if reliable data were accessible. I call attention to the German statistics for the two decades ending 1897 and 1907, as published in Bulletin 92 of the Bureau of Labor, January, 1011, at page 65, as follows:

If the figures in the foregoing tab! are accurate, or approximately so, and if the same conditions had existed in the United States, recoveries under the present liability laws could have been had in 1897 in 12.06 per cent of the cases of accidents, and in 1907 in 16.81 per cent, these being the numbers attributable to the fault of the employer, whilst all other accidents were due either to the fault of the workman, or of employer and workman, or of the fellow workman or a third party, or the general hazard of the industry, or other causes. How much to be preferred, therefore, is a law like the one under consideration, which abolishes the doctrine of negligence and compensates for injuries without regard to fault?

So complex have become the instrumentalities and appliances for earrying on interstate commerce that in the majority of cases it is impossible to fix the blame for accidents, or to ascertain whether the employer or employee is at fault, or whether they are, in given cases, inherent in the business itself. To meet innumerable cases, therefore, in which there is at present no relief attainable under liability laws, to put an end to litigation, to save the present great economic waste, to fix the status of those injured without regard to negligence or fault, and to place the burden of accident where in justice and on the grounds of public policy it properly belongs, most of the civilized countries of the world, and many of the States of the Union, have resorted to the principle of compensation for all injuries, doing away entirely with the doctrine of negligence as the basic principle of recovery and abolishing the defenses which have been instrumental in defeating recovery in times past. In other words, to the enactment of laws which allow a compensation to the employee for accidents which occasion injury or death without the necessity for tracing them to fault in either party, proportionate to the wage scale of the employee at the time of such injury or death.

This the act under consideration has attempted to do. The tendency of all civilized countries has been toward the enactment of laws fixing beforehand definitely the liability of the master and the rights of the employee through the instrumentality of compensatory legislation. It would be interesting to trace the development of this legislation through its several stages in this and other countries, but works upon the subject are easily accessible, and I do not deem it necessary to attempt more than to call attention to the fact that since the const more than to call attention to the fact that, since the enactment of the first law upon the subject by Germany in 1884, with its subsequent modification and amendments, the following countries have moved along the lines toward which the act under consideration is tending: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Greece, Hungary, Great Britain, Alberta, British Columbia, Quebec, Cape of Good Hope, Transvaal, New Zealand, New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia, Western Australia, Italy, Laxemburg, Netherlands, Norway, Russia, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland.

Sweden, and Switzerland. Having traced briefly the history of the growth and develop-ment of the law of liability for negligence, and the defenses which have gradually become available to defeat recovery in the majority of cases, and having shown that under the present system no recovery can be had for accidents inherent in the trade or due to the negligence of the employee, which together constitute the major part of accidents in industrial life, I will discuss the act under consideration from the constitutional standpoint.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President-The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Do I understand the Senator, in quoting the experiences of other countries, to refer to their laws as being confined to railroads and transportation companies?

Mr. CHAMBERIAIN. The laws of continental countries cover all hazardous enterprises.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. All hazardous enterprises? Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Manufacturing and mining—Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As well as transportation? Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They cover nearly all the hazardous To proceed with the discussion of the act from the constitutional standpoint:

First. Congress has the power to exercise control over the relations of common carriers by railroads and their employees while both are engaged in interstate commerce under the commerce clause of the Constitution, which vests in it the auto regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

Second. There is no restriction upon the exercise of this power imposed either by

(a) The fifth amendment, which provides that no person be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

(b) The seventh amendment, which provides-

In suits at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed $20 the right of trial by jury shall be preserved.

(c) The fourteenth amendment, which provides that no State shalldeprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

The fourteenth amendment really is an inhibition against the States upon the enactment of laws which shall violate the provisions of the fourteenth amendment. I have referred to it here because it is referred to in so many of the decisions where the fourteenth amendment is invoked as a defense to legislation enacted by the several States of the Union.

The Supreme Court of the United States, it seems to me, has settled the question that Congress has the power under the commerce clause to reasonably regulate the relations between employer and employee where both are engaged in foreign commerce or in commerce between the States, including commerce between the District of Columbia and a State or in the District of Columbia; and that there are no restrictions, limitations, or inhibitions in either the fifth, the seventh, or the fourteenth amendments that would prevent the full exercise of that power in the manner it is sought to be exercised in the act under consideration, or that would render the act obnoxious to any other constitutional provision.

I will discuss these propositions in their order as briefly as it is possible to do so.

First. Congress has the power under the commerce clause to legislate upon and to exercise control over the relations of employers and employees while both are engaged in interstate Chief Justice Marshall, in Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat., 196), in discussing the power of Congress under the commerce clause,

We are now arrived at the inquiry, What is this power? It is the power to regulate; that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed. This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution. * * If, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States. The wisdom and the discretion of Congress, their identity with the people, and the influence which their constituents possess at elections are in this, as in many other instances, as that, for example, of declaring war, the sole restraints on which they have relied to secure them from its abuse. They are restraints on which the people must often rely solely in all representative governments.

As sustaining the same proposition I refer to the following

As sustaining the same proposition I refer to the following cases: Lottery case, 188 U. S., 354; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S., 335; Employers' Liability cases, 207 U. Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Mississippi? Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In this bill as it came from the author there was a provision to which my attention was called which seemed to me to be very objectionable. It was a provision intended to shift the losses from the employer to the consuming public. It was a provision directing virtually the Interstate Commerce Commission to take into consideration when it was dealing with the question of the reasonableness of rates—
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That was eliminated, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and I want to emphasize it. directed virtually the Interstate Commerce Commission to take into consideration when fixing rates the loss that was placed on these railroads by the payment of this compensation.

I had handed me this morning a circular attacking this bill upon the ground that that provision was in it. With that attack I had, of course, a very great deal of sympathy, because if you enable the transportation companies merely to charge up to the consumer, the shipper, the general public, all these things it would have no tendency to make them any more careful than they are now. I think the actual statistics show now that we and wound on our railroads 50 persons where in Great Britain 1 is killed or wounded in the same service.

I want, therefore, in this connection, with the consent of the Senator, to call attention to the fact that section 31 of the House bill has been stricken out by the Senate committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That has been eliminated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the fact.
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me a moment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill was introduced in both

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will revise that for the RECORD. I do not mean the House bill. I meant the first print of the bill as introduced by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senate Committee on the Judiciary eliminated the section to which the Senater from Mississippi has called attention.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Section 31 of the bill as introduced.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; and the House committee has not yet concluded its consideration of the bill. What will happen to the section there of course we do not know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That was a mere slip of the tongue, about the House bill. I merely meant the printed bill before me. Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield. Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from Oregon, in connection with what the Senator from Mississippi has invited attention to, if the bill does not, notwithstanding the elimination referred to, fix the expenses of administering the law on the people of the United States through the Treasury?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is not any question about that, and I am frank enough to say that in the final analysis in the administration of this bill the consumer will have to pay the expenses incurred under it.

In this connection, inasmuch as the question has been raised, I want to call the attention of the Senate to a little pamphlet by Mr. Edward Bunnell Phelps, who is the editor of the American Underwriter, on the cost of this added expense to the consumer. He makes a computation from the data obtained by the commission at its hearings, and says:

A complete shift to the traveling public by American railways of the entire presumable cost of the United States commission's plan of workmen's compensation, as the commission figures it out, would add eighty-nine one-hundredths of 1 per cent to the operating expenses of the railway service of this country, had not a large part of the cost already been included in their expenses for the last three years. Even if the entire eighty-nine one-hundredths of 1 per cent were to be added and the cost evenly distributed all along the line, the men who had been paying $50 for a railway ticket or for the use of a freight car would be asked henceforth to pay precisely $50.45 for that same service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but, Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon will forgive me a moment more, if I believed that the effect of this bill, with section 31 stricken out, would be naturally to enable the railroads anyhow to charge up their negligence and carelessness and maladminstration to the shipping public, instead of charging it to their stockholders, and therefore making their stockholders more careful about whom they selected as directors and presidents, I would not be in favor of the bill. If, with the provision stricken out, they would still do that, I shall offer at the proper time a provision in the language of section 31, except that instead of saying that it shall be declared to be the policy of Congress that the burden under this act shall be considered an element in the cost of transportation, I shall insert the word "not," so as to read "not the policy, and the Interstate Commerce Commission in any proceeding before it affecting rates is expressly directed not to recognize the effect of this policy."

Now, as to the point mentioned by the Senator from Texas, the mere compensation of these adjusters and that sort of thing, I think is almost infinitesimal in comparison with the entire matter. In addition to that, it seems to me that the public does owe some duty to the men employed and injured.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask the Senator if he does not think that the animate agencies of interstate commerce-that is, the men-ought to be placed on as lofty a plane as the inanimate agencies; that is, the cars?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is precisely what I am contending

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But in the final analysis that expense comes out of the consumer. It must come out of the consumer, in the very nature of things.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I beg the Senator's pardon. If I am conducting a factory, and the Senator is conducting another. and I conduct mine so carefully and so well, or, to be complimentary, the Senator conducts his so carefully and so well, as to have very little broken machinery, very few accidents to boilers, and various other things, if he keeps things well oiled and well taken care of, he can add every item of that saving to the dividends of his stockholders. And if I am careless about mine I have to take it out of the dividends of my stockholders, because he and I are engaged in a competitive business, and he with good administration will fix the price at his cost of production plus a fair profit, unless we combine.

Now, railroads can not fix the price. The best-conducted railroad can not fix the price for another, because they do not compete. They run in different territory. So the State, the Government, has to fix the price of transportation. But in general industrial business, except at the minimum, except under the best administration, the charges of deterioration and destruction of machinery are not charged to the consumer, for every dollar is taken out of the pockets of the stockholders in their dividends.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can not see, whether a business is well conducted or ill conducted, but that the expenses of operation, whether good or bad, must be deducted from the earnings of the industrial enterprise, whatever it may be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Surely, then, the Senator has not understood me if he says he can not see any difference in operating expenses. The main difference between a well-conducted business and a badly conducted business would be in regard to small operating expenses in comparison with the output and large operating expenses in comparison with the output. When you come to a very badly conducted business and a very wellconducted business the difference in the life of machines is one of the most important things. If you come to the simplest business, like farming, for example, the farmer who takes care of his mowers and reapers and plows and wagons and the farmer who does not take care of them are differentiated by a sum sufficient to cause the one farmer to make money and the other to go out of profitable business. That is true of all sorts of business.

In this connection I will say that one of the greatest fallacies in economic administration is that we presume to deal with an imaginary average when, of course, there is none. Some people, and notably our friends on the other side of the Chamber, are dealing with business the least well administered, with business the least economically conducted, and then they want to carry it on with a profit. The real truth is that we ought to view our legislation from the standpoint of well-conducted business and not from the standpoint of badly conducted business

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask the Senator if he does not think it will tend to make the railroad companies more careful if they find by a law which we have enacted that they are compelled to pay a fixed liability in cases of accident?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the proposition I am disputing. I am in favor of the bill, but the proposition I have in mind is that if by any means you permit the transportation companies to charge up to the shipping public the losses which they have incurred largely by their own negligence or carelessness you do not accomplish the main purpose that you and I ought to have in view. The main purpose that you and I ought to have in view is not the purpose of compensating the man who is injured or of compensating the widow and children of the man who is killed but to prevent the man from being killed and the man from being injured.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the inevitable tendency of this legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think so, too, but that tendency will be emphasized if you provide that the carriers must themselves lose on account of these accidents.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion to the Senator from Mississippi? The Senator from Mississippi of course will recognize that some accidents happening on a railroad and happening in any industry are

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but I also recognize that they ought to be only one-aftieth of what we now suffer. Great Britain has demonstrated that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not care for the exact figures now. It is sufficient for the purpose of illustrating what I am going to say to have it admitted that some number of accidents are

Now, with reference to those accidents which are inevitable I think the Senator from Mississippi will concede that that would be a proper element to charge against the consumer or against

Mr. WILLIAMS. If they could be differentiated from the others, I think I would agree with you about that, but you must have a general rule after all. So I would make a general rule to fit the major part and not the minor part of accidents

Mr. SUTHERLAND. With the permission of the Senator from Oregon I will say that after this law goes into operation, I imagine the Interstate Commerce Commission will discover what number of accidents are normal or are properly to be charged as the inevitable risks of the industry; and to that extent—of course, it will not be an exact figure—but as nearly as possible to that extent it will permit them to enter into its calculation fixing the amount of charges which the railroad company may make. Now, then, having determined that, when any railroad company exceeds that by negligence or in any other way, to that extent it will be penalized. It can collect from the traveling public and to the extent that it may curtail its accidents so that they fall below the normal, the stockholders will reap the benefit of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator is right, but the Senator from Oregon had just made the admission that, in his opinion, all of it must come out of the shipper, or, as we call it for the purpose of discussion, the consumer, because the consumer of the transportation is the shipper.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just as all other expenses of operation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was that admission I was calling attention to, and it is because of that admission, under the provisions of this bill, that I shall at the proper time offer an amendment directing the Interstate Commerce Commission not to consider it, because, even if what the Senator from Utah says is true, to wit, that a certain number of unavoidable accidents occur out of the natural hazard of business than can not be avoided by any human intelligence or any human carefulness or foresight, and even if that part ought to be charged to the consumer, it is so small in comparison with the general loss that rather than run any risk of having it all charged up to the consumer and considered by the Interstate Commerce Commission as a factor in fixing rates, I would make the employer stand that loss also, with the idea of making him doubly careful and with the idea of preventing loss of life and limb, which is much more important than compensating for it after it has happened.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in making the admission that in the final analysis the expense must come out of the consumer I did not mean to confess that in the first instance the expense would come out of the consumer; but the expense created under this act might be more than any company in a certain contingency could stand. It has to come from some-where, and like the expense of operation in other cases it seems to me it would have to come out of the earnings, and that comes out of the consumer in the end.

In this connection I might say that the statistics gathered by the commission show in a general way that the railroad companies pay now about ten millions per annum under the liability laws, and practically only about five millions of that money goes to the employees. The balance is a great economic waste. It goes somewhere; it does not go to the employee.

The best computation we have been able to make is that under this bill the amount that the railroad companies will be compelled to pay will be about $15,000,000, and all of it goes to the employee. That is the purpose of this legislation. It is to stop that economic waste and see to it that the people who are injured shall have the benefit of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am in perfect sympathy with that purpose and I think the bill is a very great improvement upon existing conditions. I hope the Senator does not misunder. stand me. But while we are considering it I was thinking about making the bill better still.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have been drawn a ittle away from the orderly discussion of this object as I wanted to present it. I did not intend at this time to discuss the features of the bill, but simply to discuss it from the legal standpoint and leave to my fellow members of the committee or to some one else the provisions of the bill in detail. However, I may have something to say about that myself later on.

In Southern Railway Co. v. United States, supra, it was insisted inter alia that the safety-appliance acts of Congress should be pronounced invalid, as being in excess of the power of Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution. objection was overruled (164 Fed., 347), and the Supreme Court of the United States, Justice Van Devanter rendering the decision, said:

of the United States, Justice Van Devanter rendering the decision, said:

We then come to the question whether these acts are within the power of Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution, considering that they are not confined to vehicles used in moving interstate traffic. The answer to this question depends upon another, which is, Is there a real or substantial relation or connection between what is required by these acts in respect of rehicles used in moving intrastate traffic and the object which the acts obviously are designed to attain, namely, the safety of interstating it in another way, Is there such a close or direct relation or connection between the two classes of traffic, when moving over the same railroad, as to make it certain that the safety of the interstate traffic and of those who are employed in its movement? Or, stating it in another way, Is there such a close or direct relation or connection between the two classes of traffic, when moving over the same railroad, as to make it certain that the safety of the interstate traffic and of those who are employed in its movement will be promoted in a real or substantial sense by applying the requirements of these acts to vehicles used in moving the traffic which is intrastate as well as to those used in moving the traffic which is intrastate as the two chicles used in moving the traffic which is interstate? If the answer to this question, as doubly stated, be in the affirmative, then the principal question must be answered in the same way. And this is so, not because Congress possesses any power to regulate interstate commerce as such, but because its power to regulate interstate commerce is plenary and competently may be exerted to secure the safety of the persons and property transported therein and of those who are employed in such transportation, ac matter what may be the source of the dangers which threaten it. That is to say, it is no objection to such an exertion of this power that the dangers intended to be avoided arise, in wh

The act of Congress approved June 11, 1906, entitled "An act relating to liability of common carriers engaged in commerce between the States and between the States and foreign nations to their employees," was not sustained by the court, but the power to regulate the relation of master and servant to the extent that regulations adopted by Congress on that subject are solely confined to interstate commerce was expressly recognized. Justice Moody, while dissenting from the conclusion reached by the court, concurred in the view of the majority as to the power of Congress, and further elaborated the subject in the following language:

It would seem, therefore, that when persons are employed in inter-state or foreign commerce, as the employment is an essential part of that commerce its terms and conditions and the rights and duties which grow out of it are under the control of Congress subject only to the limits on the exercise of that control prescribed in the Constitution. (Employers' Liability cases, 207 U. S., 463.)

To meet the constitutional objection to the act of June 11, 1906, the act of April 22, 1908, was passed by Congress and the act amendatory thereof of April 5, 1910. The constitutionality of these acts was assailed on practically the same grounds as those urged against the act of June 11, 1906, and the cases all submitted and decided by the Supreme Court at the same time; and in one opinion, rendered January 15, 1912, the acts were sustained in their entirety in Mondou v. New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., supra. The power and authority of Congress, under the commerce clause, to regulate the relations of common carriers by railroad and their employees, while both are engaged in such commerce, was fully sustained in an exhaustive opinion pronounced by Justice Van Devanter. In the course of his opinion he said:

course of his opinion he said:

The clauses in the Constitution (Art. I, sec. 8, clauses 3 and 18) which confer upon Congress the power "to regulate commerce * * among the several States" and "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper" for the purpose have been considered by this court so often and in such varied connections that some propositions bearing upon the extent and nature of this power have come to be so firmly settled as no longer to be open to dispute, among them being these:

1. The term "commerce" comprehends more than the mere exchange of goods. It embraces commercial intercourse in all its branches, including transportation of passengers and property by common carriers, whether carried on by water or by land.

2. The phrase "among the several States" marks the distinction, for the purpose of governmental regulation, between commerce which concerns two or more States and commerce which is confined to a single State and does not affect other States, the power to regulate the former being conferred upon Congress and the regulation of the latter remaining with the States severally.

3. "To regulate" in the sense intended, is to foster, protect, control, and restrain, with appropriate regard for the welfare of those who are immediately concerned and of the public at large.

4. This power over commerce among the States, so conferred upon Congress, is complete in itself, extends incidentally to every instrument and agent by which such commerce is carried on, may be exerted to its utmost extent over every part of such commerce, and is subject to no limitations save such as are prescribed in the Constitution. But, of course, it does not extend to any matter or thing which does not have a real or substantial relation to some part of such commerce.

5. Among the instruments and agents to which the power extends are the railroads over which transportation from one State to another is conducted, the engines and cars by which such transportation is effected, and all who are in anywise engaged in such transportation, whether as common carriers or as their employees.

6. The duties of common carriers in respect of the safety of their employees, while both are engaged in commerce among the States, and the liability of the former for lajuries sustained by the latter, while both are so engaged, have a real or substantial relation to such commerce, and therefore are within the range of this power. Cooley v. Board of Wardens, 12 How., 299, 315-317; The Lottawanna, 21 Wall., 558, 577; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S., 99, 103-105; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S., 465, 479; Nashville, etc., Railway Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S., 96, 99; Peirce v. Van Dusen, 78 Fed., 693, 698-700; Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S., 368, 278; Patterson v. Bark Endora, 190 U. S., 169, 176; Johnson v. Southern Pacific Co., 196 U. S., 1; Schlemmer v. Buffalo, etc., Railway Co., 205 U. S., 1; Employers' Liability Cases, 207 U. S., 463, 495; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S., 161, 176-178; Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 221 U. S., 612, 618; Southern Railway Co. v. United States, 222 U. S., 20. He further held that—

He further held that-

In view of these settled propositions it does not admit of doubt that the answer to the first of the questions before stated must be that Congress in the exertion of its power over interstate commerce may regulate the relations of common carriers by railroad and their employees while both are engaged in such commerce, subject always to the limitations prescribed in the Constitution, and to the qualification that the particulars in which those relations are regulated must have a real or substantial connection with the interstate commerce in which the carriers and their employees are engaged.

In this opinion the court decided adversely to the contentions of the defendants that the act in question violated any of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and applyprovisions of the Constitution of the United States, and applying the law as there enunciated to the compensation act now under consideration Congress has plenary power over the subject attempted to be covered by the provisions thereof.

In the case of Adair v. United States (208 U. S., 161) Justice

Harlan expressly recognized that the court in the employers' liability cases had sustained the power of Congress with respect to the relation of master and servant while both are engaged in interstate commerce, holding that—

In that case the court sustained the authority of Congress under this power to regulate interstate commerce and prescribe the rule of liability as between interstate carriers and its employees in such interstate commerce in cases of personal injuries received by employees while actually engaged in such commerce.

In the case of Atlantic Coast Line v. Riverside Mills (219) U. S., 201) Justice Lurton, speaking for the court, said :

The test of power

Said Mr. Justice White, in the employers' liability cases heretofore referred to-is not merely the matter regulated, but whether the regulation is directly one of interstate commerce or is embraced within the grant conferred on Congress to use all lawful means necessary and appropriate to the execution of the power to regulate commerce.

In Baltimore & Ohio Railroad v. Interstate Commerce Commission (221 U. S., 612) Mr. Justice Hughes said:

By virtue of its power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce Congress may enact laws for the safeguarding of the persons and prop-erty that are transported in that commerce and all of those who are employed in transporting them.

It will thus be seen from this brief reference to the decisions of the Supreme Court that the power and authority of Congress under the commerce clause is fully recognized as extending to the health, the lives, and the limbs, as well as to the property, of the citizen when these or any of them are in any way engaged in or affected by interstate transportation.

There can be no reason, either in law or morals, in this day and generation for recognizing the application of the commerce clause of the Constitution to property, to the vehicles and machinery, and to the appliances used in commerce between the States, and denying its application for the protection of the lives and limbs of the employees, who are as much, if not more, necessary to the conduct of the traffic than are the other agencies used therein. It has therefore been found by the courts to be necessary to extend the rule beyond any limits that might have been conceived of by the framers of the Constitution when that instrument was prepared.

Innumerable decisions might be cited to show that the commerce clause has been extended in its application to the persons, as well as to the things involved in interstate commerce; but these recent cases to which attention has been called are sufficient, it seems to me, to show the universal applicability of this clause to all of the instrumentalities and agencies of interthis clause to all of the instrumentalities and agencies of inter-state commerce. But, conceding this to be true, are there any inhibitions against the power of Congress under the commerce clause in any other provision of the Constitution? Because if there are any restrictions upon its extension to the regulation of the relations between employer and employee, such restrictions to that extent limit or forbid such regulation.

Second. Neither the fifth, the seventh, nor the fourteenth amendments limit or restrict the power of Congress to exercise plenary power over the subject under discussion.

Does the fifth amendment, which forbids that any person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without day persons of law, and the taking of private property for public use without just compensation, limit or restrict the power of Congress under the commerce clause? If it does, the act under considera-tion is void. I maintain that the act in question is not obnoxious to the fifth amendment, and in considering this question it is appropriate to consider the rights of both the employer and the employee as affected by the fifth amendment.

The act under consideration from and after the time of its taking effect undoubtedly affects the statutory as well as the common-law rights of the employee to the extent, first, that it takes away from him the right of action which he now has against his employer for damages for injuries occasioned by the negligence of the employer; and, second, it fixes the maximum amount of compensation that he shall receive for the classes of injuries mentioned in the act, as well as the amount recoverable by his representatives in case of death; in both of which cases the amount now recoverable is dependent upon the verdict of the jury, unless, as in some States, the maximum of recovery in case of death is fixed by statute.

This right of action, whether under statute or under the common law, is not a property or a vested right within the meaning of the fifth amendment to the Constitution. It is settled by a long line of authorities that there is no vested right under the Constitution in any common-law right of action or remedy. In

Munn v. Illinois (94 U. S., 113), the court said:

But a mere common-law regulation of trade or business may be changed by statute. A person has no property, no vested interest, in any rule of the common law. That is only one of the forms of municipal law, and is no more sacred than any other. Hights of property which have been created by the common law can not be taken away without due process; but the law itself, as a rule of conduct, may be changed at the will, or even at the whim, of the legislature, unless prevented by constitutional limitations. Indeed, the great office of statutes is to remedy defects in the common law as they are developed and to adapt it to the changes of time and circumstances.

To the same effect is the decision of the court in Campbell v. Holt (115 U. S., 628), where it was insisted that the right to defense is a vested right and a right of property which is protected by the provisions of the fifth amendment, and the court say:

by the provisions of the fifth amendment, and the court say:

It is to be observed that the words "vested right" is nowhere used in the Constitution, neither in the original instrument nor in any of the amendments to it.

We understand very well what is meant by a vested right to real estate, to personal property, or to incorporeal hereditaments. But when we get beyond this, although vested rights may exist, they are better described by some more exact term, as the phrase itself is not one found in the language of the Constitution.

Judge Cooley, Constitutional Limitations, page 438, says:

"Vested rights can not be taken away by legislative enactments, but a right can not be considered a vested right unless it is something more than such a mere expectation as may be based upon the anticipated continuance of the present general laws. The legislators may change such general laws constitutionally except as to a right of interest that may have already accrued or became perfected. * * In organized society every man holds all he possesses and looks forward to all he hopes for through the aid and under the protection of the laws; but as changes of circumstances and of public opinion, as well as other reasons affecting the public policy, are all the while calling for changes in the laws, and as these changes must influence more or less the value and stability of private relations and strengthen or destroy well-founded hopes, and as the power to make very many of them could not be disputed without denying the right of the political community to prosper and advance, it is obvious that many rights, privileges, and exemptions that usually pertain to ownership under a particular state of law and many reasonable expectations can not be regarded as vested rights in any sense."

Some of the States have in their constitutions, in substance, the provision of Magna Charta: "Every man shall have a remedy for injury done him in person, property, or reputation." Nevertheless, the principle last above stated has been sustained in St stitutional provision. Instances are: Templeton v. Linn Co. (51 L. R. A., 730), in which the supreme court of Oregon said:

"The words, 'and every man shall have a remedy by due process of law for injury done him in person, property, or reputation,' are claimed to operate as a guaranty in favor of all persons who might be injured by a county's neglect, that the legislature should never so change the statute as to destroy the liability of such county. In other words, the constitution found a certain liability created by statute resting upon the several counties and tied the hands of the legislature so that such liability should endure as long as the constitution shall remain in force. As a proposition of constitutional law this contention seems startling, and although the constitutions of many of the States of the Union contain substantially the same provision as section 10, supra, no judicial authority was cited upon the argument in support of it, and I think it may be safely assumed that none exists. * * At the time of the repeal the plaintiff had no cause of action against Linn County, and her sole cause of complaint is that the repeal of the statute before the injury cut off a means of action which she otherwise would have had against the county. * * Vested rights are placed under constitutional protection and can not be destroyed by legislation. Not so with those expectancies and possibilities in which the party has no present will list we will be supplied to the statute before the injury cut off a means of action which she otherwise would have had against the county. * * Vested rights are placed under constitutional protection and can not be destroyed by legislation. Not so with those expectancies and possibilities in which the party has no present will list may be safely as a proposition of the statute before the injury cut off a means of action which she otherwise would have had a gainst the county. * * Vested rights are placed under constitutional protection and can not be destroyed by legislation. Not tional protection and can not be destroyed by legislation. Not so with those expectancies and possibilities in which the party has no present interests."

Williams v. Galveston (90 S. W. Rep., 505, Tex. Civ. App.), in which the court said:

"The citizen has no property right in a rule at law; and while rights may accrue to him under the operation of a legal rule which becomes vested and can not be taken away from him by the change of the rule, he can not be heard to complain if, before such property rights become vested, the rule is so changed that no rights can accrue thereunder."

In the Territory of New Mexico a statute which limited the liability for personal injury was attacked as unconstitutional because it deprived an injured person of the right to compensation for an injury without due process of law, and the court in disposing of this contention said:

tion for an injury without due process of law, and the court in disposing of this contention said:

Appellant contends that it (the statute) is unconstitutional in that it deprives her of her property without due process of law. This contention is based upon the hypothesis that she has a cause of action against the appellee, which is property; and the act deprives her of it without the "judgment of her peers and the law of the land." This is petitio principii, in assuming that she has a cause of action. Conceding that a cause of action for personal injuries is property, the cause of action—i. e., the property—must exist before one can be deprived of it at all. A statute which abrogates a cause of action for a personal injury before such cause of action has arisen, or before the injury occurs, or requires certain things to be done by the injured party as conditions precedent to a cause of action, does not deprive the injured party of his property without due process of law. For, in view of such a statute, the party has or can have no cause of action until the conditions of the statute which give it have been performed. It is certainly within the power of a legislature to declare what facts, occurring within its jurisdiction, after the passage of the act, shall or shall not constitute a cause of action, though such facts may or may not, if occurring before the legislative enactment, have been actionable. In other words, a legislature may create a right of action which never existed before, or abolish one that had before existed, if, in doing so, it does not affect rights which vested prior thereto. A party injured after a legislature has taken away the right of action for personal injuries can no more complain of it than a party against whom a right of action is given for an injury resulting in death can of such a legislative enactment. For the one party is no more injuriously affected by such legislation than the other. In the one case, what was before actionable cases to be so; in the other, what was not before

A statute in Pennsylvania provided that-when any person shall sustain personal injury or loss of life while lawfully engaged or employed on or about the roads, works, depots, and premises of a railroad company, or in or about any train or car therein or thereon, of which company such person is not an employee, the right of action and recovery in all such cases against the company shall be such only as would exist if such person were an employee, provided that this section shall not apply to passengers.

This statute was attacked as in conflict with the fourteenth amendment, in that it deprived the plaintiff of his remedy for injury occasioned by the negligence of the defendant and was a denial of due process of law. When the case came before the Supreme Court of the United States in Martin v. Pittsburg, etc., Ry Co. (203 U. S., 284) the court, through Justice White, said:

The contention that because in the cases referred to the operation of the State laws, which were sustained, was to augment the liability of a carrier, therefore the rulings are inapposite here, where the consequence of the application of the State statute may be to lessen the carrier's liability, rests upon a distinction without a difference. The result of the previous rulings was to recognize, in the absence of action by Congress, the power of the States to legislate, and, of course, this power involved the authority to regulate as the State might deem best for the public good, without reference to whether the effect of the legislation might be to limit or broaden the responsibility of the carrier. In other words, the assertion of Federal right is disposed of when we determine the question of power, and doing so does not involve considering the wisdom with which the lawful power may have been understated conditions exerted.

And the views previously stated are adequate to dispose of the assertion that the Pennsylvania statute is void for repugnancy to the fourteenth amendment. If it be conceded, as contended, that the plaintiff in error could have recovered but for the statute, it does not follow that the Legislature of Pennsylvania in preventing a recovery took away a vested right or a right of property. As the accident from which the cause of action is asserted to have arisen occurred long after the passage of the statute, it is difficult to grasp the contention that the statute deprived the plaintiff in error of the rights just stated. Such a contention in reason must rest upon the proposition that the State of Pennsylvania was without power to legislate on the subject—a proposition which we have adversely disposed of. This must be, since it would clearly follow if the argument relied upon were maintained, that the State would be without power on the subject. For it can not be said that the State had authority in the premises if that authority did not even extend to prescribing a rule which would be applicable to conditions wholly arising in the future.

And again, in Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Mottley (219 U. S., 467), in disposing of the contention of the right to a remedy for a tort inflicted in the future, the court held that, even in the case of a contract right where the consideration had been fully paid, it was within the regulative power of Congress under the commerce clause, and held that even after the enactment of the act of June 29, 1906, known as the interstate com-merce act, it was unlawful for a carrier to issue interstate transportation in pursuance of a prior existing contract to do so as compensation for injuries received, and, even though valid when made, such a contract can not now be enforced against the carrier by suit.

That is where a man and his wife were seriously injured in a railroad accident, and in settling the case the company agreed to give and the parties agreed to accept an annual pass during the rest of their lives as full compensation for the injury, but after the passage of the Sherman Act the Supreme Court held that that contract was revoked under the terms of the act, and that the railroad company had no power to issue passes to them even in the face of a contract which was in existence prior to the enactment of that law.

And in the case of Mondou v. New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., to which I have heretofore referred, the court reaffirmed the doctrine laid down in the case of Munn v. Illinois (94 U. S., 113), that a person has no property nor vested interest in any rule of the common law, and held-

The natural tendency of the changes described-

Referring to changes in the common-law defenses-

Referring to changes in the common-law defenses—is to impel the carriers to avoid or prevent the negligent acts and omissions which are made the bases of the rights of recovery which the statute creates and defines; and, as whatever makes for that end tends to promote the safety of the employees and to advance the commerce in which they are engaged, we entertain no doubt that in making those changes Congress acted within the limits of the discretion confided to it by the Constitution. (Lottery Case, 188 U. S., 321, 353, 355; Atlantic Coast Line R. R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, 219 U. S., 186, 293.)

We are not unmindful that that end was being measurably attained through the remedial legislation of the several States, but that legislation has been far from uniform, and it undoubtedly rested with Congress to determine whether a national law, operating uniformly in all the States upon all carriers by railroad engaged in interstate commerce, would better subserve the needs of that commerce. (The Lottawanna, 21 Wall., 558, 581-582; Baltimore & Ohio R. R. v. Baugh, 149 U. S., 368, 378-379.)

These decisions, and others which might be cited, establish the doctrine that there is no property right involved in either the common law or statutory right of action for damages, or in the remedy, that is not subject to the regulative power of the commerce clause or which may not be taken away without making the act obnoxious to the due-process clause of either the fifth or the fourteenth amendments to the Constitution.

While the act under consideration cuts off the rights of the employee engaged in interstate commerce in so far as his right of action and his remedy is concerned, it also destroys the defenses, both at common law and under statutes, of the employer while engaged in interstate commerce, in that, first, it abolishes the defenses of assumption of risk, contributory negligence, and fault of the fellow servant; and, second, it imposes a fixed and compulsory liability upon the carrier while engaged in such commerce, without regard to fault or negligence, whether upon his own part or upon the part of the employee, or whether inherent in the business, for injuries received by the employee.

Is this obliteration of these defenses, whether by Congress or by State legislatures, and the imposition of liability without fault a violation of the due process clause of either the fifth or the fourteenth amendments? With reference to this it may be stated, as in the case of an employee, if these defenses are property or vested rights, or if the imposition of liability without fault is the taking of property without due process of law, then the act under consideration must be held as inhibited by these constitutional provisions, and therefore void and beyond the power of Congress. The authorities cited fully sustain the doctrine that these defenses do not constitute a vested right, nor are they property within the meaning of the fifth and fourteenth amendments; and Congress has the power to abolish or modify them, as well as to substitute others in their stead if in its wisdom it sees proper to do so.

But it is contended that imposing a liability upon the employer engaged in interstate commerce to pay an employee while engaged in such commerce, where there is no fault upon the part of the employer, even though there may be negligence and fault on the part of the employee, is the taking of private property without due process of law and without compensation. I maintain that the doctrine is well established by many of the courts of last resort in many of the States of the Union and by the Supreme Court of the United States, where the question has been raised, that the imposition of liability without fault is not the taking of private property without compensation nor violative of the right of due process of law. Instances of statutes imposing liability without fault are not new in national or State legislation.

Sections 4585 and 4803, Revised Statutes of the United States. provide for the assessment and collection by the collectors of customs at the several ports of the United States from the master or owner of every vessel of the United States arriving from a foreign port, or of every registered vessel employed in the coasting trade, before such vessel should be admitted to entry, the sum of 40 cents per month for each and every seaman employed; the moneys so collected to be placed to the credit of a fund for the relief of sick and disabled seamen. The principle of these acts originated more than a hundred years ago, and its constitutionality has never been-so far as I have been able to ascertain—controverted or questioned.

It might be charged against these statutes that it was the taking of property without due process of law, but the principle involved would unquestionably be sustained on the theory that it was necessary to the protection of the public health and safety of those engaged in this particular hazardous employ-

State statutes imposing liability without fault have been almost universally upheld as not violative of any constitutional provision. Illustrations of this are to be found in those which impose upon common carriers liability for loss of goods in-trusted to them for shipment, where the loss is not attributable in any sense to the negligence of the carrier; those which make the carrier liable for fires caused without negligence from sparks from the engine; those which levy an assessment upon banks which are without fault for the payment of the depositors of insolvent banks; those which impose upon an employer who is without fault liability to an employee for the negligent act of another employee who is guilty of negligence; those which impose upon the landlord who leases his property where intoxicating liquors are sold and injuries are suffered by those who become intoxicated, even where the lessee of the premises sold without the knowledge of the landlord; those which impose liability without fault upon carriers for injuries suffered by passengers, except where the injury is caused by the passenger's criminal negligence or by his violation of some express rule of the company actually brought to his attention; those which impose liability for the killing of stock trespassing upon the right of way of the carrier; and those imposing liability upon free insurance agents, based upon the amount of insurance effected by them, for the benefit of a fund to care for and cure sick and injured firemen.

These statutes have been sustained by the courts of last resort as not obnoxious to the State constitutions, which follow closely the Federal Constitution, nor violative of either the fifth or the fourteenth amendments.

A law of Kansas imposed upon railroad companies liability for injury to one of their servants inflicted by the personal wrongful act of a fellow servant where the carrier was without fault or negligence. This statute was attacked on the ground that it was violative of the fourteenth amendment, but the court, in Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Mackey (127 U. S., 205), in disposing of this contention, said:

In disposing of this contention, said:

The only question for our examination, as the law of 1874 is presented to us in this case, is whether it is in conflict with clauses of the fourteenth amendment. The supposed hardship and injustice consist in imputing liability to the company, where no personal wrong or negligence is chargeable to it or to its directors. But the same hardship and injustice, if there be any, exist when the company, without any wrong or negligence on its part, is charged for injuries to passengers. Whatever care and precaution may be taken in conducting its business or in selecting its servants, if injury happen to the passengers from the negligence or incompetency of the servants, responsibility therefor at once attaches to it. The utmost care on its part will not relieve it from liability, if the passenger injured be himself free from contributory negligence. The law of 1874 extends this doctrine and fixes a like liability upon railroad companies where injuries are subsequently suffered by employees, though it may be by the negligence or incompetency of a fellow servant in the same general employment and acting under the same immediate direction. That its passage was within the competency of the legislature we have no doubt.

In Bertholf v. O'Reilly (74 N. V. 509), the constitutionality

In Bertholf v. O'Reilly (74 N. Y., 509), the constitutionality of a statute imposing liability upon a landlord who knowingly leases his premises for saloon purposes, for losses resulting from intoxication caused by the sale of liquor by his lessee, without fault upon the part of the landlord, Judge Andrews, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

And the act of 1873 is not invalid because it creates a right of action and imposes a liability not known to the common law. There is not such limit to legislative power. The legislature may alter or repeal the common law. It may create new offeness, enlarge the scope of civil remedies, and fasten responsibility for injuries upon persons against whom the common law gives no remedy. We do not mean that the legislature may impose upon one man liability for an injury suggered by another with which he had no connection. But it may change the rule of the common law, which looks only to the proximate cause of the mischief, in attaching legal responsibility and allow a recovery to be had against those whose acts contributed, although remotely, to produce it. * * The liability imposed upon the landlord for the acts of the tenant is not a new principle in legislation. His liability only arises when he has consented that the premises may be used as a place for the sale of liquors. He selects the tenant, and he may, without violating any constitutional provision, be made responsible for the tenant's acts connected with the use of the leased property.

A statute in Nebraska makes a railroad company liable in damages for injuries sustained by a passenger, regardless of the question of negligence upon the part of the company, except where the injury is caused by the passenger's criminal negligence or by his violation of some express rule of the company actually brought to his attention. It was objected to this statute that it violated the due process law clauses of the State and Federal constitutions, but the Supreme Court of Nebraska, in Chicago, Rock Island, etc., Railway Co. v. Zernecke (59 Nebr., 689), sustained it, and on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States (183 U. S., 582) that court sustained the statute against this attack, and said:

United States (183 U. S., 582) that court sustained the statute against this attack, and said:

In Omaha & R. V. R. Co. v. Chollette (33 Nebr., 143), the words of the statute exempting railroad companies from liability, "where the injury done arose from the criminal negligence of the persons injured." were defined to mean "gross negligence," "such negligence as would amount to a flagrant and reckless disregard" by the passenger of his own safety, and "amount to a willful indifference to the injury liable to follow." This definition was approved in subsequent cases. It was also approved in the case at bar, and the plaintiff in error, it was in effect declared, was precluded from any defense but that of negligence, as defined, or that the injury resulted from the violation of some rule of the company by the passenger brought to his actual notice, and the company, as we have said, was not permitted to introduce evidence that the deraliment of its train was caused by the felonious act of a third person. The statute, thus interpreted and enforced, it is asserted, impairs the constitutional rights of plaintiff in error. The specific contention is that the company is deprived of its defense, and not only declared gullty of negligence and wrongdoing without a hearing, but adjudged to suffer without wrongdoing, indeed even for the crimes of others, which the company could not have foreseen or have prevented.

Thus described, the statute seems objectionable. Regarded as extending the rule of liability for injury to persons which the common law makes for the loss of or injury to things, the statute seems defensible. And it was upon this ground that the supreme court of the State defended and vindleated the statute. The court said:

"The legislation is justifiable under the police power of the State, so it has been held. It was enacted to make railroad companies insurers of the safe transportation of their passengers as they were of baggage and freight, and no good reason is suggested why a railroad company should be relea

This same statute was upheld by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Eighth Circuit in Clark v. Russell (97 Fed., 900), the court saying:

peals of the Eighth Circuit in Clark v. Russell (97 Fed., 900), the court saying:

A further contention of the plaintiffs in error is that the statute violates the fifth and fourteenth amendments of the Constitution of the United States, in that it deprives the railroad company of its property "without due process of law," and denies to it the equal protection of the laws. The fifth amendment has no application to the States and in no way affects their powers. In all jurisdictions inferior to the Supreme Court, we think it must be regarded as settled for the present that statutes imposing an additional or even absolute liability on railroads for injuries to passengers or property are not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. A statute of Missouri made every railroad company operating a railroad in that State absolutely responsible in damages for property injured or destroyed by fire communicated by its locomotive engines, and declared a railroad company had an insurable interest in property along its route that authorized it to insure such property. The question whether this statute was repugnant to the Constitution of the United States came before the Supreme Court in the case of Railway Co. v. Mathews (105 U. S., 1). The contention of the railroad company in that case was exactly what the contention of the plaintiffs in error is in the case at bar. In the introduction to the opinion the court said:

"It has been strenuously argued in behalf of the plaintiff in error that this statute is an arbitrary, unreasonable, and unconstitutional exercise of legislative power, imposing an absolute and onerous liability for the consequences of doing a lawful act and of conducting a lawful business in a lawful and careful menner, and that the statute violates the Constitution of the United States by depriving the railroad company of its property without due process of law and by denying to it the equal protection of the laws."

After a learned and exhansitive review of all the cases, the court unanimously hel their part, and show that the courts have uniformly maintained their validity. A statute of Massachusetts made the hisbility of a refirond company for the destruction of property by fire communicated from its part. The supreme judicial court of Massachusetts held this act valid upon grounds that have ever since been held to be sufficient to uphold such legislation. Chief Justice Shaw, delivering the judgment, said:

"We consider this to be a statute purely remedial and not penal. Railroad companies acquire large profits by their business. But their business is of such a nature as necessarily to expose the property of advantage to the public, companies are authorized to maintain them, dangerous though they are; and so they can not be regarded as a nuisance. The manifest intent and design of this statute, we think, and this legal effect are, upon the considerations stated, to afford some indemnity against this risk to those who are exposed to it and to throw the responsibility upon those who are thus authorized to use a somewhat dangerous apparatus, and who realize a profit from it." (Hart e. Railroad corp. (1847), 13 Met. (Mass.), upon the railroad company what dangerous apparatus, and who realize a profit from it." (Hart e. Railroad corp. and the profit of the statute was a smalled probably other States, and their constitutionality has invariable een upheld. A Kansas statute made railroad companies doing business in that State liable for all damages done to an employee in consequence of the negligence of other employees. In Railway Co. e. Mackey (127 U. S., 205) the statute was assailed as unconstitutional, and the Surpeme Court, in answer to that contention, said:

"The contention of the company, as we understand it, is that the law imposes upon railroad companies a liability more proviously existing. In the enforcement of which their property may be taken, and thus in pace to this contention is that the liability imposed by the law of 1874 arises only for injuries subsequently committed. It has no application

In Minneapolis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Herrick (127 U. S., 210), a statute of Iowa which extended liability of the carrier for the willful wrongs, whether of omission or commission, of the agents, engineers, or other employees, was sustained against the attack that it was the taking of property without due process of law.

In the case of Noble State Bank v. Haskell, known as the Oklahoma Guaranty Law case (22 Okla., 48), and on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States (219 U. S., 104), the latter court, overruling the contention that the act takes private property for a private use and creates a liability without fault, said:

fault, said:

The substance of the plaintiff's argument is that the assessment takes private property for private use without compensation. And while we should assume that the plaintiff would retain a reversionary interest in its contribution to the fund, so as to be entitled to a return of what remained of it if the purpose were given up (see Receiver of Danby Bank v. State Treasurer, 39 Vt., 92, 98), still there is no denying that by this law a portion of its property might be taken without return to pay debts of a failing rival in business. Nevertheless, notwithstanding the logical form of the objection, there are more powerful considerations on the other side. In the first place it is established by a series of cases that an ulterior public advantage may justify a comparatively insignificant taking of private property for what, in its immediate purpose, is a private use. (Clark v. Nash, 198 U. S., 361; Strickley v. Highland Boy Mining Co., 200 U. S., 361, 527; Offield v. New York, New Haven & Hartford R. R. Co., 203 U. S., 372; Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S., 311, 315.) And in the next it would seem that there may be other cases besides the everyday one of taxation, in which the share of each party in the benefit of a scheme of mutual protection is sufficient compensation for the correlative burden that it is compelled to assume. (See Ohio Oil Co. v. Indiana, 177 U. S., 190.) At least, if we have a case within the reasonable exercise of the police power as above explained, no more need be said.

And, further:

And, further:

It may be said in a general way that the police power extends to all the great public needs. (Canfield v. United States, 167 U. S., 518.) It may be put forth in aid of what is sanctioned by usage or held by the prevailing morality or strong and preponderant opinion to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare. Among matters of that sort probably few would doubt that both usage and preponderant opinion give their sanction to enforcing the primary conditions of successful commerce. One of those conditions at the present time is the possibility of payment by checks drawn against bank deposits, to such an extent do checks replace currency in daily business. If, then, the legislature of the State thinks that the public welfare requires the measure under consideration, analogy and principle are in favor of the power to enact it. Even the primary object of the required assessment is not a private benefit, as it was in the cases above cited of a ditch for irrigation or a railway to a mine, but it is to make the currency of checks secure and by the same stroke to make safe the almost compulsory resort of depositors to banks as the only available means for keeping money on hand. The priority of claim given to depositors is incidental to the same object and is justified in the same way. The power to restrict liberty by fixing a minimum of capital required of those who would engage in banking is not denied. The power to restrict investments to securities regarded as relatively safe seems equally plain. It has been held, we do not doubt rightly, that inspections may be required and the cost thrown on the bank. (See Charlotte, Columbia & Augusta R. R. Co. v. Gibbes, 142 U. S., 386.) The power to compel beforehand cooperation, and thus, it is believed, to make a failure unlikely and a general panic almost impossible, must be recognized if government is to do its proper work, unless we can say that the means have no reasonable relation to the end. (Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S., 183, 188.) So far is that from being the case that the device is a familiar one. It was adopted by some States the better part of a century ago and seems never to have been questioned until now. (Receiver of Danby Bank v. State Treasurer, 39 Vt., 92; People v. Walker, 17 N. Y., 502.) Recent cases going not less far are Lemieux v. Young (211 U. S., 489, 490); Kidd, D

In Holden v. Hardy (169 U. S., 366) the court said:

In Holden v. Hardy (169 U. S., 366) the court said:

An examination of both these classes of cases under the fourteenth amendment will demonstrate that, in passing upon the validity of State legislation under that amendment, this court has not failed to recognize the fact that the law is, to a certain extent, a progressive science; that in some of the States methods of procedure which at the time the Constitution was adopted were deemed essential to the protection and safety of the people, or to the liberty of the citizen, have been found to be no longer necessary; that restrictions which had formerly been laid upon the conduct of individuals, or of classes of individuals, had proved detrimental to their interests; while, upon the other hand, certain other classes of persons, particularly those engaged in dangerous or unhealthful employments, have been found to be in need of additional protection. Even before the adoption of the Constitution much had been done toward mitigating the severity of the common law, particularly in the administration of its criminal branch. The number of capital crimes, in this country at least, had been largely decreased. Trial by ordeal and by battle had never existed here, and had fallen into disuse in England. The earlier practice of the common law which denied the benefit of witnesses to a person accused of felony had been abolished by statute, though so far as it deprived him of the assistance of counsel and compulsory process for the attendance of his witnesses it had not been changed in England. But to the credit of her American colonies let it be said that so oppressive a doctrine had never obtained a foothold there.

The present century has originated legal reforms of no less importance. The whole fabric of special pleading, once thought to be colonies let it be said that so oppressive a doctrine had never obtained a foothold there.

The present century has originated legal reforms of no less importance. The whole fabric of special pleading, once thought to be necessary to the elimination of the real issue between the parties, has crumbled to pieces. The ancient tenures of real estate have been largely swept away, and land is now transferred almost as easily and cheaply as personal property. Married women have been emancipated from the control of their husbands and placed upon a practical equality with them with respect to the acquisition, possession, and transmission of property. Imprisonment for debt has been abolished. Exemptions from execution have been largely added to, and in most of the States homesteads are rendered incapable of seizure and sale upon forced process. Witnesses are no longer incompetent by reason of interest, even though they be parties to the litigation. Indictments have been simplified, and an indictment for the most serious of crimes is now the simplest of all. In several of the States grand juries, formerly the only safeguard against a malicious prosecution, have been largely abolished, and in others the rule of unanimity, so far as applied to civil cases, has given way to verdicts rendered by a three-fourths majority. This case does not call for an expression of opinion as to wisdom of these changes or their validity under the fourteenth amendment, although the substitution of prosecution by information in lieu of indictment was recognized as valid in Hurtado v. California (110 U. S., 516). They are mentioned only for the purpose of calling attention to the probability that other changes of no less importance may be made in the future, and that while the cardinal principles of justice are immutable the methods by which justice is administered are subject to constant fluctuation, and that the Constitution of the United States, which is necessarily and to a large extent infexible and exceedingly difficuit of amendment, shoul

These cases fully sustain the doctrine that the imposition of liability without fault is not in violation of the due process clause or the taking of private property without compensation under the fifth and fourteenth amendments.

Third. Is there anything in the act under consideration which is violative of the seventh amendment to the Constitution, which preserves the right of trial by jury in controversies where the sum in dispute is in excess of $20? If so, Congress has not the authority to enact it. I maintain that the right of trial by jury is reserved in the act under consideration. Reference to sections 8, 9, and 14 of the act discloses that three methods are provided for the settlement of claims for compensation between the employer and the employee: First, they may settle by agreement, according to the limitations of amount and time as established thereby; second, they may organize and constitute a committee or committees for the purpose of settling disputes and awarding compensation in accordance with the limitations as to amount and time prescribed by the act; and, third, in default of an agreement between the parties or the submission by them to a committee of arbitration, either of the parties may institute proceedings for the adjustment of the claim before an adjuster, who shall promptly make and render his findings, returning them with the pleadings and other papers to the clerk of the United States district court of the proper district, and at any time within 20 days after receiving a copy of the findings either party may file exceptions thereto, and the case shall be tried and determined by the court de novo, and either party shall have the right to a trial by jury as in cases at common law. It will thus be seen that the right to trial by jury is preserved to either of the parties to the controversy, and the objection that the act is violative of the seventh amendment to the Constitution is not tenable, even if it be conceded that these proceedings are suits at common law, in view of the fact that the common-law right of action, as well as the remedy, are practically abrogated by the court under the authority of the decisions to which attention has heretofore been called.

There is respectable authority to sustain the proposition that in measures of this kind, which are regulative in their character and are intended for the general welfare, the right of trial by jury might be taken away and still the act be not obnoxious to the seventh amendment. This objection was made to the workmen's compensation act of the State of Washington, and Judge Fullerton disposed of it adversely to the contention. In delivering the opinion of the court, he said:

Workmen's compensation act of the State of Washington, and Judge Fullerton disposed of it adversely to the contention. In delivering the opinion of the court, he said:

The common-law system of making awards for personal injuries has no such inherent merit as to make a change undesirable. While courts have often said that the question of the amount of compensation to be awarded for a personal injury is one peculiarly within the province of the Jury to determine, the remark has been induced rather because no better method for solving the problem is afforded by that system than because of the belief that no better method could be devised. No one knows better than judges of courts of nisi prius and of review that the common-law method of making such awards, even in those instances to which it is applicable, proves in practice most unsatisfactory. All judges have been witnesses to extravagant awards made for most trivial injuries and trivial awards made for injuries ruinous in their nature; and perhaps no verdicts of juries are interfered with so often by the courts as verdicts making awards in such cases. There is no standard of measurement that the court can submit to the jury by which they can determine the amount of the award. The test of reasonableness means but little to the ordinary juror. Unused as he is generally to witnessing the results of injuries, he is inclined to measure his verdict by the amount of disorder he observes, rather than by the actual amount of disablement the injury has caused. Nor is he nided in this respect by the testimony of medical experts. Conflicting as such testimony usually is, it tends rather to confuse than to enlighten him. Perhaps the whole difficulty lies in the fact that the question is too much one of opinion and not enough of fact. It must be remembered, also, that the remedy afforded by the common law, as we have elsewhere remarked, can be applied only in a limited number of cases of injury—cases where the linjury is the result of negligence on the part of the employer

In the case of Capital Traction Co. v. Hoff (174 U. S., 1), the Supreme Court practically determined the question that statutes of this character are not obnoxious to the seventh amendment, and held that the right of trial by jury has been preserved; and the questions involved in such trial have been so well stated in the memorandum submitted by Messrs. Stetson, Sherman, Packer, and Moran, law members of the committee of the National Civic Federation, that I quote therefrom in support of the proposition which I am now urging upon the attention of the Senate:

Under such a law the right to trial by jury of all issues of fact would be preserved. The principal question of fact arising under that law would be:

1. Whether or not the injured person was in defendant's employ.

2. Whether or not he was of a class of employers to whom the law employers.

- applied.

 3. Whether or not the accident arose out of and in the course of the

- 3. Whether or not the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment.

 4. Whether or not the injury was due to an excepted cause.

 5. Whether or not the injuries claimed for resulted from the accident or from an accident.

 6. The amount of compensation.

 The first five issues involve no constitutional question. The sixth, the amount of compensation, it is submitted, would be determinable by the jury according to the rules of the law of compensation, just as now the amount of damages is determined by the jury according to the rules of the law of tort. That the rules of compensation are so simple and certain as to leave little for the jury, and therefore to be conducive to prompt settlements, informal arbitrations, and other methods of avoiding jury trials, is an advantage and not an objection.

Under the existing law of negligence the jury has a wide discretion in determining the amount of damages and can add to them a solaritum for pain and anguish and a further amount as a penalty. This flows from the nature of the liability which is for a wrong. But the compensation liability is not for a wrong. Over the facts by which the amount of the loss is to be measured the jurisdiction of the jury would remain unaltered, and the only change would be in the nature of the liability and not in the function of the jury in regard to such a liability. Therefore the contention that by fixing the measure of the liability the compensation law would be depriving the jury of its inalienable function amounts simply to a contention that a legal right or liability that once has been triable by a jury never can be abrogated or restricted, which we do not admit.

Neither does there seem to be conclusive force in the more specific objection that in case of fatal injuries, by definitely regulating the amount of compensation, a compensation law would deprive the jury of its constitutional functions. At the time of the adoption of the constitution there was no liability for damages for fatal accidents. Later a liability was imposed by statute, but at first a limit upon the amount of damages was generally fixed regardless of whether or not the netual damages exceeded that limit. Is there any constitutional principle that permits an arbitrary limitation upon the amount of damages that a jury may assess in such cases, and yet prohibits limitations upon the amount of compensation?

I come now to the decisions of the courts of last resort bear-incourse the intervention.

I come now to the decisions of the courts of last resort bearing upon State legislation having for its purpose the imposition of liability upon employers in favor of employees.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, before the Senator comes to that

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I notice another attack has been made upon the bill, and I desire to ask a question, principally for informa-tion and for explanation, because I am very anxious that the first presentation of it shall cover some of these attacks against The attack is made that the employees' counsel fees are limited by the act, whereas the employers' counsel fees are not. In making the attack it is urged that this virtually permits the employer to have the best legal talent in the world and cuts the employee off from it. I suppose the provision of the bill to which reference is made in this attack is clause 5, on page 24, which reads as follows:

(5) Wherever counsel or agent for the employee has stipulated for a fee, the agreement for such fee to be valid shall be made in writing and filed with the adjuster or clerk of the court in which the case is pending, and the employee shall not be liable to pay any counsel fee in excess of the amount allowed by the adjuster or the court. In every case it shall be the duty of the adjuster or the court, as the case may be, rogardless of any agreement, to fix the compensation, which shall not exceed a fair and reasonable sum for the services actually rendered.

Now, the question I want to ask the Senator from Oregon is this: Does he think or does he not think that it would be well to insert the word "employer" after the word "employee," in this clause, so that it will read:

Wherever counsel or agent for the employee or employer has stipulated for a fee, the agreement for such fee to be valid shall be made in writing and filed with the adjuster or clerk of the court in which the case is pending, and the employee or employer shall not be liable to pay any counsel fee in excess,

And so forth.

Then the adjuster would fix the fees in both cases and keep the transportation company from having the immense advantage of being able to pay an immensely superior lawyer's fee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Personally, I will say I do not see any objection to the amendment. As a matter of fact that provision was framed particularly to protect the employee against the exorbitant charges that he now suffers—

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From 25 to 50 per cent of the amount recovered. Yet I believe this is the first time the question has been raised. As a matter of fact, I suppose the men who usually appear for the employers are employed on an annual salary, paid by the company. But I do not see any objection to inserting that language, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think as a rule that is true, and I do not myself see very much in it; but it is always well to disarm criticism and hostility by doing anything that is not harmful to the legislation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Do Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah? Does the Senator from

Mr. CHAMBERLAUS. I yield. Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to me the suggestion made by the Senator from Mississippi would be rather impracticable, because the lawyers for the railroad companies, as has already been suggested, are employed on an annual salary, I think almost without exception. They are employed not only to attend to this class of cases, but to all the business of the carrier.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And it would be almost an impossible thing to separate the charges which might be made by them for services of this character from the other services rendered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I would suggest that the word "employer" be inserted with a provision that it shall not apply wherever the regular annually retained attorney of the road is engaged in the case.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would not this be the result, no matter how you fix it, along the line suggested? The railroad always have the best attorneys in the country they can get

Mr. WILLIAMS. If they are permitted to pay the highest salary, of course.

Mr. OVERMAN. While the employee is not represented by such counsel.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am unwilling to concede that, because I do not believe my friend the Senator from North Carolina is employed by railroads, and-

Mr. OVERMAN. But I could not go into court for $10, whereas the railroads get the best lawyers they can get.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With an exception that when the regular counsel, counsel receiving an annual fee, is employed, this shall not apply. I think it would be a good thing to put such a provision into the bill for the purpose of minimizing as much as possible this advantage now enjoyed by the carrier.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to say in reply to the Senator that the pay of the employee's attorney comes out of the compensation that he may receive under the act, while the amount paid the railroad's attorney does not come out of the compensation of the employee, but is paid by the railroad com-

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the ultimate analysis they both come out of the railroad treasury. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They come from the same source exactly, and if you can put the parties upon an equal footing, or an approximately equal footing, or upon a footing upon which they would not be without this provision, I think it would be a good thing.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would it not be better to provide, especially in view of the character of the compensation to be given for these injuries, that if the railroads fail to settle, in view of the act, and the employee is compelled to go into court, the compensation of the attorney for the plaintiff shall be in addition to the amount allowed and shall be paid by the railroad also?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would not assent to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Mississippi?
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.
Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Oregon will pardon me, there is another reason in this case. It would be much fairer under present conditions to charge counsel fee, because the man is forced to employ counsel, but when you give him another remedy, and he goes into court of his own accord when he might have gone into the other tribunal, it would be rather unjust to make the railroad company pay his counsel fee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is not the Senator from Mississippi mistaken when he says this is an additional remedy?

dressed to the senate of the Commonwealth, under the peculiar laws and the constitution of that State, in answer to the questions proposed by that body with reference to a contemplated workmen's compensation act, expressed themselves as follows:

The first section of the act (Pt. I. sec. 1) provides that "In an action to recover damages for personal injury sustained by an employee in the course of his employment, or for death resulting from personal injury so sustained, it shall not be a defense—

"I. That the employee was negligent;

"2. That the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow employee."

"1. That the employee was negligent:

"2. That the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow employee;

"3. That the employee had assumed the risk of the injury."

This section deals with actions at common law. We construe clauses 1 and 2 in their reference to negligence as meaning contributory negligence or negligence on the part of a fellow servant which falls short of the serious and willful misconduct which, under Part II, section 2, will deprive an employee of compensation. So construed, we think that the section is constitutional. We neither express nor intimate any opinion whether it would be unconstitutional if otherwise construed. The rules of law relating to contributory negligence and assumption of the risk and the effect of negligence by a fellow servant were established by the courts, not by the constitution, and the legislature may change them or do away with them altogether as defenses (as it has to some extent in the employer's liability act) as in its wisdom in the exercise of powers intrusted to it by the constitution it deems will be best for the "good and welfare of this Commonwealth." (See Missouri Pacific Railway v. Mackey, 127 U. S., 205; Minnesota Iron Co. v. Kline, 199 U. S., 593.)

The net expressly provides that it shall not apply to injuries sustained before it takes effect. If, therefore, a right of action which has accrued under existing laws for personal injuries constitutes a vested right or interest, there is nothing in the section which interferes with such rights or interests.

The State of Washington enacted a workmen's compensation law March 14, 1911, and later proceedings were instituted to test its constitutionality in the case of State of Washington ex rel. v. Clausen, decided September 27, 1911. The policy and purposes of the act are recited in the first section substantially as follows:

as follows:

It recites that the common-law system governing remedies of workmen against employers for injuries received in hazardous employments are inconsistent with modern industrial conditions; that in practice such remedies have proven economically unwise and unfair; that their administration has produced the result that little of the cost thereof to the employer has reached the workmen, and that little only at a great expense to the public; that the remedy to the individual workman is uncertain, slow, and inadequate; that injuries in such employments, formerly occasional, have become frequent and inevitable; that the welfare of the State depends upon its industries, and even more upon the welfare of its wageworkers. And it thereupon declares that the State of Washington, exercising its sovereign powers, withdraws all phases of the premises from private controversies and provides sure and certain relief for workmen injured in extrahazardous work, and their families and dependents, regardless of questions of fault, to the exclusion of "every other remedy, proceeding, or compensation, except as otherwise provided in this act." It thereupon abolished civil actions and civil causes of action for personal injuries incurred in extrahazardous employments, and the jurisdiction of the courts thereon, except as in the act provided. It is compulsory in form and does away with all common-law

It is compulsory in form and does away with all common-law and statutory remedies and defenses.

The objections, amongst others, urged against this act were: That it violates section 2 of article 1 of the State constitution and the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provide that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

(2) That it violates the provision of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides for the equal protection of the law.

(3) That it violates section 21 of article 1 of the State constitution, which provides that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate.

Each of these objections was held untenable in a lengthy and able opinion pronounced by Judge Fullerton. In sustaining the policy of the law, he said:

unjust to make the railroad company pay his counsel fee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is not the Senator from Mississippi mistaken when he says this is an additional remedy?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. This is exclusive.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All other remedies are taken away by this act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If he chooses to leave it to the adjuster, he is not compelled to go into court under this act.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. He can settle it without going into court at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is an additional remedy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is an additional remedy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is an additional remedy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is an alternative remedy.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is not the hearing before the adjuster really going into court? Is not that another name for a master in chancery of the Federal court, and does not he proceed to hear it just like a judge?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Practically.

Proceeding now with the discussion of this subject and to a consideration of the decisions by the courts of the States which have enacted compensatory legislation, I call attention to the fact that the justices of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, in a communication under date of July 27, 1911, ad-injuries traceable to the dangers incident to industry, no remedy at all is afforded. The act, therefore, having in its support these economic and moral considerations, is not unconstitutional for the reasons suggested upon this branch of the argument.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the committee have made a thorough examination of the English law upon this subject.

Yes; the commission has. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand you to say that the law works well in England?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Fairly well, though there is a good deal of objection to it. They have an employers' liability act in addition to the compensation act.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why did you leave out the optional plan? In England they have an option. Why make it compulsory? There the employee not only can take advantage of this act, but he can go into court. Why not make it optional here as it is in England?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is what almost all the railroad people asked us to do—make it elective in form rather than compulsory. I believe the railroad counsel were a unit in asking that it be made so.

Mr. OVERAGE.

Why not? What is the reason for not Mr. OVERMAN.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Because there ought to be an end to litigation, and the amounts to be paid to employees in case of accident or death ought to be determined before the accident.

Mr. SUTHERIAND. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah? Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield. Mr. SUTHERLAND. So far as I know, the English act is the only one in Europe which permits any option. In England there are three laws under which an action for personal injury may be brought: First, it may be brought under the common law; second, it may be brought under the employers' liability statute; and, third, under the compensation law.

Now, the option is given, but in practical operation it amounts to nothing, because at the common law all of the common-law defenses are preserved in their utmost rigor, so that the employee who is injured finds it of no sort of advantage to resort to the common-law remedy. Under the employer's liability statute the amount of the recovery is limited strictly to an amount which in most cases is afforded by the compensation act. So the employee does not resort to the employer's liability act, because he could recover no more under that than under the compensation law.

Mr. OVERMAN. We do not necessarily have to fix that rule

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is quite true. At the proper time I intend to discuss that feature of it, and I shall undertake to point out to the Senator some very substantial reasons why we ought not to permit the option.

Mr. OVERMAN. I knew the Senator was very well informed on the subject, and I wanted to hear from him on it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.
Mr. REED. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question while he is on his feet. He says that in England three methods of procedure are preserved: One, the right to sue under the common law; second, the right to sue under the employer's liability act; and, third, under the compensation act; but that the right to sue under the common law amounts to nothing, because the common-law defenses are preserved. Does the Senator mean to say as broadly as he did that there are no recoveries under the common law? Are there not plenty of cases where there can be-and have there not always been-a recovery under the common law

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, yes; there can be a recovery, but what I mean to say is this: That if the action is brought at common law the injured employee must first of all prove the negligence of the master. He must disprove his own, the burden of proof at common law being upon him. Then it is subject also to the defense of fellow-servant fault, without any of the modifications we have seen fit to introduce in the statutes of some of the States; and also the defense of assumption of risk. When the action is brought at common law, all of those defenses are preserved-

Mr. REED. I understand. Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I have already stated, in their utmost rigor. So that while theoretically he has the right to resort to the common law, practically he does not do it, because it is of no advantage. So he does not resort to the statutory remedy of the employers' liability, under which he must prove negligence and under which certain defenses are done away with, because when he sues under that statute he can recover generally only the same amount as under the compensation law. So there is no reason for him to do it.

The preservation of these three alternative remedies under the English law in practical operation is of no consequence whatever. That is what I mean to say.

Mr. REED. As I understand, in England the common-law right of action is preserved, along with the common-law defenses, and under that in case a man is injured without negligence or fault on his part contributing and where there is negligence on the part of the master, he recovers an unlimited amount; that is, there is no legal limitation. There is the limitation which a court might impose, provided the judgment was unconscionable. So that that right has been preserved.

I ask the Senator if he really means to say that there are not many cases arising at common law were, when the plaintiff is able to meet all the requirements of the common law, when he is without fault on his own part and the fault is clearly that of the master, he is allowed to recover damages within the discretion of the jury?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I mean to say that since the amended compensation act was passed in 1906 it is a very rare thing for an injured employee to resort to either of the other remedies. He takes his compensation under this law.

Mr. REED. One of the objections—
Mr. SUTHERLAND. But I will say to the Senator, further, that if there was a general resort to these other remedies, I should consider it a very unwise provision.

Mr. REED. Without saying that I am opposed to this bill, because I am not prepared to say it, one thing that seems to me as an objection is this: In the matter of receiving compensation it puts the man who has been guilty of no negligence whatsoever, and who may have been injured by the grossest negligence on the part of the master, upon a level with the man who has himself been guilty of negligence which directly contributed to the injury, and limits, if I understand the bill correctly, the recovery in both cases to the same sum.

Is there not a real advantage, a real equity in the English system which permits that man whose hands are clean of all negligence, who has exercised the highest diligence, who has been in the pursuit of his vocation according to the strict rules of right and who has been injured through the gross negligence of his master-is there not equity and right in the English proposition which preserves to him his old common-law right to recover the full measure of his injuries?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope the Senator will read the report of the committee upon that precise proposition.

Mr. REED. I will do so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will not take the time to enter upon the discussion of it now. If the Senator has not done so, I invite his attention to the report upon that subject.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. At the time I sought to interrupt the Senator from Oregon he had just said that the reason for not making this statute cumulative to the remedies already existing was the desire to terminate litigation. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the compensation that is given in at least one instance, and to what seems to me utterly inadequate compensation, and to ask if he thinks the desire to terminate litigation is a sufficient justification for such trifling compensation for such an injury?

Now, take the case of the loss of a foot at or above the ankle. Forty-eight months at $50 a month would be all that would be paid to a high-class engineer who was making $200 or $250 a month. His foot would be cut off about the ankle, and he would receive in monthly payments only one year's salary, nothing for disformity, and nothing beyond that, and that salary would be paid at the rate of $50 a month. I want to ask the Senator if he thinks that the object of terminating litigation is a sufficient reason for such trivial compensation for an injury of that character?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator will remember that in the first part of what I have had to say I showed that a very small proportion of the men who lose a foot and a very small proportion of the men who lose a leg, or even their limbs, are able to recover at all under the present system of law. Under this system they will get something.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Under the present statute if the injury was due partially to his own negligence he can recover. The present statute is broad enough to cover that. Our statutes passed in 1908 and 1910 provide for that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will suspend for a moment. The bour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 4239) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. It will be so ordered, without objection. The Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is not any question, Mr. President, but that if the present system remains there are employees of railroad companies who will recover large verdicts. There is not any doubt about that under the act of 1908. But it is also true that that act leaves the element of negligence to be considered in every case, and while the old common-law doctrine of contributory negligence is modified in a very great degree, still it is there. It is the purpose of this act to eliminate the consideration of negligence as an element of recovery, and while it is true, as I said, that a great many will not get as much under this compensation law as they get under the present law, there are over 75 per cent under this law who will get relief who do not get anything now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator think that 75 per cent of the engineers now injured can not recover under the present law? I do not mean this law, but under the present statute applicable to interstate transactions.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is, of those engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Probably I put it broader than I should have put it. I will say, in the States, except possibly in Georgia, 75 per cent of the engineers would not recover in a case of accident.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But this act applies only to interstate commerce. And it applies only to such matters as the present Federal statute applies to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is true. I stated the proposition more broadly than I should.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Federal statute provides for recovery for practically everybody, even though the negligence of the employee contributed to the injury. His negligence, unless it was the exclusive cause, would not deter a recovery

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Oregon permit me to ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the experience of the Senator from Georgia, what amount does a brakeman receive in the railroad service for the loss of a feet?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Five thousand dollars.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How much of it goes to the lawyers? Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Twenty-five per cent or one-third.

Thirty per cent is about the average.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the West-in my own State and in most of the States of the Union, we pretty carefully gathered information on this point, which I have and which I will submit at the proper time-the ordinary charge is 50 per cent on the part of the lawyers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is no reason why this amount taken from the men should be given to the railroad companies. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But we are proposing to give it to the men and not to the railroads.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The railroads are not to get it all, for the railroads will pay out 25 per cent more than they are paying out to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will state frankly that my examination of the act has satisfied me that those figures could not be possibly sustained. I do not agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am sorry the Senator from Georgia does not agree with me, but I will say to the Senator that these figures were gathered with a good deal of care.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Were they gathered under the opera-tion of the present Federal statute? Has the present Federal statute been in operation long enough for that purpose, or were they gatherd under the old law, before the present employers' liability act?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They were gathered during the last three years; a great many of them last year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Very few cases were tried under it during the earlier part of the period of three years.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It includes some of those cases: I do not know, of course, how many.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I had in my mind was that if we should let this matter go over until fall and give the present law a little longer operation before we hasten through with a new law we would be in a better position to determine what ought to be done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This law should be passed, because it has behind it the serious desire of the vast majority of the railroad employees of this country. Committees of those organiza-tions have been studying this question very carefully, and they desire to have the principle of this law established. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that the wise thing to do would be to pass this law and let it go into operation, and if we find that in some respects the schedule with regard to the plan fixed is not high enough, with our experience we can lift it to the proper place.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks that a schedule for cutting off a foot of an engineer that pays him only $2,400 in payments of $50 a month is anything comparable to just compensation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. O Mr. President, of course no man is going to sell his foot for that amount of money, but that is not the theory upon which the law ought to be drafted at all. The theory upon which these compensation laws are drafted is that the law takes care of the whole body of employees.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was not suggesting that he sell his foot. I was suggesting the cold compensation for his financial loss.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am answering the Senator that this applies to the whole body of workmen, those who lose their feet through their own negligence and through the negligence of the employer and through nobody's negligence at all. The theory of it is to take care of the whole body of workmen during a period of readjustment. Of course it is not as much as a man who receives the highest verdict will receive, but upon the average it is more than the average man receives at the hands of a jury, as the statistics will absolutely demonstrate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Do you propose to cut off the highsalaried man without regard to what he was earning and put the $2,400 man down to the estimate of the $100 man and limit him to only $2,400 in full payment when you destroy his capacity to follow his business?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We propose, Mr. President, to fix, as is done in all these compensation laws, not only in the Old World, but those that have been adopted in the various States in the Union, a maximum and a minimum, the maximum being $100 and the minimum being $50. While the effect of that will be to reduce some men who receive more than $100 down to the $100 limit it will lift a very large number of other men up to the $50 limit. The Senator shakes his head. I know what I am talking about.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We will discuss it later on. Of course, I do not want to interject a detailed discussion into the speech of the Senator from Oregon, but I can not accept that view as correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator is entirely welcome to his view of it, but I insist that I have a right to my view of it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not objecting to the Senator having his view of it, but I do not wish the Senator to set up his view to me as though I was going to accept it as correct, when I am satisfied it is not correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am quite sure the Senator from Georgia will not accept any of these statements, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will accept any of them that I think are correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator will permit me to say to him, at any rate, that based upon the figures which we have gathered this will be the effect, that out of the total number of men who are injured in the railway service 50 per cent of them receive more than $125 a month and 10 per cent of them receive more than $100 a month, so that 15 per cent of them receive more than $100 a month—that is, of men who are injured. So the effect of this will be to bring down 15 per cent of the men to $100 as a maximum limit, but 29 per cent of the men who are injured receive less than $50 a month, so that while the 15 per cent will be brought down to the maximum the 29 per cent will be lifted up to $50.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You take the lowest man and cut his pay half in two when he is utterly disqualified from work, do you not? You do not pay the lowest man all that he loses.

APRIL 8.

When he is utterly disqualified you cut the highest half in two, and you-cut the lowest half in two.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I have listened with much profit and interest to the whole discussion of this bill by the distinguished Senators who have spoken upon the measure. I would, with the kind indulgence of the Senator from Oregon and the Senate, like to ask the reason why the bill, in addition to the things pointed out by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr.

SMITH], is exclusive as a remedy instead of cumulative.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to say in reference to that subject that it will be taken up a little later. As I said awhile ago, I prefer to discuss it now from the legal standpoint and leave that question to be considered apart. But if the Senator will read the report of the commission and the hearings upon which that report was based, I think he will learn at least the reasons which animated the commission in framing this bill as a compulsory one instead of making it an elective one.

Mr. ASHURST. I have read that, but fall to find therein sufficient reasons, to me at least, for making this remedy exclusive instead of cumulative. Therefore I asked the Senator the question.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say that the States have adopted different views in reference to that, and their experience under the elective system and under the compulsory system has not been great enough for them to state the result, but the commission felt that the compulsory system was best, because it made the matter definite and certain and compelled all parties. both the railroad companies and the employees, to resort to the one forum for the application of a definite remedy. In other words, if it were an elective system the railroad companies in certain districts might elect to come under the operation of the law and the employees refuse, so that we might have a law attempted to be enforced in one section of the country entirely different from that chosen to be operated in another section. There ought to be uniformity and an end of the litigation which grows out of the present system and which would certainly not be lessened by the elective system if it were attempted to be put in force.

But, Mr. President, while I do not object to interruptions, I am anxious to get through the discussion which I had in mind, and if there are questions which Senators desire to ask I would be glad to have them propound them after I get through.

I will state that the act adopted by the Legislature of Washington was compulsory and exclusive, and it extended over a great many hazardous industries of the State.

The Legislature of Montana in 1909 passed an act to create a State accident insurance and total permanent disability fund for coal miners and employees at coal washeries, the constitutionality of which was successfully attacked in the case of Cunningham, State Auditor, v. Northwestern Improvement Co. The lower court sustained the act, but this decision was reversed by the supreme court of the State November 21, 1911. The objections urged against the act, amongst others, were:

(1) That it operates to deprive those subject to its terms of their right to trial by jury, guaranteed by both Federal and State constitutions.

(2) That it operates to take property without due process of law and violates the provisions of both Federal and State constitutions.

(3) That it denies to employers the equal protection of the laws

Each of these objections, except the last, was disposed of in favor of the constitutionality of the act, but for the reason that all employers of a class were compelled to pay a tax-recoverable, if necessary, by action of law-into a common fund, whilst to the employee was left the right, at his election, to pursue his remedy under the law of liability or to participate in the common fund, the court held the statute unconstitutional as not affording the employer the equal protection of the laws. The court say:

court say:

The injured employees of one operator may all resort to the indemnity fund, while those of another may elect to appeal to the courts. The result is that the employer against whom an action is successfully prosecuted is compelled to pay twice. He has fully paid his assessments under the act, and is also obliged to pay damages. This fact is so palpable as to be needless of discussion. The act in this regard is not only inequitable and unjust, but clearly illegal and void, as not affording to such employer the equal protection of the laws. The Legislature of the State of Washington guarded against this contingency by abolishing all actions for negligence, chapter 74, Session Laws. Washington, 1911. The General Assembly of Maryland, in an act somewhat similar to ours (see Pub. Loc. Laws of Maryland, 1910, ct. 153, sec. 10), provided:

"If any suit or action be brought against any operator for or in respect of any injury or disability received by an employee while in the discharge of his duty or for death resulting therefrom * * * and said operator shall appear and defend such suit or action, and a judgment shall be rendered against him, he shall, after satisfying said judgment shall be rendered against him, he shall, after satisfying said judgment * * be entitled thereafter to deduct from the payments required to be made by him * * a a sum equal to the amounts of said judgment and costs."

The manner in which the equal protection of the laws shall be afforded to the operator is, of course, for the legislative body to determine, but some method must assuredly be provided to protect him from double payments. The act in its present form is, in this regard, so repugnant to all ideas of equity and equality that it must, we think, appeal to every right-thinking person on the most cursory examination as unjust. It was to guard against such legislation as this, as we apprehend, that the framers of all American constitutions guaranteed to the citizen the equal protection of the laws.

In this connection I have also quoted the reasons of the court

In this connection I have also quoted the reasons of the court for holding that there ought to be a compulsory law not only in Montana but in every State in the Union. It is really a stronger argument in favor of the law than the argument of the court is in overruling the law. The necessity for a change in the present system is so forcefully stated by the court, notwithstanding the conclusion arrived at, that I quote it as showing the entire approval by it of a proper compensation law. The court say:

withstanding the conclusion arrived at, that I quote it as showing the entire approval by it of a proper compensation law. The court say:

At the outset it may be stated that the act, viewed as a whole, presents certain fundamental propositions, novel in this jurisdiction, which, although they have lately been the subject of serious consideration by courts and students of present-day conditions, involving, as they do, grave questions of constitutional law as well as of economics, are yet so comparatively new in conception that their supposed basic principles have not been recognized as sound by some tribunals and law writers, and may be said not to have been accepted in their entirety by any court. It will not suffice to say that because the theory or design of the lawmaking power, as evidenced by the act, is one which is not only new in principle, but revolutionary of certain preconceived and deeply rooted notions of lawyers, therefore the act is unconstitutional. Nevertheless, it is the duty of courts to jealously guard the constitutional rights of the citizen.

It is matter of common knowledge among lawyers and laymen alike that our present system of compensation for injury or death of an employee caused by the actual or imputed negligence of his employer has given rise to conditions which seem to demand an abrogation of that system. This demand is so widespread and insistent that we shall do well to inquire into the reasons therefor.

In this State the affirmative defenses of contributory negligence and assumption of risk, including in the latter the negligence of a fellow servant, are still generally available to the employer. The result is that in many cases the maimed employee and in case of his death his dependents are obliged to bear the whole burden of misfortune. Ho or they may suffer the humiliation of becoming public charges, with the consequent additional expense to the taxpayer. The injury or death may have been the result of inevitable accident in the course of the employment, in which event the

The Legislature of Wisconsin in 1911 passed a workmen's compensation law, the constitutionality of which was assailed successfully in the lower court, but on appeal to the Supreme Court in the case of Borgnis et al. v. Falk Co., decided December 14, 1911, the decision of the lower court was reversed and the constitutionality of the act fully sustained:

It divides all private employers of labor into two classes: (1) Those who elect to come under the law, and (2) those who do not so elect. It takes away the defenses of assumption of risk and negligence of a coemployee from the second class (except that where there are less than four coemployees the latter defense is not disturbed), but leaves both defenses intact to the first class. It prescribes the manner in which an employer may elect to come under its terms, and how an employee may make his election, and when silence on the part of the employee will be considered an election; but it does not in terms compel either employer or employee to submit to its provisions.

In other words, by electing to come within the provisions of the act the employer might avail himself of the defenses above mentioned in an action for damages, and the right of election is left to the employee also to come within the provisions of the act, thus excluding him from the remedy by action for damages.

As in the preceding cases to which attention has been called, the court, as preliminary to a discussion of the law, states the reasons dictated by justice and public policy for the enactment of such a law, as follows:

It is matter of common knowledge that this law forms the legislative response to an emphatic, if not a peremptory, public demand. It was admitted by lawyers, as well as laymen, that the personal-injury action brought by the employee against his employer to recover damages for injuries sustained by reason of the negligence of the employer had wholly failed to meet or remedy a great economic and social problem which modern industrialism has forced upon us, namely, the problem of who shalt make pecuniary recompense for the toll of suffering and death which that industrialism levies and must continue to levy upon the civilized world. This problem is distinctly a modern problem. In the days of manual labor, the small shop, with few employees, and the stage-coach, there was no such problem or, if there was, it was almost negligible. Accidents there were in those days, and distressing ones; but they were relatively few, and the employee who exercised any reasonable degree of care was comparatively secure from injury. There was no army of injured and dying, with constantly swelling ranks marching with halting step and dimming eyes to the great hereafter. This is what we have with us now, thanks to the wonderful material progress of our age, and this is what we shall have with us for many a day to come. Legislate as we may in the line of stringent requirements for safety devices or the abolition of employers' common-law defenses, the army of the injured will still increase, and the price of our manufacturing greatness will still have to be paid in human blood and tears. To speak of the common-law personal-injury action as a remedy for this problem is to jest with serious subjects, to give a stone to one who asks for bread. The terrible economic waste, the overwhelming temptation to the commission of perjury, and the relatively small proportion of the sums recovered which comes to the injured parties in such actions, condemn them as wholly inadequate to meet the difficulty.

In approaching the consideration of the present law we must bear whelming temptation to the commission of perjury, and the relatively small proportion of the sums recovered which comes to the injured parties in such actions, condemn them as wholly inadequate to meet the difficulty.

In approaching the consideration of the present law we must bear in mind the well-established principle that it must be sustained, unless it be clear beyond reasonable question that it violates some constitutional limitation or prohibition. That governments founded on written constitutions which are made difficult of amendment or change lose much in flexibility and adaptability to changed conditions there can be no doubt. Indeed that may be said to be one purpose of the written constitution. Doubtless they gain enough in stability and freedom from mere whimsical and sudden changes to more than make up for the loss in flexibility; but the loss still remains, whether for good or ill. A constitution is a very human document and must embody with greater or less fidelity the spirit of the time of its adoption. It will be framed to meet the problems and difficulties which face the men who make it, and it will generally crystallize with more or less fidelity the political, social, and economic propositions which are considered irrefutable, if not actually inspired, by the philosophers and legislators of the time; but the difficulty is that, while the Constitution is fixed or very hard to change, the conditions and problems surrounding the people, as well as their ideals, are constantly changing. The political or philosophical aphorism of one generation is doubted by the next, and entirely discarded by the third. The race moves forward constantly, and no Canute can stay its progress.

Constitutional commands and prohibitions, either distinctly laid down in express words or necessarily implied from general words, must be obeyed, and implicitly obeyed, so long as they remain unamended or unrepealed. Any other course on the part of either legislator or judge constitutes violation of his oath of office; but Practically the same objections were made to the Wisconsin statute as were urged against the constitutionality of the stat-utes of Montana and Washington, and each of them was considered at length and held to be without merit.

In conclusion the court say:

We have now discussed all of the contentions made against the law which we deem entitled to detailed treatment, and we find no serious difficulty in sustaining its fundamental and essential provisions. As said in the beginning of this opinion, this law forms the answer of the legislature to a very widespread demand. It is a legislative attempt to reach, within constitutional lines, some fair solution of a serious problem which other nations, not restricted by written constitutional inhibitions, have solved, or partially solved, years ago. Doubtless the law will need and will receive changes and amendments as time shaltest its provisions and demonstrate its weak points. It would be unreasonable to expect that a law covering so important a subject along lines not before attempted should be perfect, or very near perfect, upon its first enactment. If experience shall demonstrate that it is practicable and workable, and operates either wholly or in great measure to put an end to that great mass of personal-injury lifigation between employer and employee, with its tremendous waste of money and its unsatisfactory results, which now burdens the courts, the long and painstaking labors of those legislators and citizens who collaborated in framing it will be fittingly rewarded by a result so greatly to be desired. That result will mean a distinct improvement in our social and economic conditions.

The Legislature of Ohio, by an act approved June 15, 1911, created a State insurance fund for the benefit of the injured and the dependents of killed employees. Its constitutionality was assailed in the case of the State ex rel v. Creamer, State Treasurer, on the grounds, amongst others, that it takes private property without due process of law, in contravention of both the Federal and State Constitutions, but the supreme court of the State, on February 6, 1912, overruled each of the objections in a lengthy opinion and sustained the constitutionality of the act as not being violative of either the Federal or the State

The Legislature of the State of New Jersey enacted a workmeu's compensation law in 1911, elective in form, and I am advised that in a proceeding brought to test its constitutionality the lower court has sustained it in its entirety, though the question has not yet been determined by the supreme court of that State.

It remains now to consider the decision of the Court of Appeals of New York in the case of Ives v. South Buffalo Railway Co., decided March 24, 1911, involving the workmen's compensation law of that State enacted in 1910, providing for the compensation of workmen in certain dangerous employments. The supreme court of the State affirmed the constitutionality of the act, but this judgment was reversed by the court of appeals in a lengthy and learned opinion. It may be safely affirmed that this decision has done more to stay the progress of legislation along the lines of the enlightened thought of the country in other Commonwealths than any other decision of recent years, and this notwithstanding the fact that the case is referred to and the views of the New York court not concurred in in the decisions of the Supreme Courts of Washington, Ohio, and Wisconsin. The frame of mind in which the distinguished judge of the court of appeals who pronounced the opinion approached the discussion is disclosed by his statement made as he entered upon a discussion of the constitutional questions involved, as follows:

The statute, judged by our common-law standards, is plainly revolutionary. Its central and controlling feature is that every employer who is engaged in any of the classified industries shall be liable for any injury to a workman arising out of and in the course of the employment by "a necessary risk or danger of the employment or one inherent in the nature thereof; * * provided that the employer shall not be liable in respect of any injury to the workman which is caused in whole or in part by the serious and willful misconduct of the workman." This rule of liability, stated in another form, is that the employer is responsible to the employee for every accident in the course of the employee is at fault or not, except when the fault of the employee is so grave as to constitute serious and willful misconduct on his part. The radical character of this legislation is at once revealed by contrasting it with the rule of the common law, under which the employer is liable for injuries to his employee only when the employer is guilty of some act or acts of negligence which caused the occurrence out of which the injuries arise, and then only when the employee is shown to be free from any negligence which contributes to the occurrence. The several judical and statutory modifications of this broad rule of the common law we shall further on have occasion to mention. Just now our purpose is to present in sharp juxtaposition the fundamentals of these two opposing rules, namely, that under the common law an employer is liable to his injured employee only when the employer is at fault and the employee is free from fault, while under the employee is at fault, unless this latter fault amounts to serious and willful misconduct.

The objections urged against the act were, amongst others:

The objections urged against the act were, amongst others: (1) That it deprived parties of the right of trial by jury in violation of both the Federal and State Constitutions. it violated the fourteenth amendment of the Federal Constitution and section 6 of Article I of the State constitution, which guarantee all persons against the deprivation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

The Supreme Court of Washington disposed of this decision without endeavoring to reconcile it with its own, and admitted, frankly, that the two were in conflict, saying:

frankly, that the two were in conflict, saying:

In the foregoing discussion we have not referred to the decision of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York in the case of Ives v. South Buffalo ky. Co. (201 N. Y., 271: 94 N. E., 431), which holds the workmen's compensation act of that State to be in conflict with the due process of law clause of the State constitution and the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The case has, however, been the subject of extended consideration in the briefs of counsel, and it is urged upon us by counsel for the auditor as conclusive of the questions at bar. The act the court there had in review is dissimilar in many respects to the act before us and is perhaps less easily defended on economic grounds. The principle embodied in the statutes is, however, the same, and it must be conceded that the case is direct authority against the position we have here taken. We shall offer no criticism of the opinion. We will only say that, notwithstanding the decision comes from the highest court of the first State of the Union and is supported by a most persuasive argument, we have not been able to yield our consent to the view there taken.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin, while contending that the statutes of New York and Wisconsin were materially different in that the former was elective and the latter compulsory and did not present the same questions as to the constitutional features involved, yet declined to express an opinion as to the

The Supreme Court of Ohio, in the case to which I have referred, like the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, found a material difference in the statutes of New York and Ohio which justified a nonconcurrence with the decision in the Ives case and disposed of it by saying:

The case of Ives v. South Buffalo Ry. Co. (201 N. Y., 276) (relied on by some of counsel) involved a statute different in many essentials from the Ohio law. Its controlling feature was that every employer engaged in any of the classified industries should be liable to a workman for injury arising in the course of the work by a necessary risk inherent in the business, whether the employer was at fault or not and whether the employee was at fault or not, except when his fault was willful. willful.

Willful.

The court held the law invalid, as imposing the ordinary risks of a business (which under the common law the employee was held to assume) on the employer. The court states one of the premises on which it proceeds as follows:

"When our constitutions were adopted it was the law of the land that no man who was without fault or negligence could be held liable in damages for injuries sustained by another."

But that rule was not of universal application. At common law one may sustain such relation to the inception of an undertaking that he will be held liable for negligence in the progress of the enterprise even though he have no part or connection with the negligent act itself which caused the injury. Such, for instance, as where the owner of property contracts with an independent contractor to do work which, though entirely lawful, yet has inherent probabilities of harm if negligently performed. The position in the line of causation which employers sustain in modern industrial pursuits is of course the basic fact on which employers' liability laws rest.

As to the right to abolish the defense of assumption of risk, it is enough to say here that the great weight of authority is against the New York position and the position of such of the counsel in this case as insist on that rule. Some of counsel appearing against the validity of this law concede the right to abolish the defenses referred to. The Supreme Courts of Massachusetts, Wisconsin, and Washington have recently held in cases sustaining the validity of statutes similar to the one here attacked that it is within the legislative power to abolish the defense referred to. (In re Opinion of Justices, 96 N. E. Rep., 308 (Mass.); Borguls v. Falk Co., 133 N. W. Rep., 209 (Wis.); State, ex rel. v. Clansen, 117 Pac., 1101 (Wash.).)

The reasoning of the court in the Ives case is cogent but not convincing. The fundamental principle underlying it is that the legislature is without power to impose liability without fault, and that to do so would be the taking of property without due process of law, contrary to the fifth and fourteenth amendments. An examination of that decision will show that while the court undertakes to distinguish the case from the numerous cases decided by the courts of last resort in many of the States of the Union and by the Supreme Court of the United States sustaining statutes imposing liability without fault, it wholly fails to satisfactorily do so. It is safe to say that the opinion does not meet the approval of the profession generally. As an evidence of this fact, I submit that Mr. Ernst Freund, professor of law in the University of Chicago, in the hearings before the commission stated that an inquiry was instituted among teachers of constitutional law in the law schools of the principal American universities, and that only 2 of them were in accord with the decision of the court of appeals in the Ives case, while 15 united in the following statement of reasons why the views of the court should not prevail. That statement of these 15 is so cogent and forcible that I give it as a part of my address, with the names of the gentlemen who pronounced the opinion, and I think it is entitled to as much respect at the hands of the Senate as the decision of any court, because they are all eminent gentlemen and learned in the law. They say:

I think it is entitled to as much respect at the hands of the Senate as the decision of any court, because they are all eminent gentlemen and learned in the law. They say:

1. There is no controlling difference in constitutional principle between the abrogation of the fellow-servant doctrine and the liability of the employer for an accident which is due to a risk inherent to the trade. For where the employer has used all possible care in selecting and supervising his servant, the negligence of that servant resulting and supervising his servant, the negligence of that servant resulting and supervising his servant, the negligence of that servant resulting and supervising his servant, the negligence of that servant resulting and supervising his servant, the negligence of that servant resulting and supervising his servant, the negligence of that servant resulting and supervising his servant, the negligence of that servant resulting and supervising his servant, the negligence of the servant resulting and supervising his servant, the negligence of the servant resulting and control of the servant resulting his manner as a solid. Conceding, as the court of appeals does, that the legislature can not create the liability which was proposed to be created by the act.

2. The decision takes an untenable view of the effect of the guaranty of due process. Constitutional limitations rest either upon explicit constitution or upon the principles implied in the spirit and history of our institution or upon the principles implied in the spirit and history of our institution. The new principle of workmen's compensation is not opposed to any explicit provision nor to any previous judicial decision interpreting the Constitution. The case concededly presented a new problem. It is submitted that a court should not read into the fundamental law of the State any limitations that stand in the way of the progress of the law toward better social justice within the limits of established institutions. The Constitution commits the law making a

Mr. Alfred P. Thom, general counsel for the Southern Railway Co., appeared before our commission, and he is one of the ablest lawyers in the country. He favored a law of this kind, but, like some of the Senators who have addressed the Senate, he rather favored an elective system, and gave his reasons for it. He discussed at length before the commission in a very able argument the decision in the Ives case, and I quote from him to show what his opinion was of this case. Thom said:

Congress has power to enact such legislation, if confined to the District of Columbia and the Territories and to interstate and foreign commerce, inasmuch as such legislation does not violate any rights of property of the employer protected by the fifth amendment.

I will say in general terms he favored the enactment of such a law, and in his mind there was no question but what Congress has absolute right and power to regulate the relation between master and servant where both are engaged in interstate commerce.

Those who question this proposition-

Says Mr. Thom-

Says Mr. Thom—

Those who question this proposition hase their objection on the assertion that such legislation involves the statutory imposition of liability without fault, and insist that a statutory imposition on a property owner of liability without fault is to take away his property without due process of law.

This is the fundamental and essential postulate that underlies the decision of the court of appeals of New York in the recent case of Ives v. South Buffalo Railway Co. (94 N. E., 431).

I ask your attention a moment to that decision.

* * The new statute," the court says, "as we have observed, is totally at variance with the common-law theory of the employer's liability. Fault is no longer an element of the employee's right of action."

Again, the court says:

"When our constitutions were adopted it was the law of the land that no man who was without fault or negligence could be held liable in damages for injuries sustained by another. That is still the law, except as to the employers enumerated in the new statute, etc."

And again:

"If it is competent to impose upon an employer who has omitted no legal duty and has committed no wrong a liability based solely upon the legislative flat that his business is inherently dangerous, it is equally competent to visit upon him a special tax for the support of hospitals and other charitable institutions, etc."

"We conclude, therefore, that in its basic and vital features, the hospitals and other charitable institutions, etc."

And again:
"We conclude, therefore, that in its basic and vital features, the right given to the employee by this statute does not preserve to the employer the 'due process of law' guaranteed by the constitutions, for it authorizes the taking of the employer's property without his consent and without his fault."

And he concludes:

And he concludes:

* * * There are statements, many times reiterated in that decision, that the basis of it is that the taking of the employer's property to pay for an injury inflicted without the employer's fault is a taking of property contrary to the fifth and to the fourteenth amendments of the Constitution of the United States and to similar provisions in the constitution of New York. Now, if that postulate is unsound, the whole fabric of the New York decision falls to the ground. It rests on no other postulate. It is put upon no other basis. It atands on that one foundation—the constitutional principle that the taking of one man's property to pay for an injury received by his employee without his fault is the taking of his property without due process of law.

He then discusses at length decisions in conflict with that in

He then discusses at length decisions in conflict with that in the Ives case.

The decisions to which I have heretofore referred sustaining statutes imposing liability without fault show conclusively, it seems to me, the vice of the decision of the court of appeals in the case referred to.

It will thus be noticed that there is an entire lack of harmony in the character of the legislation as well as in judicial construction on the subject of workmen's compensation, the statutes of Montana, Wisconsin, and New Jersey giving to the employee the right to elect whether he will sue in damages or come within the provisions of the compensation acts, while those of Washington and New York, like the one under consideration, are compulsory, doing away entirely with the present-day rights and remedies for recovery of damages in case of injury. In some cases the common-law defenses are taken away from an employer who fails to submit to the provisions of the law, and in others, where the employee fails so to do, the employer is permitted to avail himself of these same defenses.

I think I have shown by the decisions of the courts of last resort that Congress has plenary power under the commerce clause of the Constitution to reasonably regulate the relations between employers and employees while both are engaged in interstate commerce, and that there are no restrictions or limitations upon the exercise of that power in any other constitutional provision.

That the bill under consideration has no other purpose than the regulation of that relation and that it is a reasonable regulation I think must be conceded.

I therefore turn to a very brief discussion of the attitude of the employers and employees as disclosed at the hearings before the commission. It is proper to say that the gentlemen who appeared before the commission to represent the cause of employees without exception displayed distinguished ability and evinced a profound knowledge of every phase of the questions involved. The arguments made were impressive and able, and it is no disparagement of the distinguished attorneys who appeared on behalf of the employers to say that these representatives of the employees equaled them in their ability to present their views clearly, logically, and forcefully. Nearly, if not all, of the employees of interstate carriers were represented at the hearings, and at each separate stage of the proceedings were advised as to the progress being made by the commission.

Following are the leading representatives of the different organizations of employees who from time to time appeared and discussed the measure.

W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, representing 117,000 men. One of the Senators questioned whether the laboring people were represented. He represented 117,000 men. I assume that the men elected by the railroad employees to these highest places represent the sentiment of the employees in all of these bodies.

G. H. Sines, vice president of the same order.

A. B. Garretson, president of the Order of Railway Conductors, representing 48,000 men.

I am taking these figures as the men testified to them before the commission.

 L. E. Sheppard, acting president of the same order.
 W. E. Stone, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

W. S. Carter, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive

Firemen and Enginemen.

H. E. Wills, assistant grand chief engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and joint national legislative representative of the Order of Railway Conductors and of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Arthur E. Holder, legislative committee, American Federation of Labor, representing 924,606 men.

Samuel Gompers, president of the same order.

As a matter of fact, the statistics from which I have quoted show that there are only about 1,600,000 men engaged in interstate commerce. So we see that practically all these men were represented, assuming that these persons did represent them, and I do not think that any of these gentlemen who appeared before the commission would have assumed to represent a body of men whom they did not represent, and nobody, so far as I have been able to learn, questioned their authority to appear before the commission for them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In this connection, I want to say, if the Senator from Oregon will permit me, that as far as the State of Mississippi is concerned I have received letters from men who are not officers or officials of any of these organizations, but who are members of them; in other words, I have received letters from private soldiers in this army all over the State, and without exception every man who has written has asked me to vote for this bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think that might be said almost universally, Mr. President. I have in my possession here now copies of some 35 or 40 letters (I believe the Senator had them published as a Senate document) from local lodges expressing the hope that this bill would pass.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will permit me, I will say this demand is not universal.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did not say universal; I said almost

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that I was appointed on the subcommittee with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and others, and we took some testimony which showed that it was not by any means universal. Even these organizations did not represent a very large section of the country. It was their desire that this matter should be postponed 30 or 60 days at least, until the national organizations could meet. The national organizations of these laboring men have not met since this bill was introduced. All they asked for was that this matter should go over until their great councils should meet and the subject should be discussed among them, when we would know what were the views of the laboring men on the railroads.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. SHIVELY. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to ask him about these indorsements. Did the men who came before the committee have this particular bill before them, or were they indorsing the general principle of a compensation act?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I want to say, in answer to the Senator from Indiana, that they not only were there when the commission decided upon the adoption of the general principles that they thought such a law ought to contain, but they were there when the tentative bill was drafted. They were also there when the bill was finally agreed upon by the commission, and it was discussed in every feature of it and at every meeting. This measure in all of its forms was submitted for discussion.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator means to say that that tentative bill was substantially the bill which is now before the Senate?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Substantially the same bill.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will say that at the hearing at which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] was present the other day upon this identical bill two of the heads of these four great organizations of the country were present and indorsed this bill, and the legislative representative, who is here in Washington all the time representing those two and another, indorsed it in the most emphatic terms.

Mr. SHIVELY. That is a little suggestive. What made me curious was that there was no opposition developed among these men until the specific proposition was laid before them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. SHIVELY. I understood the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] to say that opposition was developed and that it was at the time they had the specific proposition of this bill before them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There has been some opposition developed in three States, and, so far as I know, in three States only. Those are the States of North Carolina, Georgia, and Texas. How serious the objection is in Texas I do not know, but in Georgia and North Carolina a great many of the men have been objecting to this bill. I think when they have come to understand what it does their objections will disappear; but, of course, that is only my opinion. I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. SHIVELY. I can very well understand that these men might favor the general principle of a compensation act, whether it was cumulative or exclusive, and still not be in favor of this specific measure.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I had not quite completed the list of those who appeared and the views of the representatives of the different organizations.

With the exception of Mr. Carter, all of these gentlemen favored the compulsory compensation principle and, generally, the bill as it is now reported to the Senate, except possibly they were of the opinion that a higher scale of compensation and a longer term of payments should be provided for. Mr. Carter opposed the measure on principle at first and preferred the employers' liability law and its extension beyond its present scope, both by Congress and the State legislatures, but has later gone on record as neither opposing nor approving the bill. I understand that was the position he took before the committee the other day, when I did not have an opportunity to meet with the

Neither time nor space permits me to give even a summary of the arguments of these gentlemen, and I respectfully refer the Senate and the country to the report of the hearings, where these arguments are printed at length.

In addition to these, there were in attendance at at least a part of the hearings the following members of the trainmen, who represented the trainmen on the lines given, members of the Order of Railway Conductors, who represented the conductors on the lines given, and members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, who represented the lines

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THORNTON. In reference to the question which has just been raised as to whether these employees knew what specific bill they wished to have passed, I will say to the Senator from Oregon that I have to-day received telegrams from two different divisions of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in my State. We all know what a powerful and intelligent body that is, and that they also receive a high rate of com-pensation. They both specifically refer to this particular bill and indorse it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They both indorse the bill?

Mr. THORNTON. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. One is from R. E. Owens, secretary and treasurer of Division 426, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, dated at New Orleans, La., and the other is from Mr. P. S. Mulhearn, secretary treasurer Ouachita Division 326, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Mr. THORNTON. I suggest that the Senator read them.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will read the telegrams, inasmuch as the Senator from Louisiana has been kind enough to pass them to me. They are as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 6, 1912.

J. R. THORNTON, United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

We, the voters and members of Division 426, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, do earnestly request that you vote for and use your influence for the passage of Senate bill 5382 and House bill 20487.

R. E. Owens, Secretary and Treasurer.

MONROE, LA., April 6, 1912.

J. R. THORNTON, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I am instructed by Ouachita Division 326, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, to ask you to support Senator Sutherland's bill (S. 5382), We consider this matter very important.

P. S. MULHEARN, Scoretary-Treasurer.

As I said awhile ago, the gentlemen whose names I have read were given an opportunity to express their views before the commission upon the provisions of the pending bill. In this connection I think it proper to say that the utmost publicity possible was given by the commission of the hearings which were to be had from time to time. The Associated Press had its agents there, and the first tentative plan of the commission was published in full and sent by the Associated Press throughout the country. Not only that, but blank forms of inquiry were prepared by the commission and sent by its secretary to the heads of the labor organizations interested in this matter, and to the local lodges all over the country, so that I can not see how it is possible that any members of the different lodges did not know what was going on.

The railroads were represented before the commission by their general counsel and others. A committee of 21 railroad attorneys was formed, 7 from each section of the country, to consider and, if possible, to agree upon a compensation plan. Being unable to agree as to the principle involved or as to the form such legislation should take, these gentlemen presented their views individually. While many opposed the principle, others favored it, but all agreed that the amounts of compensation as finally determined upon by the commission and inserted in the bill were too high and would unreasonably increase the cost of railroad operation.

So that practically, stating the matter generally, the difference between the railroad people and their employees was simply a question of the amount of compensation provided for under the bill; the railroad employees, on the one hand, insisting that it was too low, while the railroad people were insisting that it was too high, and would greatly add to the expense of railroad expension pense of railroad operation.

All interests had an opportunity to express their views in reference to the measure under consideration, Mr. President, at every stage of its preparation, and if anyone interested in any phase of the question failed to approve or oppose it was his own fault, for, as I have already stated, the greatest publicity was given of the hearings before the commission and of the desire of every member thereof to hear from all on so important a subject.

The opportunity is now offered to Congress to enact what is generally conceded to be the greatest piece of constructive legislation that has been presented to it for many years. It ought to be passed at the present session, and with as little delay as possible; but whether Congress passes it or not, it is safe to predict that within the next few years there will not be a State where legislation having the same purpose in view will not find lodgment on the statute books.

It is pretty generally conceded by the employers in almost every industry that such legislation in some form or other is just, as an instrumentality to put an end to uncertainty and to fix the extent of liability for all classes of occupational injuries; and some employers, without any legislation, have voluntarily, adopted some form of compensation for injured employees. It is demanded by most of the employees in hazardous employments, in the hope that they may feel assured, in case of accident, that they will not become dependent, and that their families and dependents, in case death results from such accident, will not become the objects of public or private charity.

As the subject comes to be better understood it will eventually be demanded by both employers and employees, in order that the antagonisms which the present liability laws occasion may be alleviated by a statute which fixes the rights and responsi-bilities of both without regard to fault upon the part of either. It is demanded by justice, as well as by a sound public policy. Public policy demands that there be an end to expensive and vexatious litigation and is interested in preventing the enormous economic waste which the present system entails. And, finally, justice demands that those who risk their lives in hazardous employments and add to private and to national wealth millions of dollars each and every year shall not be compelled to bear the whole burden of occupational accidents; it demands, as a matter of right and not as a charity, that pro-vision shall be made by the industries which occasion the injury or death, for the rapidly increasing army of cripples and de-pendents—an army which will not be diminished until every industrial enterprise understands that payment must be made, without regard to fault, for every injury to its employees—it demands in the particular case that this measure shall be speedily enacted into law and that the human instrumentalities of interstate commerce shall be put upon a higher plane than the inanimate agencies thereof, which are maintained and kept in repair at the expense of the industry as long as possible and then cast into the scrap heap, just as the unfortunate human agencies, maimed and crippled, helpless and hopeless, are now turned out upon the cold and unwilling charities of the world.

ALICE V. HOUGHTON.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 5137) for the relief of Alice V. Houghton was passed on Friday last. On that day, in executive session, I entered a request, as though in legislative session, to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and I now desire to press that motion.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen] has given notice that he wished to speak to-day after the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Cham-

BERLAIN]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from New Jersey because he understood the Senator simply desired to enter a motion.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I now wish to make the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the relief of Alice V. Houghton was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand that the Senator now desired to have the bill taken up or he would have recognized the Sanator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen], who first addressed the Chair. The Chair understood the Senator from New Jersey merely wished to enter the motion.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; I entered the motion to reconsider on last Friday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the circumstances the Chair feels constrained to recognize the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well; I yield. Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oklahoma will permit me, I think the Senator from New Jersey is mistaken in saying that he entered the motion to reconsider.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I entered—
Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator gave notice that he would enter a motion, and I myself objected to entering the motion at that time in the absence of the chairman of the committee. I certainly shall have to object to taking up the motion in the absence of the chairman of the committee,

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I think the RECORD, if the Senator will pardon me, will show that I did enter a request to reconsider, and asked that it go over a legislative day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the RECORD does not show that the motion was in fact entered; and the Chair suggests that the Senator now enter the motion.

and then the Senator from Oklahoma can proceed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, then, I now most respectfully enter the motion to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is now entered.

Mr. WILLIAMS subsequently said: Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the motion made by the Senator from New Jersey been recognized by the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion has been entered by the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does that save its place?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; and the matter is in abeyance.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by A. C. Johnson, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House has signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 96) to amend an act entitled "An act appropriating $350,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on the Mississippi River," approved April 3, 1912, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

POST ROADS AND RURAL-DELIVERY ROUTES.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill 2935 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma, the title of which will be stated.

The Secretary, A bill (S. 2935) to provide for the construction, maintenance, and improvement of post roads and ruraldelivery routes through the cooperation and joint action of the National Government and the several States in which such post roads or rural-delivery routes may be established.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, Senate bill 2935, prepared by the his experience as the chief executive of my old home Commonwealth of Virginia.

This bill provides for the appropriation of $20,000,000 annually for the construction, maintenance, and improvement of post roads and rural delivery routes through the cooperation and joint action of the National Government and the several States in which such roads may be established, the Nation and State contributing equally to the cost. The value of this proposal is that the Federal Government would at once take the initiative and make available to every State the expert knowledge gathered together by the Federal Government on the construction and maintenance of good roads.

This initiative is of supreme importance. No great public enterprise will receive proper attention unless some one is charged with the direct duty of attending to that business.

Experience has shown that the private individual will not take the initiative in building good roads, because the task is too great for him, and in like manner the county, except for the laws passed by the State, would not initiate good roads except in special instances. But with the Federal Government taking the initiative, inviting the State cooperation, every State would be strongly stimulated to improve the roads. This feature of this bill is of great value.

The good-roads department under this bill would speedily formulate and submit to the various States a method of co-operation which would result in coordinating the State and basis. I am sure that the people of my own State of Oklahoma would be glad to cooperate with the Federal Government in improving the highways and rural routes. In the constitution of Oklahoma we established a department of highways, and Hon. Sidney Suggs, of Ardmore, the strenuous and able head of this department, is actively organizing public opinion in support of this the next great step in the national development of the Republic.

Mr. President, nothing that I shall say will be either original or novel, but the facts and the reasons should be emphasized on the attention of the country. The improvement of the public roads of the United States is urgently necessary for a variety of reasons.

The national growth and prosperity must depend on good roads.

The development of the suburban schools, churches, mail delivery, the intelligence and social intercourse of the country people, the attractiveness, the value, the financial returns, and the physical productiveness of the farm depend upon good roads. Cheaper food products and cheaper manufactured products both depend upon good roads.

Inaccessible and muddy roads cost the Nation a thousand millions annually.

Justice to the farmer, who pays 60 per cent of the taxes and gets but little in return, demands it. The value of the public school, the press, the pulpit, the platform, and all the advantages of civilized life depend upon access, and access upon good roads. The extension of trade, the improvement of the opportunities to the citizen, the relief of the congestion of population in the cities depend upon good roads.

Good roads are absolutely necessary in peace and in war. They are the chief agency of a great industrial people for the free interchange of the products of labor.

THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF FEDERAL AID TO GOOD ROADS.

It has been said that the United States has no constitutional right to contribute to the building of good roads. I emphatically deny it.

Under section 8, Article I, of the Constitution, Congress is expressly authorized to establish post roads, and is given power "to collect taxes," "to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

The perfection of the postal highways and of the Rural Free Delivery Service will extend post roads over every important road in the United States upon which any national attention need be given, and the right of the United States to provide for the common defense carries with it the right to establish national highways, as Rome did, for the movement of our national troops in time of war and for the "general welfare" and the movement of interstate commerce and transportation in time of peace.

The right to provide for the general welfare of the United States sufficiently covers national aid in establishing highways of stone as well as of steel rails throughout the United

Why, Mr. President, Congress authorized the Cumberland Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson], is drawn in the light of Road at the headwaters of the Potomac in 1811 at a cost of $7,000,000, and in 11 years about this period 14 great highways were authorized to be built by Congress,

It was the generally acknowledged doctrine of our forefathers that the Government had this right, and from 1850 the Government granted aid to highways with steel rails from the Mississippi to the Pacific coast and subsidized the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, the Northern Pacific, the Southern Pacific, and gave away 200,000,000 acres of the public domain in support of national highways

These contributions would be worth approximately $2,-000,000,000, which went to private persons and private corpora-tions for the building of national highways.

There is no merit in the contention that the National Government may not contribute to the support of post roads within the States.

Down to the most recent days, since the War with Spain, there has been expended from our National Treasury for road

Mr. President, we have the biggest country, the finest land, the richest people-and the poorest roads on earth. reason for this, and the reason is that our road-building system is based on the old localized English system in the days of the American Colonies, and has never been adequately improved to meet the advancing knowledge of civilization.

In many of our States we still keep up the destructive and wasteful system of fluancing road building by taxing adjoining property and administering the construction and maintenance by utterly unskilled, intensely localized management, which is very often too incompetent to merit consideration or defense. It is grossly unjust to tax the farmer to build and sustain the road which passes through his farm, when that road, in fact, is a highway used by tens of thousands who ought to contribute their proportionate part to the construction of the highway.

The National Government, which raises revenue by taxing every man, and the State government, which raises its revenues by taxing all the people, should cooperate with these taxes levied on all the people to construct these highways which are used by all the people just in proportion to the use of the roads. To compel the construction and maintenance of the main highways by the local citizen who has had no opportunity of being instructed in the construction or maintenance of roads is necessarily to place the highways under an administration not equipped to do this work under the safeguard of thoroughly scientific knowledge, which is essential to proper results. Millions have been squandered by this obsolete method, and the roads remain to-day as an overwhelming witness of the incompetence of past management. For example, under the present laws of Texas, in a State which spends more than $8,000,000 annually on road improvement, the county judge is the one absolute authority on road matters. Such a thing as a county engineer, except by special act of the legislature, seems to be unthought of.

In France, where they have the best roads in the world, at the head of the road system there is a magnificent technical school of roads and bridges, maintained at the expense of the National Government, from which graduates are chosen as highway engineers to build and maintain the roads of France. There is an immediate cooperation between the Republic, the departments, and the communes as completely as an organized army, directed by the most intelligent head possible to obtain.

At the head of the administrative organization is a director general of bridges and highways, under whom are the chief engineers, ordinary engineers, and subordinate engineers, the latter being equivalent in rank to noncommissioned officers in the The subdivisions are under the direction of principal conductors and ordinary conductors. Next in line come the foremen of construction gangs, the clerks employed at headquarters, and, finally, the patrolmen, each having from 4 to 7 kilometers of highway under his immediate supervision.

The great administrative machine working in complete harmony, with definite lines of responsibility clearly established, accomplishes results with military precision and regularity. In this great army of workers not the least important unit is the patrolman, who has charge of a single section of the road. He keeps the ditches open, carefully fills holes and ruts with broken stone, removes dust and deposits of sand and earth after heavy rains, removes the trees, shrubs, and bushes, and when ordinary work is impossible breaks stone and transports it to the point where it is likely to be needed. He brings all matters requiring attention to the notice of his chief.

Every detail requiring attention is carefully noted and reported to the central authorities, so that at any time the exact condition of every foot of road throughout France may be ascertained.

Here is a system, the best in the world, over which mag-nificent highways vast volumes of farm products find their way at a cost of from 7 cents to 11 cents a ton per mile. Over these roads motor cars can travel 50 miles an hour without danger. They are beautiful. They are lined on either side by ornamental and fruit trees. They are of great commercial value. They lower the cost of living, both to the town and the country, by furnishing the city with cheap food and furnishing the country with cheap freight in transporting their products to town and their materials back to the farm.

In France at the present time there are 23,656 miles of national routes, which cost $303,975,000 to build. There are 316,898 miles of local highways, built at a cost of $308,800,000, of which the State furnished $81,060,000 and the interested localities $227,740,000. The roads of France are classified into five different divisions:

First. The national routes, traversing the various departments and connecting important centers of population.

Second. The department routes, connecting the important centers of a single department and bisecting the national routes. Third. Highways of general communication, little less important than the previous class.

Fourth. Highways of public interest, traversing a single canton and connecting remote villages with more important roads.

Fifth. Private roads.

In the German Empire a similar system prevails, and these great nations, including the other nations of Europe, for that matter, set an example to the people of the United States which they would do well to follow.

In England they have a much more localized system, and in consequence there is in England the most striking example of lack of uniformity of road work and of excessive expenditure in proportion to mileage.

The most perfect road system, however, is that of France, which has the most highly centralized management of all the road systems.

It is not my purpose, Mr. President, to go into detail with regard to the best methods of construction, but only to point out the extreme importance of centralized initiative and centralized knowledge proceeding with efficiency upon a fixed basis.

I do not regard Senate bill 2935, which I advocate, as necessarily an absolutely perfect bill, but I do regard it as a step of correction and I do believe that out of this means.

very great importance, and I do believe that out of this measure, if it be enacted into a law, we would enter upon a proper system.

I believe we should have a legislative reference bureau (for which I have heretofore contended), for the convenience of Congress in digesting and arranging data and making preliminary drafts of bills and which in this case might thoroughly work out a perfected plan suitable to the use of the United States under our particular form of government, providing a system for the most perfect cooperation between the National and State Governments for the development of good roads in this country.

THE COMMERCIAL VALUE OF GOOD ROADS.

Mr. Halbert P. Gillette, an engineer of ability, has with great pains estimated the cost of hauling agricultural products to and from the farm. (S. Doc. No. 204, 60th Cong., 2d sess., p. 56.)

The average haul in the United States is 12 miles of 2,000 pounds at a cost of 25 cents a ton, on an average of $3 a ton for delivering farm products from the farm to the railway.

In France the cost of hauling a ton a mile is 7 cents and in Germany and England from 9 cents to 12 cents. The direct loss on the tonnage actually hauled in the United States is perfectly enormous. The Interstate Commerce Commission reports show that the railroads handle upward of 900,000,000 tons of freight, of which 32 per cent, or approximately 275,000,000 tons, are the products of forest, field, and miscellany.

Estimating only 200,000,000 tons at a cost of $3 a ton, we have $600,000,000 in this item, of which over $400,000,000 is a flat loss, due to bad roads; but these figures are only a fraction of the haul. To this must be added the enormous tonnage hauled from farm to farm, from farm to village, from farm to town, from farm to canals, wharves, and docks for shipment by water. The unemployed land, the defectively developed land, the wasted products not hauled because of the expense and of impassable roads, the lack of intensive farming at any distance from cities because of the expensive hauling are grave factors of the huge loss due to bad roads. The loss by bad roads upon any reasonable basis would probably exceed $1,000,000,000 per annum, or the cost of conducting our National Government.

We have bad roads standing as a barrier, preventing the hauling of products from the farm, because the cost of hauling is too high and products are wasted on the farm.

Lands distant from market are not cultivated at all and farms reasonable near to the markets are not put into crops which would be productive of large bulk, because of the ruinous expense of hauling such products, and for this rea-son there are huge areas uncultivated in the United States, estiand there are huge areas themstrated in the United States, estimated by the Department of Agriculture at over 400,000,000 acres. Improved roads would develop this vast domain and make food products cheaper. It would lead to intensive and more extended farming. Where the average value is $8.72 per acre of wheat, $7.03 an acre of corn, the value of vegetables in 1890 was $42 an acre and of small fruits $80 an acre.

The commercial value of good roads, therefore, would mean a saving of a thousand million dollars annually. It would mean bringing into cultivation vast areas of land now uncultivated. It would bring intensive farming on the lands which are now cultivated. It would mean very much cheaper food products. It would mean the improved financial, social, religious, and educational condition of the farmers.

It would mean a vast increase in the farming population drawn from the congested cities for the benefit of city and country alike.

IT WOULD INCREASE THE VALUE OF FARM LAND.

We have about 850,000,000 acres of farm land improved and unimproved in the United States.

The good roads will exercise a tremendous influence over increasing the value of farm lands accessible to good roads. By "accessible" it must not be understood as being immediately on a perfected highway. It is an important fact that a team of horses for two hours out of a day can exert about four times their average tractive force without injury. For this reason they may pull a heavy load for 3 or 4 miles over a dirt road to a perfect highway without injury, and then carry the heavy load easily to market a long distance without harm, so that the farmers within 3 or 4 miles on either side of a good highway would be directly benefited by it; and with the King drag road leading off 4 or 5 miles on either side of a perfected highway all of the farmers of the country could be brought in touch with good roads at a minimum expense to the great increase of their farm-land values.

BAD ROADS MEANS LOSS OF POPULATION.

The sections of country which have lost in population by the last census are conspicuous for impassable roads. In 25 counties, for example, selected at random by the United States Office of Public Roads, the population between 1890 and 1900 fellaway over 3,000 persons in each county where the roads showed an average of only 1½ per cent of improved roads, while in another 25 counties, in which there was an average of 40 per cent of improved roads, the population in each county had increased over 31,000

It is density of population and accessibility of land which increase the value of land.

GOOD ROADS MEAN BETTER SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

Improved roads mean improved schools and churches. the roads are very bad the children can not easily attend school, nor can the people easily attend the churches, but with good roads they could do so. In the States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Ohio, and Indiana, in which, in 1904, about 35 per cent of the roads were improved, 77 out of each 100 pupils enrolled attended the schools regularly; but in the five States of Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Georgia, and South Dakota, which had, in 1904, only 1.5 per cent of good roads, only 59 out of each 100 pupils enrolled could attend public schools regularly. Thus good roads enable 30 per cent more children to attend school.

THE PRESENT CONDITION OF THE PUBLIC ROADS.

We have to-day 2,155,000 miles of public roads within the United States. Less than 180,000 miles are macadamized or improved with hard surfacing.

More than nine-tenths of the public roads and highways of the United States in the rainy season are almost unfit for use, and a large part in a very rainy season are utterly unfit for use and impassable, to the grave injury of the farmer and the equal injury of the town people who depend upon him for regular supplies of food.

In some of the States improved State methods are being put into force, but the department of good roads of the United States Government should be stimulated in the highest degree, so as to furnish the people of the United States with full information upon the important commercial, financial, educational, and social aspects of this great national problem. The department should be put in a position where it can stimulate public attention and bring all of the States into harmony with this great scientific Road building and road maintenance is a great It has taken generations of men to learn the best problem. methods of road building and maintenance, and the highest knowledge in the world in scientific road building should be so that he could be a direct beneficiary of the advancement of human knowledge in this respect.

THE RELATION OF PUBLIC ROADS TO THE FARMER.

Farm life should be made more attractive. No matter how fertile the land or how favorable the climate, if the farmer is imprisoned by bad roads, he can not enjoy fully farm life. He can not conveniently reach the school, the church, the town, or his friendly neighbors if the roads are very bad.

We can not expect the greatest social, moral, mental, and material development of the farmer if the roads are bad.

Only 8.2 per cent of the total road mileage of the United States is improved at the present time, yet we expended approximately $79,000,000 in work on roads in 1904. The expenditure has $79,000,000 in work on roads in 1904. The expenditure has been entirely out of proportion to the results accomplished. The reason for this I have pointed out. It is due to the extreme localization, bad road laws, bad administration, and lack of coordination. We have little skilled supervision, with but few men with a knowledge of road building or of any profound interest in it. The laws must be changed, and they can only be changed and greatly improved by instructing the public mind and public men.

The profit of the farmer is represented by the difference between the cost of production and transportation and the selling If he can cut the transportation in half, he will materially benefit himself financially; and if the cost of transportation could be reduced $600,000,000, the farmer would easily be benefited to the extent of one-half of this saving, granting that the city inhabitants would benefit by the other half of the saving. We complain of the high cost of living, and do not sufficiently analyze the reasons for the high cost. Lower transportation means lower cost of living, both to the farmer and City resident.

We should perfect the national waterways likewise and control the railways to lower the cost of transportation.

The mean cost of carrying wheat from New York to Liverpool-by water 3,100 miles-is only 3.8 cents per bushel, while it costs the farmer on an average more than that to haul his wheat to the railway station.

The consular reports show that hauling in Germany, France, and England is frequently as low as 7 and 8 cents a ton a mile, and rarely higher than 13 cents.

The cost on fair earth roads is 25 cents a ton per mile; on earth roads containing ruts, 39 cents; on sandy roads when wet, 32 cents; on sandy roads when dry, 64 cents; on black gumbo when thoroughly wet passing is impossible. Steep grades on the roads is another serious tax on transportation, because "the chain is no stronger than the weakest link."

If the farmer has good roads, he can take to the town two or three times as much in a load as he does now. He could haul to town from a distance two or three times as great as he does now. He could haul to town products which now are prohibited by the expense of hauling. He could raise a larger variety of products suitable for marketing. He would be directly benefited by making the town, the people, and the school more accessible.

He would be benefited by making his neighbors easier of access, and in that way his social pleasure and personal happiness would be increased.

He would be able to deliver his farm products to the town every day in the year, and therefore would have a steady market throughout the year for his products, whereas he may be by muddy roads excluded for two and three months at a time from his market, and the town people in like manner may be deprived of vegetables, fowl, eggs, milk, and other farm products which are essential to their comfort.

In Bradley County, Tenn., bonds were issued for 160 miles of excellent macadam roads, and lands that were valueless before these roads were built now find ready purchasers at from $15 to $30 per acre.

EFFECT OF ROAD IMPROVEMENT ON TRAFFIC.

If the roads were improved, traffic would not be congested at one season and very limited at another season, because the transportation of the crops could be made at convenience and uniformly without the interruptions of bad weather. The railroads could, therefore, maintain a more regular service with a smaller equipment, fewer employees, and less cost of operation. This means cheaper freight rate for all the people and lower cost of living.

I have not taken into account the wear and tear on teams due to bad roads, the destruction of wagons and vehicles, the danger to life and limb from bad roads.

THE RELATION OF GOOD ROADS TO THE PUBLIC HEALTH.

If the roads are perfectly good, the physician or surgeon can with the modern motor car go to the aid of one in danger of death almost immediately, but when the roads are impassable placed at the disposal of the humblest citizens of this Republic death might ensue before relief could be obtained. If the roads are wet and bad and children march to school with wet and muddy feet, their vitality is lowered and loss of life must

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE CITY AND THE COUNTRY.

Many men complain that there has been a steady movement from country to city. The reason is plain. The city is more attractive to live in because it has perfect roads of asphalt, The city is more macadam, and Belgian block, and concrete sidewalks. son need to have his feet muddy in going from one point to an-In the city is concentrated many of the things that human beings desire, but if the country had good roads it human beings desire, but it the country and good would be a more desirable place to live in than the city. The would be a more desirable place to live in than the city. The away from the roaring noise of the city and the everlasting grind of the wheels of the street car. In the country he has his own fresh food, prepared by nature, at his hand; eggs, fresh milk, cream, butter, fresh vegetables of all kinds, and fresh fruits—peace, young animal life to interest and please him, and nature smiling back in his face and giving him 10,000 per cent for every seed he plants. With good roads he can come to the city when he likes and go back to his peaceful, pleasant home, satisfied.

City life enervates and weakens human beings, as a rule, be-cause of the nervous strain of city life, while in the country a man grows strong, with steady nerves, good lungs, and brawny limbs. The conditions of country life should be made more attractive. The social intercourse and pleasure of country people, proper school facilities, and church advantages should be made available with good roads. From the country has sprung the greatest men of genius and patriotism. Nearly half of all of our people are engaged in agriculture, and they furnish half of the taxes and produce three-fourths of the wealth of the Nation. I am in favor, for their sakes, of stimulating the building of good roads, but let us remember that the building of good roads is just as important to the city man who lives on the produce of the country as it is to the countryman who raises that food supply. It is of equal importance and value to both the residents of the city and of the country. It is of equal im-portance to the professional man and to the laborer, to the farmer and the city merchant, to the producer and the consumer. It means lower cost of living to all. It means great commercial and financial advantage to all. It means greater pleasure and enjoyment of life to all.

Many of our Government expenditures are made without return, but here is a magnificent investment, which, if it were based upon the credit system, would pay 15 per cent on every dollar judiciously invested and would add to our national wealth more rapidly than any other national investment into which we could invest our national credit or our national energies. experience of other States has shown the importance of the State taking the initiative and guiding the activities of the counties and in this way getting greater results. This has been fully explained by the Senator from Virginia as the experience

AN AVENUE TO EMPLOY THE UNEMPLOYED.

If we had this system established we could give employment to the unemployed at rates that would not attract men already engaged but would attract men out of work and in need. are hundreds of thousands of men of this class available.

Mr. President, this bill ought to be immediately reported and passed. I remind Republicans that public sentiment has so far crystallized that in their national platform of 1908 they cor-dially indersed aid to good roads in the following language:

We recognize the social and economic advantages of good country roads, maintained more and more largely at public expense and less and less at the expense of the abutting property owner. In this work we commend the growing practice of the National Agricultural Department by experiment and otherwise to make clear to the public the best methods of road construction.

And I remind my brother Democrats that in our last platform we had the following plank.

POST ROADS.

We favor Federal aid to State and local authorities in the construction and maintenance of post roads.

Let us fulfill in good faith our party pledges.

THE VALUE OF INTENSIVE FARMING-" BACK TO THE LAND."

"Gentlemen, in 40 years we shall have over 200,000,000 people, and this estimate does not fully take into account the geometric progression which immigration makes probable under the enormous growth of seagoing vessels of mammoth size.

"Our breadstuff exports in 25 years has decreased 24 per cent, notwithstanding large areas of new lands producing wheat and corn.

"Our home demand for wheat in a quarter of a century has grown 80 per cent more than the supply of wheat.

"The object contemplated by the National Farm Land Congress is to develop farm lands, encourage home building on the happy for himself, for the faithful woman who loves him, and farm, increase the productiveness of our farm land, make our farms more accessible by the building of good roads and improved national and local highways, and make our farms a potential factor in promoting the wealth, the health, the beauty, and happiness of the Nation. Nothing could be of greater national importance.

"With these objects I find myself deeply in sympathy. One of my earliest recollections was of the intensive farming of a piece of land in Lynchburg, Va., of about 21 acres, surrounded by a high brick wall; the inclosed land was divided up into a dozen or more plots of ground, with graveled walks lined in certain parts of the garden with dwarf box and with flower

"Some of the squares were used for vegetables, Irish and sweet potatoes, beets, parsnips, salsify, okra, radishes, onions, lettuce, cabbage, mustard, asparagus, tomatoes, several kinds of sweet corn, the watermelon, cantaloupe, and sweet pumpkin for cooking, rhubarb, and other succulents. Other beds against the brick wall had beds of strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, currants, gooseberries, and various vines.

"Even in the winter this land furnished the table with vegetables stored in sand pits, and with fruits preserved and canned, and with pickles, marmalades, and other things edible.

"I remember sweet herbs in this garden—of thyme, sage, etc.

I recall with affection certain arbors devoted to the grape, which, in their season, had a special charm for me. Around the edge of these squares were many beautiful varieties of fruit-of peaches, of pears, the sweet Sickle, the Royal Bartlett, the Damson, the plum, the cherry, the apple. The yellow June apples in that garden were sweet enough to tempt, and often did tempt, a small boy about my size to risk an appearance before the Throne of Grace without any other preparation than an incredible number of June apples eaten in reckless disregard of consequences.

"I have never seen anywhere a more beautiful variety of hyacinths and tulips than grew in this garden, with all the oldfashloned English flowers-the jonquil, the narcissus, the crocus, the lilles of the valley, the phlox, the snapdragon, and many others; the Easter lily, the tiger lily, and a great variety of roses.

"I remember the yellow and red honeysuckle, covering a trellised summerhouse, mingling its fragrance with the pleasant odors of the climbing rose which helped to cover it.

"As I used to enter this charming spot of land from the diningroom door, I recall passing between two trees of crepe myrtle and, few steps farther on, by two large shrubs of the euonymus. There were several large box trees in the garden, whose thick cover afforded a hiding place for many birds, whose twilight repose I used to disturb for my amusement by shaking the trees.

"There was in this garden a large clump of cane which furnished the boys of the place with convenient fishing rods, and everywhere throughout this 2 acres was manifest the highest intelligence, the finest taste, and unceasing industry.

"The guardian spirit of this garden was my mother, under whose hand everything which grew out of the ground always flourished. I have always thought that the ministering angels who supervise the growth of plants must have specially loved the gracious spirit of my mother, for her plants lived, no matter what happened to the gardens of other people. I shall never be satisfied until I am able to own and to enjoy such a garden as she had, and with which she made my boyhood days happy. Adjacent to the garden was a big smokehouse where we put up our own ment, and a yard where the chickens and ducks flour-ished and helped to feed the family.

"I may be forgiven these personal reminiscences when I point to the fact that this two acres and a half of land furnished a very large household with the greatest abundance of food in the form of vegetables, fruits, berries, grapes, throughout the year, as well as with an abundance of beautiful flowers. It was intensive farming. Every foot of the ground was kept thoroughly manured, the plants were transplanted from time to time where their nature required it, and the life habits of every plant were studied and thoroughly understood.

"In contrast to the productive power of this two and one-half acres, I have seen, in Indian Territory, a poor farmer trying to cultivate enormous areas of land with a single team, and with the invariable result that his crop was so poor as to afford him and his family not even the necessaries of life, much less its conveniences or the luxury of fruits and flowers. Such a farmer, with bad and muddy roads to travel, is practically isolated from the market, from the school, from the church, and from other conveniences and pleasures of civilized life, and can not conveniently or cheaply deliver to market even those things which he does raise.

"The man who works more land than he can cultivate thoroughly well wastes his time; he does more: He makes life upfor the little children who look to him for guidance. He is not as useful nor as happy a citizen as he would be if he concentrated himself on 40 acres, cultivated a garden, kept a few cows for milk and butter, raised chickens and other fowls and domestic animals out of which the profits of the farm arise.

COMPARISON WITH ENGLAND, GERMANY, AND FRANCE

"In England, Germany, France, Belgium, and Holland the people obtain much higher results than in the United States. The average wheat production of Great Britain is over 32 bushels to the acre, and in the United States only a little over 13 bushels to the acre.

"I spent the summer in Germany and France, and there I saw that every foot of the ground was thoroughly cultivated. It was divided up into very small tracts, and off at a distance would look like strips of carpet laid upon the rolling fields. There was constant rotation of crops; they were busily engaged in fertilizing with manures, making the ground richer. farm roads were in splendid condition, and thousands of miles of surveyed, carefully leveled and graded turnpikes afforded the farmer cheap transportation, so that a single team might move 4 or 5 tons with less difficulty than half a ton could be moved by the same team on some of the terrible roads in the United States. What an object lesson to the people of the United States are these splendid roads, which increase the value of the farm, bring the farmer nearer to every convenience of civilized life, make his products more valuable, and make the conditions of life much more attractive.

"Along these roads I observed miles of fruit trees, the cherry, the apple, the pear, and every one of them marked with a number indicating ownership.

"I think I never saw a house so poor that it did not have its vegetable garden and its garden of flowers.

"In coming from Fifty-seventh Street down to the Auditorium, on the Illinois Central, the back lots of the American homes, seen from the cars, shabby, dirty, and unkempt, are absolutely distressing and shocking to those who have positive views in regard to making land either useful or beautiful.
"Every such back lot in Germany and France and England or Belgium or Holland would be a valuable vegetable garden ornamented with flowers. We can be engaged in no better business than in leading our people back to the use, and the perfect use, of our most precious heritage—the land. Let us get back to the land.

THE VALUE OF THE FARM AS A NATIONAL RESOURCE.

"Our farms produced last year eight thousand millions of created wealth. Our cotton crop alone furnished enough export cotton to give us a balance of trade in our favor. The output of the American farm, by proper cultivation, could, however, be immediately doubled, and by reclaiming waste places with proper cultivation, could easily produce over twenty billions of wealth per annum-a sum about equal to the total accumulation of a century in the banking resources in all of our 25,000 banks.

"The work of such men as Luther Burbank, of Santa Rosa, Cal., in improving plant life has a value of which our people generally have had an adequate conception.

"In Oklahoma a new plant has been developed from the common seeding Bermuda, called the "Hardy Bermuda," which has great national value. It has been developed by careful selection of plants which have withstood severe freezing. The plant has as good nutritive quality as timothy; it comes up early in the spring; it has a root over a foot deep; it grows almost as thick as the hair on the head; it grows luxuriantly in the face of dry weather; will successfully stand the most extreme drouth; is not killed by many days of overflow; will grow on alkali spots and in the sand. It will produce a very large amount of food to the acre, and is an excellent grazing grass. It is impossible to exaggerate the value of a plant of this character, which will convert land heretofore unproductive into productive areas of great value. Our people must have food, and this plant will produce great food supplies from land heretofore producing We must emphasize making our lands more productive by using proper suitable plant life and concentrating labor on the land.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE NATIONAL HEALTH.

"The annual death rate of New Zealand is nine to a thousand. and of the various Australian States, ten to a thousand. In the United States it is over sixteen to a thousand-60 per cent more than in Australia. If our people can be led back to the farm, where they can get plenty of fresh air, fresh vegetables, milk and butter, and chickens, we will save these lives which now amount to over a half million beings per annum in excess of what it ought to be.

"The tables of mortality show that this high death rate is very largely due to the bad housing, bad food, and bad sanitary conditions of the very poor in our congested cities.

"In the fight on tuberculosis abundant fresh air has been demonstrated to be essential to a recovery. Abundant fresh air is essential to keep people well who are not now sick, and is all the more important when they become afflicted with the extremely dangerous tubercle bacillus. Let us encourage our people to get back to the land, and we shall greatly improve the national health.

IMPROVEMENT IN SELF-RELIANCE AND OTHER MORAL QUALITIES.

"In cultivating the land, all of the moral qualities are stimulated, independence, self-reliance, initiative, courage, honesty of In working on the land, a man is able to provide his own comfort; he can build his own house with his own hands; he can supply every article of food he needs, and create a surplus sufficient to buy other things. He receives nothing for which he does not give an equivalent; he promotes his own comfort, his own self-respect, and his own dignity. The greatest men of the Nation have come from the farm. The man on the farm, who is cultivating a small piece of land of his own, need have no fear of being suddenly discharged by his employer and left with a family on his hands to feed, and no means to buy food or pay rent until he finds another job. On the farm there is no danger in losing his job.

"This gives a man courage, self-reliance, and those moral qualities which go to make up good citizenship. private virtue of the individual citizen our Republic can not rise to its great and honorable destiny. Let us get back to the land. Let us improve the roads that lead to the farm and from the farm and give the farm greater attractiveness because of its accessibility to the towns and cities.

THE VALUE OF SMALL HOLDINGS.

"The French Revolution was due to the abuse of the unrestricted land holdings of the nobility, from which vast incomes were derived, thus leading to a great extravagance of the landholding class in the face of the extreme poverty and misery of the unemployed landless masses. The landholders were so rich they did not need to use the land in full, but devoted very large areas to game preserves, while the poorer French people, who had also been brought into the world by the hand of the Omnipotent, were denied access to the land by the landlords, who preferred to see their estates used in large part for purposes of amusement, as hunting parks. The French law, of course, sustained the French landlord until the corrupt extravagance of the landholding class and the abject hunger and misery of the multitudes led to the overthrow of the laws which permitted this condition, and the bloody French Revolution followed.

"The revolution resulted in the subdivision of France into small landholdings, which, under the laws of inheritance, was still further subdivided.

"The result of this subdivision has been intensive cultivation and great agricultural wealth from the soil of France, making it one of the richest nations in the world. The reverse of this policy is seen in Spain and Mexico, where huge estates have been permitted to exist, with the unavoidable result that the productive capacity of the land has not been developed, and where the extremes of great wealth and abject poverty are in more marked contrast than in any other civilized country

"The United States should pursue a policy of small land-holdings, and the State of Oklahoma has led the way by pass-ing laws imposing a progressive tax on large holdings of land, for the purpose of stimulating actual home building, of promoting the greatest productive capacity of the land, and for the abatement of the nuisance and danger of large landed monopoly.

"The smaller subdivision of land will lead, therefore, directly to its intensive cultivation, and just in degree as the lands are thoroughly well cultivated, just in that degree will the value of farm lands increase, and with the increase in the value of farm lands, and the growth of their productions, just in that degree will city property and suburban property increase in value.

"Likewise, this will lead to the building of good roads, and to the increase of the liberty, of the independence, and of the personal happiness of all of our people, both on the farm and in the cities. Our cities are sadly congested and millions of people could be led to the farm, both to their own welfare and to the advantage of the Nation. The pimp, the cadet, the white woman slave would be more useful and happier as an honest plowman, gardener, and milkmaid.

"THERE IS A CHARM ABOUT THE FARM.

"Under proper conditions nothing can be more beautiful or more attractive than the farm life. In times past with bad roads and muddy weather, and fields too big for the farmer to cultivate successfully, men have often worked themselves down, have grown weary, have made themselves poor, by ill-directed effort, and have made themselves, their wives, and children sorrowful and miserable in consequence. Under such conditions the farm has often been like a prison instead of being a place of liberty, prosperity, and happiness. The boys and girls have too often been glad to leave the farm to get away from its dull routine and solitude. But the time has come when there should be a complete reversal of all this. We have learned how to avoid these things and the valuable lesson should be universally taught and made a common heritage.

"Let the man-if he have too much land-sow his excess in grass, in hardy Bermuda; let him confine himself to what he can thoroughly cultivate; use only plant life suitable to the seasons, as kaffir corn and milo maize for dry weather, and learn how to do the work well; let him surround himself with a beautiful garden; let the women and children be taught to love these things and the farm will become a lovely home.

"It's a good thing to keep the children on the farm, away from the temptations and evil suggestions that surround them on every hand in the city. In the light of modern invention, with our wonderful modern transportation, with electric railroads running everywhere, with rural mail delivery, with cheap power, heat, and light, with improving values in farm products, with cheapening goods of every description, every family man should have a piece of land, if it is only 10 acres, or 1 acre, upon which he might surround himself with the fragrance and the blossom and the fruit of plant life, where he might raise healthy, happy children. What can be more beautiful, or more valuable than a well-kept vegetable garden, filled with all kinds of foods of every flavor—filled with berries and grapes, and trees bearing fruits and nuts, and ornamented with the endless procession of flowers each advancing season affords?
"What more attractive than to be surrounded by the young and cheerful life of the farm—young chickens, ducks, turkeys, calves, lambs, pigs, colts, and last but not least, the opportunity to have a few good dogs, whose love and companionship is not the least of the attractions of the farm.

"'Back to the farm' should be the bugle call to the youth of our land.

"Back to the farm, where peace and quiet and sound, refreshing sleep follows happy labor, where we can hear the birds, singing their songs of thanksgiving in the early morning among blossoming trees, where homely joys can give a life of happiness, where men and women grow sound of heart and strong of limb

"Back to the farm, with the friendly brute for neighbor, Where honest content will make amends for every city glamour.

"I should like to see an agricultural school of practical instruction and of plant and seed distribution in every agricultural county in the United States, where the care of cattle and horses and sheep and swine and domestic fowl and the economies of farm life and its productive capacity should be properly taught; where the great lesson might be taught and emphasized by the Government-both National and State-that there is no profession more honorable than farming, and that no occupation is of such vital importance to the wealth and health of the Nation.

"I rejoice at an opportunity of giving expression before the National Farm Land Congress of the deep interest which I feel in this matter, and I trust that this congress may be the beginning of an organization which will emphasize in the most powerful manner the importance of the farm to our national wealth and to our national health and happiness.

"This congress should, above all things, emphasize the great importance of good roads to and from the farms of the country. It should encourage State and National aid to good roads, so as to bring to the expenditure on road building the greatest degree of intelligence and efficiency and concentrated effort. This is, perhaps, the most important factor of all in making the farm more desirable to the people, in making the farm more attractive, in making it more remunerative, and giving to it those elements which are necessary and essential to peace of mind and to the prosperity and happiness of the farmer."

ALLOTTEES OF THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up a local bill, Mr. Owen. I ask thanmous consent to can up a local pin, which is not objected to by anyone and which is important to my State. It is the bill (S. 4948) to amend an act approved May 27, 1908, entitled "An act for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the property consideration of the bill?

present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma if that is not the bill to which my colleague objected? Mr. OWEN. His colleague agrees to the bill, I will say to the Senator from Kansas. He objected to it the other day, but has withdrawn his objection upon explanation.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that I spoke to the senior Senator from Kansas, and he told me he had withdrawn his objection. Therefore I interpose no ob-

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has already been read, the Chair is informed.

The bill proposes to amend section 9 of the act referred to so as to read as follows:

So as to read as follows:

SEC. 9. That the death of any allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes shall operate to remove all restrictions upon the allenation of said allottee's land: Provided, That no conveyance of any interest of any full-blood Indian heir in such land shall be valid unless approved by the court having jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate of said deceased allottee: Provided further, That if any member of the Flye Civilized Tribes of one-half or more Indian blood shall die leaving issue surviving, born since March 4, 1906, the homestead of such deceased allottee shall remain inalienable, unless restrictions against alienation are removed therefrom by the Secretary of the Interior in the manner provided in section 1 hercof, for the use and support of such issue during their life or lives, until April 26, 1931; but if no such issue survive, then such allottee, if an adult, may dispose of his homestead by will free from all restrictions; if this be not done, or in the event the issue hereinhefore provided for die before April 26, 1931, the land shall then descend to the heirs, according to the laws of descent and distribution of the State of Oklahoma, free from all restrictions: Provided further, That the provisions of section 23 of the act of April 26, 1906, as amended by this act, are hereby made applicable to all wills executed under this section. This section shall apply to the lands of all deceased allottees who died prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, or-

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Before the bill passes I should like some Mr. WILLIAMS. information about it. Who is in charge of the bill?

I have charge of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it the bill which affects the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws to some extent?

Mr. OWEN. In no way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In no way?

Mr. OWEN. In no way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

ALICE V. HOUGHTON-RECALL OF BILL.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I move that the Senate recall from the House of Representatives the bill (S. 5137) for the relief of Alice V. Houghton.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves to recall from the House a bill, a motion for the reconsideration of the passage of which has already been en-

Mr. BRISTOW. I hope the Senator will not ask action on that motion this evening. The chairman of the committee is not present, and he stated to me this afternoon that he did not want it taken up in his absence.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. My only thought in pressing it was that I did not want to lose my position or status in this matter. I want the bill to come to the Senate, that we may act upon it again.

Mr. BRISTOW. As I understand, the Senator has given notice that he will ask that it be reconsidered, which preserves his right to bring it up at any time.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. All right. That is perfectly satisfactory to me, with that understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator, then, withdraws his motion?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I withdraw it. Mr. WILLIAMS. What was the understanding? Mr. WILLIAMS. What was the understanding? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey has entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed the Senate; the bill has gone to the House, and the Senator has now made a motion to recall the bill in order that the Senate may consider the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the motion to recall the bill is postponed what assurance is there that the House will not in the meantime act upon it?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not know. Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems to me it would be better to act now upon the motion to recall.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Action upon the motion to recall will not in any way act upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps it would be just as well to vote upon that in the first place.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The motion to reconsider will still be pending, and can be acted upon later; but there is danger in post-poning action upon the motion to recall, because the House may concur in the Senate's action, and if so, the bill would go to the President at once.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no danger of that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There may or may not be, but it is better not to take the chance.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims in the House, and the Senator knows that it can not be acted upon anyhow before Wednesday.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, why object to this motion?

Mr. SMOOT. The chairman of the committee is not here. Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, well.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there ought to be any action taken in his absence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not see that that has anything to do with it. It seems to me if the Senate really desires to recall the bill, there is very little excuse for running the risk of the House concurring in the action of the Senate and the bill becoming a law before we get a chance to consider it at all. would not be discourteous, of course, to the chairman of the committee, but there is no discourtesy involved, because the main motion—the motion to reconsider—is in abeyance.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not now ask action on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The chairman will be back before we will consider that. I would not consider that motion in his absence, but the motion to recall, which is merely preliminary to the motion to reconsider, I think we had better act upon now.

Mr. SMOOT. As far as the Senate is concerned, I do not know how it would vote upon this question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not, either.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not a quorum here to-night. Senators have left.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We could soon get a quorum if necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I do not think that is necessary, and I do not see the use of making a fight upon the simple motion to recall a bill preliminary to a motion to reconsider it. I do not see what is under the objection.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing under the objection other

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is nothing over it.
Mr. SMOOT. Other than that I believe that action of this kind should not be taken while the chairman is absent, especially in view of the fact that he requested that no action be taken in his absence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That means action upon the bill. It does not mean action between the two Houses in order to get the bill back into the possession of the Senate. All this motion does is to seek to get the bill back into the possession of the Senate; and if the bill comes back into the possession of the Senate, the question remains what the Senate will do with the motion to reconsider. I would not have a thing done by the Senate in the absence of the chairman except to get the bill back into its possession.

The PRESIDENT pro 'tempore. Senators will indulge the Chair. The Chair will have read the rule with reference to the matter. There seems to be a requirement under the rule. The Secretary will read the second paragraph of Rule XIII.

The Secretary read as follows:

2. When a bill, resolution, report, amendment, order, or message, upon which a vote has been taken, shall have gone out of the possession of the Senate and been communicated to the House of Representatives, the motion to reconsider shall be accompanied by a motion to request the House to return the same, which last motion shall be acted upor immediately and without debate, and if determined in the negative shall be a final disposition of the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems there is no right even to debate it, and the motion must be put to the Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I most respectfully press my motion.

Mr. BRISTOW. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the

MONDAY, April 8, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the beautiful and inspiring custom which obtains throughout the length and breadth of Christendom in celebrating at this season of the year the resurrection of the Christ, which proves the power of life over death, deepens our faith and confidence in Thee our Father, kindles our hopes and aspirations anew, strengthens our convictions, and makes the whole world akin. Grant that we may be inspired by the uplifting services to better lives, purer motives, nobler endeavors. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned on Saturday the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration. The committee is anxious to proceed with that to-day, and that they may do so I ask unanimous consent that next Thursday be substituted for to-day for District business. The SPEAKER. This being District day, and the Committee on Indian Affairs being anxious to finish the Indian appropriation bill, the gentleman from Kentucky, chairman of the District Committee, asks unanimous consent that Thursday next be substituted for to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to the following:

To Mr. Adamson, for 10 days, on account of illness in his

To Mr. RUCKER of Colorado, indefinitely, on account of illness. WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. Smith of New York, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of H. R. 23919, in favor of William P. Wheeler, Sixty-first Congress, second session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE LATE SENATOR ROBERT L. TAYLOR.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the Record as a part of my remarks, a part of the funeral oration of Rev. W. S. Neighbors, D. D., president of Sullins College, Bristol, Tenn., delivered at the obsequies of the late Senator Robert L. Taylor, at the Auditorium at Knoxville, Tenn., on the 5th day of April, 1912. Dr. Neighbors spoke most feelingly, as he had had that intimate acquaintance and close fellowship with Senator Taylor that enabled him to know and to keenly appreciate the deepest sentiments as well as the outward life of the lamented Senator.

At the close of this great funeral oration there was not a tearless eye in that vast throng of Tenneseeans who had gathered there to pay this last sad tribute to the distinguished

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the part of the funeral oration of Rev. Dr. Neighbors, of Tennessee, delivered at the obsequies of the late Senator ROBERT L. TAYLOR. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The oration referred to is as follows:

There was no objection.

The oration referred to is as follows:

Of the public life of Senator TAYLON I shall not try to speak except incidentally. I am in no wise furnished for such a duty, and besides the Nation has spoken. Almost every State in the Union has spoken. Every rairload station from Washington to Nashville and back to Knoxville has spoken. Every great daily newspaper has spoken, and most wisely, of Senator TAYLON's public career.

I wish I were fully able to unfold to you the secrets of Senator TAYLON's apublic career.

I wish I were fully able to unfold to you the secrets of Senator TAYLON's apublic career.

I wish I were fully able to unfold to you the secrets of Senator TAYLON's arrevolved have given them without hesitation and perhaps quite dogmatically.

I wish I were fully able to unfold to you the secrets of Senator TAYLON's and the secret of his power over men. When, years ago, I knew him less intimately than when he died, if I had been asked for these won was his unbounded friendship for all sorts and conditions of humanity, reaching its climax in that proverb. "He who would have friends must show himself friendly." I still hold to this as a general proposition, but what is friendship? It is not a baseless fabric. It must be founded on something that makes it secure.

In the second place, I would have, years ago, told you that the secret of this man's power was in the beautiful songs and stories that touched every chord in every human heart. But then songs and stories are sing all of his songs and total all of his songs and stories are give them point and pathes and pungency and power. I might have sung all of his songs and total all of his audiences and yet have won no heart.

In the third place, I would have sald that the secret of his power over men was due to the simple way in which he uttered his thoughts, I still hold to that as a reasonably true proposition, but what is simplicity? It is not shallowness—the mere play upon the surface of things. It is not a natural or a common produ ment. He was always deep enough to get to the bottom of things, and that is deep enough. He was always strong enough to tear down the fortifications of all of his opponents and carry the day, and that was strong enough.

I have seen him when whole multitudes came floating into port upon the tears that flowed down his manly cheeks. I have seen him with a mere wave of the hand silence or stir the crowds, just as he willed. I have seen the mere cut or twinkle of his eye change the whole atmosphere of the listening throngs. I have seen the pucker of his lips make his hearers laugh or cry.

But it is of the humbler things in his life that I wish to speak to-day. He was a complete exception to the old rule, "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country." He was most highly honored at home. The people believed in him and followed him. Again and again I have seen him step off of the train at his home town after weeks of absence, and his way was literally blocked by people of all grades and distinctions; even the negroes and the little children followed him. Anxious though he was to get home, the crowds about him often exacted a speech before they would let him go. I have seen his family play a trick on the town people and send a closed carriage to some secret place and notify him to get off on the opposite side, slip to his carriage, and steal away home.

His relation to negroes was remarkable. In his dealings with them there was no ax to grind. He simply cared for them, and they responded graciously to his great spirit. In some of his great lectures where he mentioned the names of "Rastus" and "Ephraham," you may have thought those were fancies, but they were the real names of the real negroes that belonged to the Senator's father before the war. In one of his lectures he tells at length the story of Uncle Rufus and how he had come to his home from time to time, and how that one afternoon he stayed with him in his yard and talked of the days before the war. till in memory the boy was again upon the old negro Taylor family. As they put the remains of the old darkey away close beside his master Senator Taylor stood at his grave and wept, as on another day he had stood at his father's grave and wept.

Here is another story settling forth his tender relationship to his father's old darkies: Returning from one of his lecture tours, he said to me, "I have had the greatest trip of my life this time. Over in Arkansas I found that I had a few days to spare between my lecture engagements and I found that I was within a few miles of some of my father's old darkies who moved away to that State after the war, whom I had not seen for 30 years. I gave De Long Rice, my manager, the dodge and went to spend the time with these old negroes. When I got into the community and told them that I was 'Bob' Taylor, they gathered around me in a circle and looked me in the face and cried out in unison: 'Is dat you, Bon?' I said, 'Yes; this is Bob.' They fell back and laughed. They gathered around me again and more excitingly said: 'Is dat you, Bon?' and I said 'This is Bob Taylor. Then they cried and said: 'Bob, we are mighty glad to see you. We haven't seed you since you's a boy back at the old home.' One of them said: 'Bob, my son Jim's been gone for three years but if anybody was to ask me which I'd rudder see, Bob Taylor or my son Jim, I swear 'fore de Lord I could not tell.'"

If you never knew Senator Taxlon in his home, much of the best and most remarkable in him you never knew. No consecutive the said and the selected of the set of the great, the saddest of the said, and the sickest of the sick, according to the conditions that obtained at home.

FLOOD ON THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to have the joint resolution which I send to the desk read for information. The gentleman from Illinois asks to have a joint resolution which he presents read for information.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield for that purpose only if it is short.

The Clerk read as follows:

House toint resolution 201.

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $25,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, cut of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for the purpose of strengthening and maintaining the levee at Shawneetown, III., against impending floods.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, because of the emergency which exists at Shawneetown at the present time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman from Texas indulge me just a moment? I would like to know if this proposed appro-Will the gentleman from Texas indulge me priation by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] is not for a point north of Cairo, where the previous appropriation applied. I think it is a matter that ought to be considered here and now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, three days ago this House appropriated $350,000 for this very purpose.

Mr. FINLEY. No; this is for a point north of Cairo, where the other appropriation applied.

Mr. RESSELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in reply to what the gentleman from Texas has said that that appropriation of $350,000 was for the use of the Mississippi River Commission, that has no jurisdiction over the Ohio River. The $350,000 applied exclusively to the Mississippi River. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is t

What is the sum asked for by this resolution?

Mr. FOWLER. Twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can not this appropriation or a part of this $350,000 be used on the Ohio River?

Mr. RUSSEIL. It can not. It is for the Mississippi River Commission, and they have no jurisdiction over the Ohio River. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is for the same object as the other appropriation.

Mr. FINLEY. No; it is a different locality, and information has been received that the flood has reached this point and some relief is absolutely necessary.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will consent to yield for its consideration.

Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. MANN reserved the right to object

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask in reference to the Senate joint resolution which was passed on Friday last appropriating $10,000 for Mound City.

Mr. FOWLER. That is 60 miles below Shawneetown. Mr. MANN. I understand; but the gentleman's resolution would not cover that,

Mr. FOWLER. No, sir. Mr. MANN. Well, I think if one is considered we ought to consider both at the same time.

The SPEAKER.
Illinois speaking of? What resolution is the gentleman from

Mr. MANN. Senate joint resolution 96, appropriating $10,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against floods on the levee at Mound City, Ill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has that resolution before him. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk has

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to call the attention of the House to this situation. Last week $350,000 was appropriated for the purpose of strengthening and protecting the levees of the Mississippi River under the Mississippi River Commission. There is on the Speaker's table a joint resolution passed by the Senate appropriating $10,000 to protect a levee at Mound City, on the Ohio River. That resolution was passed in the Senate upon a statement made by a Member of the Senate similar to the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, based upon no investigation by anyone connected with the Federal Government, but upon the strength of a telegram which had been received by a Senator. I desire to call the attention of the House to what the telegram states:

MOUND CITY, ILL., April 4, 1912.

Senator SHELDY M. CULLOM, Washington, D. C ..

At a citizens' meeting held to night it was decided to ask you to secure for the city of Mound City, Ill., the sum of $10,000 from appropriation recently made, to aid us in our flood-stricken condition. Water at top of 4 miles of levee all around city; no money in trensury. Financial aid necessary at once to save us from inundation. Can you not have same wired to city treasurer here?

M. F. BROWNER, Mayor.

DANIEL HOGAN.
W. A. WALL, County Judge.
F. J. Kuny.

President Mound City Commercial Club.

In other words, Mound City desires the Federal Government to put $10,000 in the city treasury to pay its citizens to do the work on its levees to protect the city. What the situation is here I do not know, but there are more than 2,000 miles of river protected by such levees, and if the Federal Government, upon telegrams from persons in various localities that a condition exists such as described in this telegram, is to allow the appropriation of money to prevent the levee being broken here, the Federal Treasury will be unable to meet the demands upon it.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.
Mr. JAMES. I want to state to the gentleman that I think he misunderstands the real situation at Mound City. I do not believe that they want the money to put in the treasury to pay their own people to do the work on the levees, because all up and down the Ohio River, as well as the Mississippi River, those people have been making donations and hundreds and thousands of citizens have been working night and day without a dollar of pay.

I do not believe that the State of Illinois, the State of Kentucky, the State of Missouri, or any other State would have to pay men to protect their own property or that of their neighbors by hiring them out of money furnished by the Federal Government. They will do all possible in their power without price, but they need assistance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I may have a misunderstanding of what is desired there, but I read correctly the message sent by the mayor of the city, and it is to have $10,000 wired to the city treasurer of Mound City, and for what purpose, if not to pay for the services of those who are to do the work?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to wait a minute. There has been a request from certain sections for aid in the way of food and shelter for those who have been made destitute as a result of the flood. Some resolutions were introduced for the purpose of providing relief, one by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. James], and the other by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Russell]. Those gentlemen and others have had conferences with the President of the United States, and the President has directed the Quartermaster General and the Commissary General of the Army to furnish throughout that section rations and tents wherever necessary temporarily to provide for those made destitute. I have been in communication with the President about the matter, and I shall ask the Clerk to read a letter sent to me by the President on the 5th of this month to show exactly what the situation is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, April 5, 1912.

Washington, April 5, 1912.

Hon. John J. Fitzgerald,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Fitzgerald: As I told you yesterday, by direction of the Secretary of War, two officers of the Quartermaster Department have been sent to that part of the Mississippi Valley where floods are reported. We have had telegraphic communication from them, but they have opened communication with the mayor of the latter town. This is owing to interruption in the railroad traffic and the necessity for proceeding part way by boat.

I write to say that I do not think it wise to make any appropriation for the purpose of buying food and other supplies until these officers reach the ground and give us some idea of the amount needed and the extent of the suffering and destitution.

Meantime, before any appropriation is made, the Secretary of War will not hesitate to use of the Army supplies whatever is immediately needed, and I have no doubt that he has near at hand a sufficient amount to relieve such suffering as can be relieved in that way. I shall advise you to-morrow of any further information that we have received.

I inclose a copy of a telegram from Capt, Hegeman for your information.

Sincerely, yours.

tion.

Sincerely, yours,

WM. H. TAFT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, so far as taking care of those made destitute and temporarily in need of food and shelter is concerned, everything is now being done that can be done, but if at every place along the river which is threatened by the flood some one is to telegraph to a Member of Congress asking that ten or twenty-five thousand dollars be made available to protect the work at that particular place, then every Member of Congress representing a district bordering upon those rivers would be compelled to ask similar relief for the threatened places in his district.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.
Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, the letter just read from the President to the gentleman from New York is in reference to the situation on the Mississippi River. This question that is now up for consideration is upon the Ohio River. The letter from the President deals with a situation relative to food for the people. The resolution under consideration deals with the question of strengthening the levee itself. I think a mistake was made the other day when the $350,000 was made immediately available for the purpose of strengthening the levees of the Mississippi River, that the resolution appropriating that sum did not provide also for strengthening the levees along the rivers tributary to that river, because no one could argue that the Government ought to protect the levees of the Mississippi River and deny protection to the people who are behind the levees of the Ohio River. That is the situation exactly as it is presented here. I agree with the gentleman from New York that ordinarily it is not good policy to appropriate money upon telegrams, but I do say that the Ohio River ought to have an amount of money, so far as it may be necessary, expended to protect the people along that river as the Mississippi River, and represent a district that is skirted by both rivers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the appropriation made for the Mississippi River was made upon a report furnished by the Chief of Engineers, upon information obtained in a proper way, giving some idea of the situation.

Mr. JAMES. That is exactly true, but at that time the Ohio River had not gotten to that stage where it was thought there would be danger of overflows.

Mr. FITZGERALD. People in sections along the Ohio River would never have dreamed of applying to the Congress for relief to aid them in this way if it had not been for the passage of the other resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, win the gentleman yield?
Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman referred to the telegram from the officials of Mound City, and stated, as the telegram does, that they desired the money wired to the city trensurer. But the gentleman notices that the resolution which was passed by the Senate, and which is now on the Speaker's table, provides that the money shall be-Expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levee at Mound City, Ill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that.

Mr. MANN. It is not proposed by either of the resolutions, as I understand it, to contribute any money to the municipality.

Mr. JAMES. Oh, not at all.

Mr. MANN. But to authorize the Secretary of War to expend money for the protection of levees on the Ohio River in the same manner as Congress, under suspension of the rules in the House the other day, provided for the protection of levees on the Mississippi River. The gentleman says we get information by wire. That is true. Unfortunately the floods do not wait. They are there; and the only way we can get information appropriately and in time is by wire. Is not the gentleman from New York willing to let the House vote on a proposition of this sort?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not with the information I have about Mound City. The Chief of Engineers states that the water at Mound City is all backwater. There is no current whatever. There are three levees there, one above the city, which it was never proposed an attempt should be made to protect sufficiently to withstand the floods, because it covers a section which is undeveloped, low swamp land that could not be protected. Another levee is below the city, protecting lands taken over by a company for irrigation purposes. The company, some years ago, refused to permit anybody to go in there to do any work at all, but finally granted a right of way to the Big Four Railroad, if I be not mistaken, upon condition that it should build a levee. The other levee is around the city, and in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers it is ample to withhold the waters that are backed up there.

If these resolutions pass, whenever any Member of Congress threatened cities it would be impossible to refuse the appropriation, whether it would be needed or not, and there would be a flood of requests here that would make the flood in the Mississippi River look insignificant.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield-

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. MANN. After all the Secretary of War will not expend any more money there than necessary for the protection of the levee, and in a case like this where there is imminent danger of a great disaster, ought not we to be willing to authorize the expenditure of money by the Secretary of War instead of requiring a report by him in advance and take his judgment to that extent?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not. I think we should act upon some information. These floods at these places are not of this unexpected character that the gentleman would have the House to believe.

Mr. MANN. I think this flood probably is the worst they have had; certainly by long odds worse than any since I have been a Member of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been known for weeks it was coming; preparations have been made for its coming, and yet in some of the flooded sections it was necessary to use force to drive the people from their homes. They understand the conditions much better than we do. I do not believe that we would be justified in making these appropriations in this way, putting every Member of the House who has a district bordering on the Mississippi River in a position where he would be coerced into introducing a similar resolution without knowledge or information as to the necessity. Now, the truth is, since Saturday the flood has been subsiding to some extent.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. CANNON. I will be glad to make just a short statement. The United States, under the guise or the name of promoting navigation, have for a quarter of a century contributed to the levee system on that great river. I said the other day, and I repeat it now, that the levee system, in my judgment, is of much greater importance than the navigation. The substance is what we are after. The other day before any levee had broken, in anticipation of the flood, we appropriated $350,000 to strengthen the levees and meet emergencies on the Mississippi River in the present emergency arising from the great flood, perfectly proper, We helped to make those levees. That was in anticipation—we did not wait for telegrams, did not wait for the water to get up so that it would break any levee. I voted for it, and I stand ready to vote something for it again if it is necessary. Now, what is the situation? The Ohio River, a great tributary of the Mississippi; Cairo, at the junction of the two rivers; Mound City 4 miles from the Mississippi; and on the Chicago.

City, 4 miles from the Mississippi; and on the Ohio, a little higher up, Shawneetown—and I want to say here and now at Shawneetown the levees were largely constructed by the United States under authority of a provision which was contained in a river and harbor appropriation bill. Ice piers have been builded along the Ohio River by authority of a provision carried in the river and harbor appropriation bill. I want to say, further, I believe there may be an immediate occasion, not to appropriate to Mound City, not to appropriate to Shawneetown, not to appropriate for any other specific place, but general in its terms, guarded as the $350,000 appropriation was guarded on the Mississippi, where we made an appropriation a week or 10 days ago, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, within his discretion, acting through his officers, to lend a helping hand. What for? Not to feed the people. The President is feeding the hungry people, jumping the authority on assurances that that appropriation will be reimbursed; but an are examples. Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me suggest this to the gentleman from Illinois. I will not object to a joint resolution which will make available the appropriation made the other day to the service on rivers tributary to the Mississippi River. That takes care of the entire situationappropriation, general in its terms, to protect the levees on the Ohio River and like unto which Mound City and Shawneetown

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly willing-

Mr. FITZGERALD. And will relieve this House-

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly willing for that, because if the $350,000 appropriation, in the chapter of accidents in the providence of God, does not prove sufficient we can appropriate an additional amount. If a joint resolution can be prepared, or, say, we take up the Senate joint resolution and amend it by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the provision that the gentleman suggests-

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that if his colleague will withdraw this resolution, I shall receive a telegram from anybody anywhere in these shall have prepared an amendment to the one that is on the Speaker's table, and then he can come in and ask to have it taken up, the amendment adopted, and sent back. It can be done in a few minutes.

one in a few minutes.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. I want to ask if it is not contemplated that this shall be taken out of the amount already appropri-

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would make that appropriation avail-

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Why could not that be done by a separate measure'

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not be a bad situation there,

Mr. FILGERARD. It would not be a but situation there, then, if additional money was required.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. It is quite apparent to the gentleman that every bit of that money will be needed. I am perfectly willing to vote for any measure of relief for the people of whom you speak, but I think you ought to grant that by separate appropriation and not take it out of what is already appropriated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Louisiana knows the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers was for $250,000 and Congress appropriated $350,000.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. The recommendation was for more. The President recommended $500,000 himself.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentlemen allow me a suggestion? It is perfectly safe to authorize the Secretary to utilize the $350,000 and to use it on the other tributaries in the discretion of the President, because there is no doubt but that that approor the resident, because there is no doubt but that that appropriation will be reenforced by an additional appropriation the moment that it appears to be necessary.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. That might be, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to make a statement of the conditions at Shawneetown.

Mr. Speaker, on last Thursday I returned from my district. Shawneetown lies about 20 miles above my home. I had information then with reference to the floods at that place, and I was reliably informed by citizens of that town that there was a condition prevailing there that was likely at any moment to destroy the lives and property of the citizens of that city.

Mr. Speaker, the levee is so built that the northeastern portion thereof comes directly in contact with the great flood cur-rent of the river during high water. A few years ago during a stage of flood and overflow an immense body of water swept down against that portion of the levee, cut an awful gap in it, and swept through the city, without giving any warning, like a mighty hurricane, destroying all life and property in its wild and furious course. As a result of that dreadful catastrophe more than 25 unsuspecting men, women, and children found watery graves. That condition exists there to-day, and these people are in imminent danger not only of losing their property, but of losing their lives also.

It was well said by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that this levee was constructed under the supervision largely of the War Department. It was repaired when it broke a few years ago by specific appropriation by Congress. Now, in order that it may be protected and that there may not be a repetition of the dreadful disaster which occurred a few years ago I am requested by the people of Shawneetown to ask Congress to appropriate a small sum to relieve the situation, make more certain the city's defense, and provide against the destruction of their lives and property.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. In just one moment. Mr. Speaker, I have been informed by the Weather Bureau within the last hour that the river is still rising at that point. I am also informed by that bureau that it will be at an acute and dangerous stage for the next 8 or 10 days to come. At any time during this period, Mr. Speaker, the levee might break and then destruction would follow in its wake. Now I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].
Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from the gentleman from Illinois if the suggestion made here by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. FITZGERALD] to make available this fund already appropriated of $350,000 to the river as well as its tributaries will not cover the situation so far as his resolution is concerned?

Mr. FOWLER. I am not wholly prepared to say that it would. If an appropriation can be made available for the purpose of reaching the situation that exists there to-day, I will not only be glad to have it done, but I will be satisfied for the time being at least. But I would like to have an assurance, Mr. Speaker, that the money can be made available at once, because I understand that a pressing necessity exists now, and not at some time in the future. We need it now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?
Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir.
Mr. MANN. I would like to suggest that I have drafted a provision which, if agreed to, could be inserted in the Senate joint resolution now pending, as a substitute. It reads like this:

That the appropriation made by the act entitled "An act appropriating $350,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on the Mississippi River," approved April 3, 1912, is hereby made available for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on rivers tributary to the Mississippi River.

Would that be satisfactory? If it should turn out that they would need more money, that would be provided hereafter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think there would be any difficulty in regard to that.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I presume that might relieve the situation for the present. I do not know, personally, how much is needed, but the people of Shawneetown say that $25,000 will be needed. If that sum can be appropriated to relieve the situation, Mr. Speaker, I will be perfectly satisfied with it.
Mr. WICKLIFFE. Will the gentleman yield?
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

FOWLER] yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Wick-LIFFE ?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir. Mr. WICKLIFFE. There is a precedent for your action today. As I understand it, there was a special appropriation made in 1882-two of them, in fact-for the relief of sufferers from the flood, and for that reason the gentleman's measure, as he has it, has a precedent for action by this House.

I want to see the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] get the relief he desires, and I am heartily in favor of his measure, but I do not think it ought to come out of this money that has already been appropriated for the purpose of the prevention of floods by this river or the prevention of crevasses and for protection, and not for the purpose of reparation. I am heartily in favor of relief being granted, but I do not think that it ought to be done by diverting money that has already been appropriated and which, in my judgment, will all be necessary for the specific purpose for which it was appropriated.

There is nothing here from the engineers to show that any part of this appropriation of $350,000 will not be necessary for application to the specific purposes for which it was appropriated. I think certainly the engineers ought to be consulted before we should go to diverting to some other channels this fund that has already been appropriated for another purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WICKLIFFE. As I say, I wish to be understood as not in any way opposing the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler], and not in any manner wanting to refrain from giving relief to these people. I am heartily in favor of it, but I think that relief should be given by a specific appropriation. Do not give it by diverting funds that are already appropriated, every cent of which is necessary for the purpose

Now, you propose to divert that fund in the absence of any information from the engineers showing that they do not need it all. I hope the House will take that view of the matter and grant the relief desired in a different avenue from that now proposed for diverting this fund.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WICKLIFFE. Yes. Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, I want to say to the gentleman from Louisiana that by unanimous consent, on a bare suggestion, the $350,000 was appropriated. Now, when the representatives of the tributaries of the Mississippi River come in asking that a small relief be given them and that this fund be utilized, if the fund needs reenforcement the same wise and generous treatment will be accorded.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. That is all right; but I say do it by increasing the amount of the fund already appropriated and not by deducting from that fund that has already been appropriated. Now, I am meeting the gentleman's proposition, and showing how certainly it can be done without danger.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; and this can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. You may have unanimous consent to it, provided nothing is diverted from the $350,000 that has already been appropriated. I am heartily in favor of a further appropriation for the purpose proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman no doubt stands alone of all the Mississippi River Members in his objection.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. I do not wish, Mr. Speaker, to be put in the attitude of objecting. I do not object. I am simply asking that this amount be given in the regular way and not be given by diverting what has already been given to the engineers to Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask anyone in this House if there is any expression from the engineers with reference to this subject? Will the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations give me his attention? Have the engineers stated that any part of this fund now proposed to be taken could be taken from the appropriation of $350,000 without in any way jeopardizing the success of the engineers' efforts in holding the levees?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to enable the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to answer, but after that I can not yield further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler]

has the floor

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have not made any inquiry as to that. What I did ask of the Chief of Engineers was information regarding the situation in Mound City. telegram was sent to the Army engineer at Cincinnati on Saturday morning, and up to within an hour or so ago no word had been obtained from him.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Now, does not the gentleman think that in the absence of word from the engineers it would be a very

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not—
Mr. WICKLIFFE. That any part of this fund could be safely diverted?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not. I think if the gentleman from Louisiana and others understood that he and they could get through the House, by unanimous consent, a resolution appropriating $350,000 for that purpose; if the situation demanded additional money the same thing would happen again. I think it is hardly fair that in the preparation of that resolution the tributaries of the Mississippi should have been omitted. That ominission was probably inadvertence in that it failed to include the tributaries of the Mississippi River in the relief proposed.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. But the gentleman is incorrect there. The territory of the Mississippi River Commission was covered in that appropriation bill. Now, the gentleman is seeking to enlarge that scope, but without giving one cent more money. If you will give an additional amount of money for that proposed enlarged territory, I am perfectly willing. I simply do not want to take this fund that has already been appropriated, which the engineers have not told Congress will not be necessary, and divert it without their knowledge and without adding more to it. The solution of the question is to add more to it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler]

Mr. SISSON. I am trying to get the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] to yield to me. The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

Fowler yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson]?
Mr. FOWLER. I will in a few minutes. Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to get into a controversy with gentlemen from the Mississippi River districts when I introduced this resolution. I was only trying to protect the people of my district, because I felt that I knew more about its wants than any other Member of this House. At least, I ought to know, because it is my duty to keep in close touch with the immediate wants of my constituency. I do not know whether the amount appropriated a few days ago for the relief of the people on the Mississippi River is in excess of what is really needed or not, but I do say that the amount provided for in my joint resolution is not too much to repair and strengthen the levee at Shawnestown, Ill. It is to be expended under the direction of the War Department and need not be wasted nor one dollar of it expended for any useless purpose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with the consent of my colleague from Illinois, Mr. Mann, I will yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson]. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Wickliffe] will not object to this amendment to the resolution.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Will the gentleman yield just for one question?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Let me say that I have not as yet objected; but I want to impress upon the House the fact that no part of this money ought to be diverted from the specific fund without the consent of the engineers or their recommendation. I am heartly in favor of adding more to it. I have not objected yet, and if the gentleman will give me the assurance, and if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will join resolution.

in it, that when further money is needed it will be forthcoming, so far as gentlemen here are concerned, I am willing to yield the point.

Mr. SISSON. I believe I have the permission of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler]-Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. As far as I am personally concerned, as long as the fund asked for is for the purpose of protecting the levees of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, I shall have no objection to the proper amount of money being appropriated by Congress. [Applause.] But here is my objection to the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowlers]. If you make a specific appropriation for a specific town, then every town and village from New Orleans to the sources of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio will appeal to its individual Congressman to get a specific appropriation to protect the levees in front of that town.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Right on that point—
Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. SISSON. Practically every dollar's worth of property that I have in this world is behind the Mississippi levees, and the very money that the gentleman wants diverted for his place is money that has been appropriated to protect the property that I own in the Yazoo and Mississippi Valleys; but I am unwilling that that river shall receive special appropriations that the tributaries do not receive. [Applause.] I am more than willing to leave this matter to the sound discretion of the engineers in charge of the respective rivers, in the belief that they will expend it where it is needed and where it will do the most good. If we need more than $350,000, Congress can appropriate it; but let us not vote more than $350,000 now. Let us vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. and that may be able to save the entire situation.

Mr. WICKLIFFF. I would like to state, and this may pos-Mr. WICKIFFF. I would like to state, that this may plossibly settle the matter, that I am assured by those with whom I have talked that when further appropriations are necessary for the Mississippi River Commission this House will grant them; and in view of that understanding I will withdraw any objection that I might otherwise make.

gentleman from Illinois [Mr. The SPEAKER. The FOWLER!

Mr. MANN. Pending the request of my colleague from Illinois, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker lay before the House Senate joint resolution 96. When that has been done I shall move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the amendment which I have proposed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House Senate joint resolution 96, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 96.

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levee at Mound City, Ill.

Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all after Mr. MANN. the enacting clause and insert as a substitute the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the appropriation made by the act entitled 'An act appropriating $350,000 for the purpose of protecting against impending floods the levees on the Mississippi River,' approved April 3, 1912, is hereby made available for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on rivers tributary to the Mississippi River."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The amended joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FOWLER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the title may be amended so as to read: "To amend an act entitled 'An act appropriating $350,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on the Mississippi River,' approved April 3, 1912."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be so amended.

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the action just taken by the House I withdraw my request for unanimous consent to consider my joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his

Mr. FOWLER. Not the resolution, but I withdraw the request for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. That withdraws the resolution. The gentleman can offer it again if he wishes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20728, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BARNHART in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. The regular order of procedure is that the gentleman from Oklahoma may continue his argument on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]. Before recognizing the gentleman from Oklahoma the Chair desires to inquire of the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] whether or not they can agree on any time for debate on the point of order. It is the purpose of the Chair to give full and free discussion, but he is anxious to close up the matter.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the point of order and on the pending paragraph be concluded in 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] discussed the point of order for a few moments, but has been discussing the merits of the proposition, which is all right. I think there is no one else who desires to be heard on the point of order, but if the point of order should be over-ruled some gentlemen may desire to be heard further. I hope the gentleman will not make the request at this time.

Mr. FERRIS. The House is aware that there was a good deal of matter came into the debate outside of and inde-pendent of the pending point of order. I believe the status of the matter tersely stated is that those favorable to the point of order have consumed 1 hour and 30 minutes, while those opposed to the point of order have consumed about 30 minutes. may not be absolutely correct, but that is in round numbers correct. Of course gentlemen recognize the desire to get on with the bill, and I have made up my mind that I would try and conclude what I had to say in a short time. That would make on this side about one hour all told. The gentleman from That would Oklahoma [Mr. Carter] desires to be heard for about 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Jackson] for five minutes. I thought, as I say, I would conclude my remarks in a few minutes, which would take up the time asked for by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens]. Of course, if considerable more time is desired on the other side the request of the gentlemen ought to be modified .-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that when we agreed upon the time for general debate the gentleman from South Dakota said that he desired time to discuss this at considerable length. Now, I suggest to the gentleman that this is probably the last hotly disputed item in the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will pardon me it is not. The gentleman from South Dakota will offer an amendment, which will require time for discussion and which will go very largely into this same matter.

Mr. MANN. I understand it relates to the same matter. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that I do not desire to be heard on the point of order. understand the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] desires talk for 5 or 10 minutes, and the other gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter] desires to talk for 20 minutes, and I understand the gentleman from Kansas wants a few minutes. Now the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], when he took his seat on Saturday, was discussing the merits of the para-graph to which the point of order has been made. If that point of order should be overruled, I shall then make a motion to strike out the paragraph.

Following the disposition of that motion I shall offer as an amendment an item proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the district agents, and I want to say whatever I may have to say upon both propositions at that time, so that if the gentlemen will go on now with the 30 or 35 minutes that they desire to occupy, I will say that I shall not take any time on the point of order and will accept the ruling of the Chair, so far as I am concerned, without saying anything.

Mr. FERRIS. That is satisfactory.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Chairman, with the understanding that there is to be no discussion on the proposi-

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is not the time to be used in discussing the point of order wholly within the discretion of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is wholly within the discretion of the Chair, but the Chair sought to get an expression of those interested of how much time they might want, because he did not want to arbitrarily suppress debate. Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] desires only five minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Jackson] only five minutes-

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I shall want five minutes upon the merits of the proposition.

Mr. CARTER. I am speaking now about the point of order. Mr. MURDOCK. I do not desire anything on the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I can conclude what I have to say upon the point of order in 15 minutes, so that the whole time would amount to only 25 minutes.

Mr. MANN. That will be satisfactory. Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday last, as the committee will recall, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] presented both facts, law, and argument at great length. Most of his remarks were devoted to the facts, and in my reply to him on Saturday a great portion of my remarks related to the facts rather than to the particular point of order under discussion. I had expected, under the excitement of the moment, to go more into the facts on Saturday than I did, or probably will do now, knowing as I do that later this same question will perhaps be brought up by an amendment which the gentleman from South Dakota will offer. What I want to say now will be directed to the point of order.

It will be recalled, I think, that on Saturday the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] quite at length presented to the Chair and to the committee a recent decision by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Saunders], when the Army appropriation bill was under consideration. The provision of the bill under discussion at that time reduced the number of regiments of the United States Army from 15 to 10.

A point of order was made against the provision of the bill, and the question was debated whether or not that provision brought itself within the Holman rule. As I understood from the presentation of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], I was of the opinion that the Chair had sustained the point of order, but on looking at the decision I find that the Chair overruled the point of order, and I desire to read fragments of that decision for the benefit of the Chair.

I quote now from the decision of the Chair:

I quote now from the decision of the Chair:

The precedents say in this connection that the amendment, being in itself a complete piece of legislation, must operate, ex proprio vigore, to effect a reduction of expenditures. The reduction must appear as a necessary result; that is, it must be apparent to the Chair that the amendment will operate of its own force to effect a reduction. (Manual and Digest, p. 409, Hinds, vol. 4, p. 595.) But it is not necessary for this conclusion of reduction to be established with the rigor and severity of a mathematical demonstration. It is enough if the amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, will fairly operate by its own force to retrench expenditures in one of the three ways indicated. This result must be a necessary result, not a conjectural result or a problematical result. It is true that, having reference to the difference of minds, one chairman might hold that retrenhment would be the necessary result of an amendment, while another chairman, or the committee on appeal, might be of a different opinion; but this is inevitable. The law is clear, for instance, that at times a court upon the facts can hold, as a matter of law, that there was no negligence. Still, upon the same facts one court will derive this conclusion, while another court, on appeal, will reach a different conclusion.

Passing from that, I desire to read another portion of the Passing from that, I desire to read another portion of the decision, which refers particularly to the Holman rule:

The Chair does not undertake to fix in terms the amount of reduction that this amendment will carry, but that a reduction will follow seems to be a fair and necessary conclusion from its provisions.

Let me now read the concluding paragraph of the chairman, wherein he overruled the point of order; and I contend that the case is fairly in line with this, and was cited by the gen-tleman from Minnesota on Saturday in support of his own posi-

This ruling of the Chair does not take from the committee a particle of authority. In the first instance, the Chair must be satisfied that the necessary effect of an amendment offered under the Holman rule will be a retrenchment of expenditures, in conformity with the rule, but from this ruling of the Chair holding the amendment to be in order an appeal may be taken, and the committee, in the exercise of its authority of ultimate interpretation, can reverse the Chair, if it is in error, and fix the interpretation which the committee in its wisdom thinks the rule should carry.

The holding of the Chair at that time was that all that was necessary for the Chair to have in his mind or before him were facts which would cause a retrenchment of expenditures, and I call the Chair's attention to the fact that the entire speech of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller] was a lament over the fact that this did cut down the number of officers and did retrench expenditures too much, and that this did reduce expenses to an extent which he thought was perilous. If the gentleman was proceeding in a court of law his whole statement would be subject to demurrer. He has conceded the very set of facts that the Holman rule seeks to correct, to wit, the reduction of officers that are not needed, and the Holman rule gives us an avenue to cut them down and reduce expenditures on appropriation bills. An analysis of his argument must make it exceedingly easy for the Chair to conclude it is a retrenchment and a reduction, hence clearly within the Holman rule.

I revert now from that decision to the rule itself. As to the provision in this bill, there is no question as to its germaneness. No one will assert that it is not germane. No one, I think, can consistently contend that the Chair has not sufficient information before him that it does reduce the expenditures.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman contend that the rule applies where the reduction is a saving of expenditures to some one other than the United

I intend to get to that and hope to fully cover it. none will gainsay or seriously contend for the benefit of the Chair that this does not eliminate certain officers of the United States, that this does not in itself save from $800,000 to $900,000 annually. Now, as to the question of whether or not these are Government officers I desire to be heard on that for a moment, and I think when I am through the Chair will agree with me that there can be no longer any doubt about it. These officers are employed by whom? There can be but one undisputed answer, the Federal Government. Do they consult the Indians? The answer is, They do not. These officers are discharged by whom? By the Federal Government and it alone. The Indians are not consulted with reference to their employment or discharge. They are paid by the Government, warrants issued by the Federal Treasury over which the Indian has no control and is not consulted nor his consent necessary or even sought. His funds are used and deposited without his assent or suggestion. It seems to me nothing can be so clear as to determine the character of these officers as to the fact that they are employed by the Federal Government; they are discharged by the Federal Government; they are paid by warrant from the Federal Treasury, and, Mr. Chairman, it ought to be said that nearly everyone of them are under the Civil Service. Can there be found anywhere so clearly defined a method to determine that they are Government officers? It was contended at some length by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] that these were not Government officers, but they were Indian officers or officers for the benefit of the Indian Service. Such a theory in the light of the uncontroverted facts are not tenable, are not convincing nor sound. The fact that they are officers in the Indian department render them none the less officers. Most of their salary comes out of the United States Treasury and not from Indian funds.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will permit, I desire to state to him that my point was not that these were not Government officers, but that the fund was not a Government fund, that the moneys to be paid out were not Government moneys but Indian

Mr. FERRIS. I understand. That is true but partially, as most of their salary is appropriated for out of the Treasury and not out of Indian funds.

Mr. MILLER (continuing). So there is no retrenchment of Government funds. Mr. FERRIS. I think I recall the gentleman's contention, and if I have misstated it he can correct me, or the House will know. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, in effect, following the decision of Mr. Saunders, of Virginia, on the Army appropriation bill on February 9, shows there can be but one result, and that is that this does two things: First, it reduces the expenditures of the Government; second, it reduces the number of officers of the Government. It accomplishes precisely what the Holman rule was intended to accomplish. Now, that part of the gentleman's argument could, I think, be conceded, that it changed existing law; about that there is no contention. It does change existing law not only in one place, but in a number of places, but of course the Chair will well remember, and has the rule before him, that it is permissible to change existing law where a retrenchment and saving is sought; and the distinction that the gentleman seeks to make between the Indian fund and Government fund is a twilight zone so obscure that no one can I find it. The Indian moneys go into the Federal Treasury and are merged there. They are under the full control of the United States for all purposes. They can be expended for their benefit or in their behalf, and the Federal Government has complete control over the entire property—can expend it where it will or withhold it where it will. We are fortunate and the Chair must be fortunate and the House is fortunate in finding such a recent case cited by the advocates of this point of order which so well explains the rule. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], in making his decision-and it is at great length; it is found on page 1999 of the RECORD, February 9-goes into the proposition and makes it clear that an amendment on its face need not show a reduction, but it was sufficient that the Chair had before him facts and figures which themselves made him know in his own mind that there was a reduction and a saving. I revert to the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota, who stated it more eloquently than I can hope to do. that this amendment if adopted would reduce the number of officers; that this amendment would cut down the expenditures of the Government. I can not conceive of a more wholesome rule than the Holman rule; I can not conceive of a more just rule than the Holman rule. I can not think of an instance where the Holman rule could be so well applied and where it could accomplish so much. I hope the Chair will find the provision is in order on this bill and overrule the point of order now pending.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the vital question on this point of order is the point last touched upon by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris]; that is, whether or not the Holman rule applies to trust funds held in the Treasury of the United States or other funds which are being administered by the Government of the United States. Not much discussion until that of this morning and a few minutes occupied by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] has been devoted to the question of order. The remarks, especially to the newer members of the committee and the newer Members of the House, have been, of course, very interesting and instructive, but they have not, with these exceptions, touched upon the real question as to the point of order. Now, it is conceded, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment does repeal existing law.

It is placed in the bill upon the recommendation of the com-Therefore we find ourselves controlled entirely by the very last sentence of the rule, which reads:

The amendment, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Now, the language is broad. It does not say, as was argued by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], that they must be expenditures coming finally and eventually out of the Treasury of the United States, but the word "expenditures" is used in its broadest sense. If there be any limitation at all upon the meaning of that word, it would be the same limitation which is imposed upon the earlier use of the word in the same section and the interpretation upon that use of the word, which is as to the expenditures covered by the bill.

Now, will anyone contend for a moment that if we do change the law by the adoption of this amendment that we do not reduce the expenditures covered by this Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman kindly point out in just what respect?

Mr. JACKSON. I do not care to yield at this time.

Mr. MILLER. I do not care for the gentleman to yield, but we all ought to know.

Mr. JACKSON. I will do so, but as to his suggestion I think he and I agree exactly upon it.

According to the decision cited by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], we are not compelled to put our fingers upon the provision which reduces the expenditures covered by this bill. But leaving that consideration aside for a moment, let me call the attention of the Chair and of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], at his suggestion, that on Saturday evening, in answer to my direct question, the gentleman admitted, as he must admit, that if this amendment is written into the law this provision of the appropriation act of the last Congress will be repealed. And the provision reads as follows:

That contracts for professional legal services of attorneys may be made by the tribes for a stipulated amount for any period, in no case exceeding one year in duration, with $1,000 the annual amount, with necessary expenses to be approved and paid under such direction of the Secretary of the Interior, but such contracts for legal services shall not be of any validity until approved by the President.

The gentleman admits that by the passage of this amendment that provision of the law falls. Therefore I say there is no escape from the conclusion that if Congress never appropriates another dollar the funds under the control of the Government will be retrenched at least $5,000.

Mr. MILLER. Does not the provision assume that Congress will appropriate?

The gentleman argued just the other day Mr. JACKSON. that because of this law the Indian tribe would be left without legal counsel and Congress would be called on to appropriate money or else these tribes would be entirely without legal

Now, then, you can not assume that Congress is going to be more expensive than some other body. You can not assume that Congress is adopting the rule for the purpose of appropriating, but when a law that authorizes a fixed expenditure is stricken down it will be assumed that Congress will not legislate in the future to make the expenditures more than they are at the present time. The assumption is that Congress wants to discontinue that appropriation. But, Mr. Chairman, just a word now on whether the Holman rule applies on expenditures belonging to the trust funds of the Government. It has not been mentioned so far in the debate that the Kerr decision which has been referred to so many times here in the ruling on this question in this session of Congress was a decision on the Indian appropriation bill. It is cited in Hinds on page 410; and while that decision is not decisive at this point, it seems to me it does furnish considerable elucidation of the proposition involved. The amendment in that year proposed to change the control of the Indian affairs from the Department of the Interior to the War Department. Speaker Kerr rested his decision upon the very proposition that the provision did not show upon its face that it would reduce expenditures. The expenditures covered by that provision were both the tribal funds and the Government funds, and it seems to me to be plain that if the very originators of this rule in the first discussions did not rely upon the fact that Indian funds were to be saved and re-trenched as the reason for the maintenance of the point of order, it ought to have some weight with the Chair in passing upon this point of order at the present time. So it seems the precedents, including the Kerr decision and the decisions cited here by these other gentlemen, point to the fact that when we come to consider the tribal funds that are in the hands of the Government we must apply the same rule to their expenditure as we do the expenditure of other Government money

What else, Mr. Chairman, are they but Government moneys? Is there a dollar in the Treasury of the United States belonging to these tribes that the United States is not responsible for? Does any gentleman contend here that if by any circumstance or accident or dishonesty the Government should lose these funds that belong to the Five Civilized Tribes the people of the United States would not be taxed to replace those funds? So eventually this question depends upon the honest administration of this fund by the Government of the United States as it has agreed to do under the treafy.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Jackson] yield to his colleague [Mr. CAMPBELL]?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes. Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the gentleman contend that this fund held by the Government in a fiduciary capacity is really money belong to the Treasury of the United States and for which the Government is responsible except as a trustee?

Mr. JACKSON. Why, Mr. Chairman, I think my statement was clear. The fact that it is money held under a fiduciary capacity makes the Government responsible for its faithful administration. What else does it mean?

Mr. CAMPBELL. But the conclusion reached by the gentleman was that therefore it was money belonging to the United States and must be appropriated as other money in the Treasury of the United States is appropriated.

Mr. JACKSON. I think that is what it means in the final analysis, so that I say that when the point of order is based upon the fact that these moneys do not come out of the revenues in the Treasury of the United States there is nothing to it, because eventually they do come out of the revenues of the United States. Why, here in the hearings the commissioner, in justifying his appropriation this year, sets down the money received from the grazing leases and the sales of lands and deducts it from the appropriation made by the Government of the United States. Now, if any of those moneys are lost, if any of them are loosely administered, then it is self-evident that the appropriation must be larger my reason of the amount lost or misapplied.

I do not care to argue now on the merits of that proposition. but wish merely to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes in his justification shows conclusively that out of the money derived from Meases over $28,000 was turned over to the officers of the Government for their compensation.

Now, is it asking for too much; is it asking for anything other than what is fair and safe under the law, as I observe it, in the appropriation of our funds, that we ask that the tribal funds expended be appropriated by the Congress of the United States?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday the committee was regaled in a very entertaining manner by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller] on behalf of the point of order which he made against the paragraph under consideration. I remember now, the reasons he gave for subjecting this item to a point of order were threefold:

First. That the restriction changed existing law;

Second. That this item dealt with a trust fund, and that trust funds did not come within the purview of the Holman rule; and Third. That it would not be ex proprio vigore a retrenchment. To the first point, to wit, that the amendment changes exist-ing law, we do not except, but claim that the change effects a retrenchment of such a nature as falls plainly within the Holman

To the second point, to wit, that trust funds do not come within the scope of the Holman rule, we most seriously object; and I want the Chair's undivided attention now, because I am discussing the only point submitted by the gentleman which should really be given serious consideration; and we claim that this is nothing more than imaginary assumption on the part of the gentleman, illogical and far-fetched, and it is certainly not borne out by any language of the rule or any of the decisions thereon.

Let us see to what dangerous extremities such logic as this may lead us. He would exempt these funds from the Holman rule. Bear in mind, Mr. Chairman, that the funds dealt with by this paragraph are Indian funds, administered by the Federal Government in the capacity of guardian to ward. If we follow the gentleman's contention to the logical conclusion, we bring ourselves in the last analysis to the dangerous and unbring ourselves in the last analysis to the dangerous and unbring ourselves. tenable grounds of asserting the right of the guardian to administer the funds of a ward more loosely, more recklessly, and with less accountability than if they were his own individual funds. As a conclusion of either law or equity this seems to me so absolutely absurd and ridiculous that I can not believe that the gentleman from Minnesota, good lawyer that he is, expected the Chair to take the suggestion seriously.

But the gentleman asseverates we can only construe this proviso as a retrenchment by the rankest kind of supposition and hypothesis, and that the Holman rule does not justify any such hypothetical construction, yet before the gentleman had finished his remarks we heard him attempt vigorously to apply his point of order to the salfsame paragraph on the hypothesis that the Federal departments might be more economical than Congress.

I stand with the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, in his first statement that the rule does not justify hypothetical construction.

ment that the rule does not justify hypothetical construction. It certainly does not justify any such visionary and romantic argument as that Congress or any other parliamentary body may be more extravagant than the Federal departments.

"But," says the gentleman, "this is not by its own force a retrenchment," and he cited from the decision of the Chair already quoted from by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] on behalf of his contention. There are some things in that decision which both the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. that decision which both the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] seem to have overlooked, and that is the purpose and intent of the Chairman to give to the Holman rule the most liberal construction. For instance, on page 1999 of the Congressional Record of this session you will find that the Chair used this language:

The purpose of the Holman rule is most beneficent and proper, and it should have a liberal construction in the interest of retrenchment.

Later on in the same column we find this statement by the

We are certain to give a liberal construction to the rule as held in the interest of retrenchment. * * * It is enough if the amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, will fairly operate by its own force to retrench expenditures in any of the three ways indicated.

In conclusion, the Chair used this language:

In the words of the Speaker, Mr. Kern, it (the Holman rule) is a beneficent rule. It should be construed to secure beneficent results.

And that is exactly how we propose to apply it in this instance. And that is exactly how we propose to apply it in this instance. The gentleman says this is, in fact, not a retrenchment, and yet all of us who were here late Saturday afternoon well remember how he told us, with tears in his voice, of the havoc and disorganization that this restriction would bring down upon the heads of the Indian service in Oklahoma—and why? For the reason that it took away certain appropriations, and the gentleman was so specific in his citations of these appropriations that I want to call the attention of the Chair to each item. He told us that the language in this bill repealed the following even dozen appropriations:

The appropriation for tribal officials.

The appropriation for claims against the tribes. The appropriation for collection of tribal moneys.

The appropriation for mining trustees. The appropriation for tribal councils.

The appropriation for sale of lands.

The appropriation for equalization of allotments.

The appropriation for certain clerk fees. The appropriation for sale of town lots.

The appropriation for the sale of tribal buildings.

The appropriation for the expenses of depositing money in banks.

The appropriation for tribal attorneys.

As a matter of fact, there was expended from the tribal funds last year about $670,000. This amendment restricts the expenditure of those funds to schools alone, and by the most liberal construction of the law not over about $300,000 could be used for schools, so this amendment actually retrenches the expenditures of these funds more than 50 per cent.

Now, in conclusion, I have just this to say upon the point of order: This item deals simply with funds and expenditure of funds in the Federal Treasury for which the Federal Government is responsible in the capacity of guardian to ward. It either increases expenditures or decreases expenditures, or it does absolutely nothing. It is not claimed in any seriousness that it increases expenditures. Therefore, if it does not decrease expenditures, it does nothing. It does not change existing law, and in that case the point of order is not well taken. If, on the other hand, it decreases expenditures, it comes clearly within the scope of the Holman rule, and the point of order must, in that event, be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barnhart). It has been both a pleasure and a profit to the Chair to give the advocates and opponents of the point of order at issue unlimited time and scope for the presentation of arguments, and they have shown a familiarity with the question and a tendency to frankness and fairness which entitles them to special commendation. The Chair considers these evidences of careful research and skillful preparation of facts as conclusive assurance of wholesome legislative endeavor, and hopes he may have as much concern for good government in his ruling as the Members have indicated in their active solicitude for right legislation in this matter.

[Applause.]

The so-called Holman rule is, in the opinion of the Chair, peculiarly suited to the pending point of order in that it furnishes an opportunity to exercise his judgment in behalf of emergent needs or demands like the controverted provision in this bill whereby a saving in Government expenditures is unquestionably implied and expressed. This rule, which is No. 21, sets forth in the second paragraph as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

The Chair hears no specific question raised against the position of the proponents of the bill that the paragraph which the point of order seeks to eliminate is both theoretically and practically germane. The contenders that the point of order should be sustained only insist that the limit of expenditures therein contemplated does not pertain to the United States revenues proper and therefore the Holman rule exception or exceptions do not apply. But it has been shown, and not disputed, that most of the officials who would be affected by this legislation are under United States civil-service regulations and are thereby manifestly recognized as Government officials or em-And if they are so considered and are regulated and paid the same as other Government officials, the common sense conclusion is that they should be considered as such; and if they are within the list of "officers of the United States," either technically or practically, the reduction of their number and of the amounts paid to them as salaries and expenses, wherein the Government is responsible, would bring the provision of the bill for their curtailment purely within the concept ing, which I think would be in the interest of saving time.

of the Holman rule. On the other hand, if it be that they are in no way a part of the Government service; that the United States does not consider them within its service as officials and employees; and if the proposed reduction in expenditures can not properly be considered retrenchment of expenditures for the Government, then the course for the Chair would be clearly blazed by the facts.

But most of these premises are matters of doubt. plainly sets forth that no provision in any appropriation bill or amendment thereto changing existing law shall be in order except where the said change shall retrench expenditures.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] contends, with unchallenged argument, that the enactment into law of the provision in the bill here in dispute would curtail the scope of service now given to the Indians by the Government, in substance, strip the Indians of official guardianship that would be detrimental to their welfare and their communities' wellbeing. And the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] admits that curtailment of officers is the intent of the provision, and declares it to be a complete indictment of the position of the gentleman from Minnesota that the Holman rule can not here apply, although reducing the number of officers and reducing expenditures is precisely what the Holman rule specifies as permissible new legislation in an appropriation bill.

Another contention of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller] and others is that the officers and expenditures to be reduced by the provision of the bill are not United States officers nor United States expenditures, but Indian guardianship officers and expenditures. Of course the Chair is fully advised that, technically speaking, the money to pay the expenditures which it is sought to limit by the provision of the bill now in consideration is a trust fund to which the Government has no right or title except to hold and expend as directed by law. But here the question of Government authority in so-called fiduciary capacity involves Government liability and responsibility, and it requires more judicial acumen than the Chair possesses to decide that those employed by the Government, obligated by the Government, and paid out of Government trust funds are any the less officers of the United States than if they were employed by the same general agency to perform service in some other branch of Government responsibility.

And so, through the fog of contention, which is well founded in many respects on both sides of this complex parliamentary situation, the Chair sees one undisputed fact standing out clearly, and that is the intent of the Holman rule to enable the Congress to discharge useless officers and reduce expenditures, including salaries, by the broadest possible privilege. Hence, when the Government employs these Indian officers, has power to discharge them, pays them through one of the regularly constituted Government bureaus, and recognizes and regulates them in all ways as Government officials, in the opinion of the Chair they are in fact such and thereby subject to regulation by Congress.

The Chair, clothed as he is with this temporary authority, is not disposed to be a revolutionist and overthrow the opinions and practices of his illustrious predecessors, but he would have it understood that as a layman rather than an expert, the line of demarcation between the Government acting as trustee for the people as a whole, or for any particular class, is so indistinct that it is not visible in a matter-of-fact discrimination. Therefore, on the wholesome theory that technical error on the side of right is never actually wrong, and that economy in behalf of the Indian wards of the Government is an obligation as sacred and binding as safeguarding the expenditure of the whole people's revenues, the point of order is overruled. [Applause.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the second proviso.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25, strike out all of lines 21, 22, 23, and 24.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the committee for 30 minutes. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that he may address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me ask the gentleman if it would be agreeable to have one hour's debate, the time to be equally divided?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I understand there are several Members who desire to be heard briefly on both sides of the House. I would like to have this understand-

After this motion to strike out the proviso is disposed of I shall offer an amendment proposing to add $100,000 to the bill for the employment of district agents in the Five Civilized Tribes. If I get the 30 minutes' time that I have asked for, I shall discuss incidentally that feature of the question and will not discuss it after I offer the amendment. I think, perhaps, so far as this side is concerned, we could agree that the discussion should all be in advance of that amendment.

Would it not be practicable for the gentleman to offer his amendment in lieu of the matter which the gentleman desires to strike out, so that it would all be pending

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that portion of the bill which has been reported by the Clerk and insert in lieu thereof the matter I send to the Clerk's desk

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report,

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25 strike out all of lines 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For salaries and expenses of district agents for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma and other employees connected with the work of such agents, $100,000."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to make an inquiry of ne gentleman. There may be gentlemen on the floor of this House that would desire to support one proposition and perhaps not support the other.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We can have a separate vote on the proposition.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that both amendments offered by the gentleman from South Dakota, one to strike out and the other to insert as a new paragraph, may be considered as pending to be voted upon separately at the conclusion of the debate.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the procedure suggested by the gentleman from Illinois is the one that should be adopted; that is, that we can have a separate vote on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. That will bring a separate vote instead of one vote to strike out and insert. The gentleman from South Dakota makes a motion to strike out and another motion to insert as a new paragraph. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done and that each amendment may be voted upon at the close of the debate.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the proposition shall be confined to one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Texas withhold his request until this is disposed of? The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that both propositions of the gentleman from South Dakota be considered pending as separate amendments, and that they be voted upon separately at the end of the debate. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the committee for 30

Mr. MANN. How much time is desired on that side?
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am unable to state. I think it would be better to allow the debate to run for a while. I know that there are gentlemen on the other side who favor one part of my amendment and who want to be heard upon it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from South

Dakota yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. It will be remembered that in the colloquy between this side of the House and the gentleman's side of the House the gentleman from South Dakota suggested that he be given plenty of latitude, so far as time was concerned, and that is in the mind of everyone. I wondered, however, how many long speeches were expected to be made on the gentleman's We are now operating under the five-minute rule, and I do not think the House will indulge each one of us in taking that length of time. If there are many long speeches, I think we had better proceed, after the gentleman makes his speech, under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will suggest to the gentleman that this is a very important subject. gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has been on the Committee on Indian Affairs for many years, and I know that he desires to be heard upon the question, and I think the House will be interested in hearing what he may have to say. I do not desire to occupy the major part of the time to the prejudice of other members of the committee. I understand there are gentlemen upon the Democratic side of the House who desire to be heard, and I know there are one or two other members of the committee upon this side who desire to be heard, but I do not other side.

think at any great length. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire], I believe, desires time. If the gentlemen on that side do not wish to take time, perhaps they will allow us to use more than they do; but my opinion is they will conclude before we get through that they will use as much time as we

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, while that side of the House has used more time than we have in the former debate, yet if we can get through upon this side, we are willing to let them use the time again. This is a hofly contested question, and we will want to be heard. Gentlemen must know that there is a great deal of pressure brought to bear by the leaders of the House that we get through with this bill as quickly as possible, and I desired only to know how many long speeches would be made upon that side of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I think I can get through in 30 minutes with what I desire to present to the House.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this item proceed until 4 o'clock, at which time we shall take a vote on the pending amendments and all amendments to the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Da-kota wants half an hour and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr.

kota wants half an hour and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell] wants half an hour, and I understand that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] desires some time.

Mr. FERRIS. If we should consume a longer time than after 4 o'clock upon this item, we would have to abandon all hope of trying to get through with the bill to-day, and the necessity is quite great that we get through the bill to-day.

Mr. MANN. We set aside Thursday in place of to-day to be used for District day. What is coming up that is so important used for District day. What is coming up that is so important to-morrow?

Mr. BURLESON. The Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Illinois heard the debate here in reference to the Post Office appropriation bill and other matters

Mr. MANN. The Post Office appropriation bill would have to skip Thursday

Mr. FERRIS. Does not the gentleman think we could all curtail our time a little and get through by 4 o'clock? a matter which is in our own State, and we have five Members from that State. We ought to have as much latitude granted to us as to gentlemen who reside in other States.

Mr. MANN. Here is a case where we are discussing matters actually in the bill. This relates to a subject matter before the House, something not always usual in debate. It seems to me that gentlemen ought to have as much time as they think they need to present their side of the matter.

Mr. FERRIS. Two hours and seven minutes is pretty good time on one amendment, I think.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Oklahoma will remember that he talked on Saturday for about 30 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I did.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And he talked almost entirely upon the merits of the proposition, while the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] was simply discussing the law. The gentleman from Oklahoma read to the House a statement of the amount of moneys that were expended in connection with the administration in the Five Civilized Tribes. His whole argument was along the line of details connected with the administration of affairs down there. There was no opportunity to reply to that, and certainly in presenting two propositions here I ought to have 30 minutes

Mr. MANN. Is there any other item in the bill which will be hotly contested?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; there is one other item; the Virginia item.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think that will take 10 minutes. Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that debate on this amendment run until 20 minutes past 4 o'clock, the time to be equally divided, to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it the intention of the gentleman from Illinois to insist that the committee shall rise about 5 o'clock?

Mr. MANN. I shall not insist upon that.
Mr. FOSTER. So that we can get through with the bill to-night.

Mr. MANN. If there is any likelihood of getting through with the bill, I am willing to sit until 6 o'clock.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say that this side is as anxious to get through with the bill as gentlemen on the

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We are very anxious to close it

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph close at 20 minutes after 4 o'clock.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if that includes both the motions?

Mr. MANN. Both amendments.

Mr. MURDOCK. And at 4.20 this afternoon there will be a vote upon those, and the five-minute rule is abrogated after the debate on these two motions?

Mr. GRAHAM. If I understand, both propositions are to be discussed as one and at the end of the debate they are to be voted upon separately.

Mr. MANN. That is already the order of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] he Chair hears none. The time is to be controlled by the The Chair hears none. gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke].

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it is going to be rather difficult in the limited time for me to cover the questions involved in the amendment which I have offered. It will be necessary first to make a very brief statement of what comprises the Five Civilized Tribes. Prior to 1893 there were in the Indian Territory the five tribes, namely, the Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws, and Chickasaws. They each had Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws, and Chickasaws. They each had their own system of government. They selected their own administrative officers, they had their own councils or legislatures, if that is the proper term for them. They had their own courts, and the United States directly did not exercise any supervision whatsoever over their affairs. The territory comprising the Five Civilized Tribes in area is as large as the State of In-The territory comprising the diana, embracing about 19,000,000 acres. The Indians owned absolutely the fee to all of that great territory, except that they could not dispose of same without the consent of the United States. In 1893 it was brought to the attention of Congress that there existed a condition of affairs in the Five Civilized Tribes that needed attention, and Congress created what was known as the Dawes Commission. The Dawes Commission went to the Indian Territory, and they submitted in due course of affairs reports to Congress. In the report submitted November, 1894, the commission reported finding a deplorable state of affairs and a general prevalence of misrule. In the report of the commission dated November 18, 1895, the commission said:

Commission dated November 18, 1895, the commission said:

There is no alternative left to the United States but to assume the responsibility for future conditions in this Territory. It has created the forms of government which have brought about these results, and the continuance rests on its authority. * * * The commission is compelled by the evidence forced upon it during its examination into the administration of the so-called governments of this Territory to report that these governments in all their branches are wholly corrupt, irresponsible, and unworthy to be longer trusted with the care and control of money and other property of Indian citizens, much less their lives, which they scarcely pretend to protect.

For several years these Indians declined to negotiate or consider any agreement looking to a division of their lands, but finally, in 1897, a treaty was entered into between the United States and the Seminoles, which was followed, as I recall, by the so-called Atoka agreement of 1898 with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, which was ratified and became the law of the land, and later separate agreements with the Creeks and Cherokees were entered into and ratified. The United States undertook and agreed to make a roll of the persons entitled to membership in the Five Civilized Tribes and to allot the land to the members thereof. The commission began operations, and I do not think I overstate it when I say that almost everybody down in that section of the country, as well as many others throughout the United States, claimed the right of enrollment by reason of Indian blood or by reason of intermarriage or some other grounds that entitled them to recognition as members of one or the other of the five nations.

As I have just stated, following the agreements with the Five Civilized Tribes the Dawes Commission began the making of the rolls. There were many complex and complicated questions involved, and the work necessitated the examination of old tribal rolls and the delving into family records covering a period of 75 There was much litigation over the matter, and the work of settling the enrollment was greatly handicapped and delayed by such litigation. There was also congressional legislation affecting the subject of enrollment, with the result that, while it was originally supposed the matter could be disposed of very promptly, it took many years to complete the work, and it is true that there has been some dissatisfaction on the part of the Indians because the work has not been completed sooner, but, Mr. Chairman, there is no gentleman in this House, whether he comes from Oklahoma or elsewhere, who will contend that any of the delay in settling the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes sioner was here at the time and available, and that is a fact, but has been due in any manner to any negligence on the part of the United States or the officials who have been in charge of the Suit after suit has been brought in the courts, cases taken to the Supreme Court, involving the question of enrollment and the right to participate in the distribution of the tribal properties. Something has been said about a large attorney fee having been paid to certain attorneys for services rendered to the Indians under a contract. It is true that a fee was paid to one firm of attorneys in Oklahoma of $750,000, but it was paid as the result of legislation enacted by Congress which created a citizenship court, and the fee was determined by that court by Congress referring the matter thereto after the Secretary of the Interior had refused to approve a contract allowing a fee of more than $250,000, so that if there is any blame attached in connection with that affair Congress is responsible; but in any event the Indians did not suffer thereby, as the fee was paid for a service which resulted in striking from the rolls 3,000 or 4,000 persons who had been, it was alleged, improperly enrolled, and had they not been stricken therefrom they would have participated in the distribution of the estate.

Mr. Chairman, that question has nothing to do with the issues involved at this time, and I am not going to take up the time of the committee in discussing it. Mr. Chairman, in view of my very limited time, I will be obliged to come at once to a discussion of the merits of the proviso which my amendment pro-poses to strike out, and will therefore not discuss further the history of the Dawes Commission and the commissioner who succeeded that commission, covering the lapse of time since the commission was first created.

It was stated on the floor on Saturday by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], in substance, that there is a force of people employed with the organization that is engaged in closing up and administering the affairs of these nations that is unnecessary and greater than is required, and that it involves an expenditure of money that is extravagant; that there are a large number of persons on the pay roll who ought not to be continued any longer. The gentleman is not specific in stating in what. respect there is extravagance or what number of persons are employed whose services can or ought to be dispensed with.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Indian Affairs is now constituted, so far as the majority of the committee is concerned, as a new committee with the exception of its distinguished chairman, Mr. Stephens of Texas, and I think it will be admitted that the members of the majority of the committee are not in a position to be familiar with the details as to what has transpired in the way of legislation pertaining to the Five Civilized Tribes, or how much money is necessary to be expended for a proper administration of their affairs, as would be the case if they had served on the committee for some years.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I trust the gentleman will not take up my time. I am not going to discredit the gentleman's ability to obtain knowledge, but I am going to show that the gentleman has not very much knowledge about this subject. These gentlemen, as I have stated, being new upon the committee, could hardly, it seems to me, advise the House very intelligently as to the details of this proposition without having had hearings upon the question. The gentleman from Oklahoma says that we did have hearings, and he refers to the printed hearings showing that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was before the subcommittee, and by reference to the hearings it will be disclosed that no other person or official con-nected with the Indian Service appeared before the committee to discuss the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, and I do not think the gentleman will contend that anyone who had any think the gentleman will contend that anyone who had any information on the subject from any department appeared, except the commissioner, Mr. Valentine, and he showed himself clearly disqualified to give any information of any value, and I call attention to his statement before the subcommittee, when asked in relation to the matter, he said: "I can only speak in this matter for the Indian Office, as these affairs are not directly under me. They are carried on by the personal representatives of the Secretary of the Interior, who reports simply through my office to the Secretary." And he went on further through my office to the Secretary." And he went on further and said that he had no direct knowledge of the subject, and it is apparent that he was unable to give the committee any information. I want to call the particular attention of this committee to the fact that the commissioner in charge of affairs in Oklahoma, who has been in charge for a number of years, and a man who knows every detail pertaining to what has transpired for many years relative to the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, was not invited to appear before the committee, and did not, as a matter of fact, appear or give the committee any information whatsoever. My colleague on the committee from Minnesota, Mr. Miller, calls to my attention that the commisfor some reason the majority of the committee did not want any information, and the only reason that they could have had for not having the commissioner before the committee was that they knew that the facts would not sustain them in what is attempted by the proviso which has been made a part of this bill.

I want to ask the House if the question involved the expenditure of money in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal and the matter was being considered in a committee if Col. Goethals would not be summoned from Panama in order that he might advise the committee, but certainly if he was in the city the committee would not assume to act without consulting him and would not call some official from some bureau or department who had no direct knowledge of the

The report of the majority of the committee accompanying this bill asserts that by reason of there being a union agent at Muskogee as well as the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes that there is a great duplication of work and, therefore, unnecessary expense is incurred, and the gentleman from Oklahoma mentioned this fact in his remarks on Saturday. I want to say there is nothing whatever to sustain the report of the committee or the statement of the gentleman in this respect, and for the purpose of disproving that there is any foundation for the statement I want to read a letter received recently from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, in which he refers to a report made by an inspector who went to Muskogee for the express purpose of inquiring and investigating this very question, and I may say that the investigation was made by Maj. James H. McLaughlin, who is probably the oldest and best-posted official in the Indian Service, having had more than 40 years of active experience in dealing with the Indian directly and with tribal affairs, and his report, therefore, can be accepted as conclusive on this question. The letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior containing a reference to the report of Mr. McLaughlin is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 9, 1912.

Hon, Charles H. Burke,

House of Representatives.

Sir: The department is in receipt of your letter dated February 27, stating it has been asserted that there is a great duplication of work in connection with the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and the union agent, and requesting to be informed whether there has been any investigation by this department to ascertain whether or not there is any duplication of work and, if so, that a copy or extract of any report may be furnished your office touching this question.

Replying thereto, you are advised that it appears from the records of the department that Inspector James McLaughlin, in compliance with instructions, submitted a report under date of June 4, 1010, wherein he stated that he had spent three weeks inspecting and investigating affairs in Oklahoma in connection with the offices of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and the superintendent, union agency, and reported that he found said offices well organized and the number of clerks employed appeared necessary and rendered satisfactory service. In connection therewith he further stated:

"I have inspected the different branches or divisions of both offices above mentioned and find that the work of the commissioner is confined to undivided property of these tribes up to and including allotratent, while the Union Agency has supervision of the affairs of the individual Indian after allotment.

"I find no duplication of work in these offices, except that communications between the superintendent of Union Agency and the Indian Office pass through the office of the commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes for his indorsement; but no additional records are kept other than the mere noting, for reference, of the dates of such communications passing through the commissioner's office. The utmost harmony appears to exist between the two offices, and considering the peculiar complicated conditions of afairs here and the many conflicting interests involved, together with the fact that there are abou

Samuel Adams, Acting Secretary.

The gentleman from Oklahoma stated on Saturday-and I think has repeated the statement to-day—that during the fiscal year 1911 there was expended in connection with the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes direct $1,308,000, or thereabouts, and he gives the impression that this large amount was expended largely for expenses. I was somewhat supprised by world well. largely for expenses. I was somewhat surprised he would make the statement as to the amount, as he was aware that the Com-missioner of Indian Affairs had corrected the statement, reducing it to $1,177,000, and I do not think the gentleman is fair in wanting to convey the impression that for whatever purpose the money was used it is greater than $1,177,000. At the time I called his attention to a corrected statement furnished by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and read to him or allowed him to read the letter transmitting the statement, and for the information of the House I will read the letter, which is as follows.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, Washington, February 14, 1912.

Hon. Charles H. Burke, House of Representatives. SIR:

Regarding the statement of expenditures for the Five Civilized Tribes during the fiscal year 1911, furnished you informally January 25, 1912, it is found on further investigation that the sum of $130,847.60 under the heading "Per capita payments" should be eliminated from that statement, as that amount was part of the sum paid in the equalization of allotments and is included in said statement under the heading "Support and civilization." A corrected analysis of expenditures for the fiscal year 1911 is transmitted herewith, as requested by you informally this morning, for the information of the committee.

Respectfully,

C. F. Hauge.

1"Equalizing allotments, Chickasaw Freedmen, Five Civilized Tribes," 1911 appropriation act.

The gentleman endeavored to impress upon the House that with the exception of about $200,000 the $1,308,000, as stated by him, was all expended for administration and that not a dollar of benefit went to the Indians except about $400,000 collected for the tribe. Now, if I am not quoting him correctly as to his statement-

Mr. FERRIS. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but I will say that I stated this: That out of the $1,308,000, as furnished us in the subcommittee, later amended by the figures that you secured, amounting to $1,177,000, only about $200,000 ever reached the Indians' pocketbooks if the gentleman is correct, and only $130,000 if my figures are correct.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And you make that statement now?

Mr. FERRIS. I make that statement now.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Analyze this statement and see how much there is in the gentleman's contention. I wish to say that I have here a statement that was within a few days officially transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and it is a full and complete statement of all expenditures and disbursements made on account of the Five Civilized Tribes, covering four fiscal I will give to the House the benefit of these figures, not only for the fiscal year 1911, but for four years beginning with 1908. The statement follows:

By referring to the disbursements for the year 1911, I want to call attention to the fact that only a little over $400,000 of moneys appropriated by Congress and tribal moneys were expended for administration purposes; $217,030.60 was paid in equalizing allotments and went directly to the Indians. The statement also shows that there was a per capita payment to the Indians of $12,543.26, and that there was paid out for education $371,509.79. You will notice that the proviso does not propose to discontinue the expenditure of money for education. In other words, no exception is taken to the expenditure of $371,509.79. Of the amount expended from appropriations by Congress, $29,824.28 was expended in appraising the timber lands belonging to the Indians, and was from an appropriation of $30,000 carried in the deficiency bill for 1911, and came from the Appropriation Committee, the Indian Committee having nothing to do with it. It is not an annual charge. The timber land belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations comprise $1,279,000 acres and was appraised at $3,500,000, adding over $1,000,000 to former appraisement. The whole amount of tribal funds expended by the commissioner and the union agent during 1911, as shown by the statement, is $55.803.15, which was expended in collecting approximately $480,000, thereby adding that amount to the tribal revenues; $111,000 of the amount so col-lected was rent of unallotted lands and rents collected for the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands, and the amount would not have been collected if it had not been for this expenditure. The expenditure was also used in the investigation of various claims, and covered the cost of advertising the sale of 949,180 acres of land which sold for the aggregate amount of $6,250,831.68, part of the expenditure being to pay the expenses of a representative of the tribe who was present and representing the Indians at each sale. The expenditure of the $55,803.15 was specifically authorized by Congress. The $17,985.40 expended, as shown by the statement, was not spent from either congressional appropriation or tribal funds, but was realized from fees charged for certified copies of records, and expended from such proceeds for the purpose of preparing such records and certified copies, and is authorized by the law to be so expended. In other words, not one dollar was expended without authority of law, and every expenditure had to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior and audited through the Treasury. The moneys expended for salaries and expenses of tribal officers can not be charged, and should not be, to the expense of administration, and it can not be claimed that the Government does more than to supervise such expenditures.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a short question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I wanted to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that no tribal funds can be paid out except upon approval by the President.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. All tribal acts appropriating money under the law must be approved by the President. The Government supervises the expenditures. In 1906, and if I am not correct in the date the gentleman from Oklahoma will correct me, Congress provided, and I think in accordance with an agreement made with the tribes, that expenditures thereafter should only be made upon acts submitted to the President of the United States for his approval and that the Government should supervise the payment and that all tribal warrants would have to be submitted to the commissioner and the department for approval. The statement has been made that there was no great amount of expense connected with the Five Tribes when they were under their own government. My recollection, Mr. Chairman, is that there was such a condition of grafting and extravagance that it became necessary to put some restriction upon it and that after the Government took charge of the fiscal affairs of the tribes it was found that there were outstanding tribal warrants amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollarsthing like $800,009—issued by the Cherokee Nation alone. When the Gore committee was in Oklahoma, in August, 1910, we dis-covered that there had been a duplication of warrants issued by some of the natious aggregating a very large amount and that it was almost impossible to determine how much had been issued in warrants that were fraudulent and without any considera-tion. In other words, until the Federal Government stepped in and exercised control of their fiscal affairs the conditions were intolerable.

The statement that I have submitted and to which I have referred shows that there was expended during 1911 for salaries and expenses of the tribal officers $40,279.18. This was to pay the salaries and expenses of a governor, or principal chief, in each of the five tribes; a secretary to the governor; two coal commissioners in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, which represent the tribes to see that royalties are collected; and of the other different tribal officers who are employed in connection with the tribal government, and is not an expenditure of the United States at all. It was guaranteed by the Government, as the gentleman will admit, that these tribal governments should be continued until the tribal properties were disposed of and the proceeds distributed, and tribal governments could not be maintained without having certain officials and incurring some expense, and, considering the number of persons comprising the Five Civilized Tribes and the great value of their estate, I do not consider the amount expended as excessive. I understand one of the duties of the governors is to execute deeds for lands that are disposed of.

The statement will show that there was paid out to attorneys during the fiscal year of tribal moneys $54,130.82. This amount was paid to attorneys under contract and included salaries and expenses. When the so-called Gore committee was in Oklahoma investigating Indian contracts it carefully inquired into each contract made with the several tribes, and I want to quote briefly what the report says regarding these contracts:

The tribes mentioned in the contracts referred to have large and valuable property, and there are many questions constantly arising relative to their affairs which require the services of attorneys, and in the opinion of the committee, notwithstanding the obligation of the Government to administer their affairs and finally dispose of their estates, they should be permitted to have the aid of counsel of their contradaction. estates, they own selection.

The committee found that the contracts under which there was expended for salaries and expenses $54,130 were all reputable attorneys, and that the services were necessary and were being performed, with the exception of one contract, and after the report of the committee was made public that contract was discontinued, reducing the annual expense about $13,000. committee concluded its report with a statement that these contracts, except one, were proper and necessary for the protection of the property and the rights of those comprising the Five Tribes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly,

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman says that within the last year an expenditure of $54,000 was made to attorneys? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes, sir.

Mr. MURDOCK. Did Congress pass upon that $54,000? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Congress only passed upon it in this way. I have not the time to quote the law, but it provided that contracts might be made subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior or the President. As a result of our investigation of Indian contracts we incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill, approved March 3, 1911, the following provision:

That tribal confracts which are necessary to the administration of the affairs of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians may be made by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That contracts for professional legal services of attorneys may be made by the tribes for a stipulated amount and period, in no case exceeding one year in duration and $5,000 per annum in amount, with reasonable and necessary expenses to be approved and paid under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, but such contracts for legal services shall not be of any validity until approved by the President.

Of course, since that law was enacted no contract could be made at an annual compensation greater than $5,000, with reasonable and necessary expenses, and I believe there are now contracts with each of the five tribes, all with reputable law-It is absolutely necessary that they have attorneys, as they have much litigation. The attorney for the Cherokee Nation has appeared for his tribe in a number of cases in the Supreme Court of the United States, and attorneys for other nations have also appeared in that court representing their respective nations. This is not an expenditure that is a charge upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MURDOCK. That comes out of the tribal funds and is approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; that comes out of the tribal fund and is approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the President of the United States.

Mr. MURDOCK. There is no specific appropriation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; there is no specific appropriation.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman stated that there was one contract that the committee thought provided for an exorbitant fee for salary. What contract was that?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman can refer to the report of the Gore investigating committee, and he will find what contract is referred to. It is a fact that there was one of these contracts

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That contract has been discontinued.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That contract has been discontinued.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. And that contract was for $12,000 a year.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes. It also provided for expenses.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. And the committee regarded it as exorbitant and recommended that it be discontinued, and it has been discontinued.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes. Now, my time is running and I must conclude what I have to say. My contention is that these Indians are entitled to have attorneys; that there are people in Oklahoma—and I do not mean all of the people are that way-who would like to take away from these Indians every vestige of protection that they have and leave them to every vestige of protection that they have and leave them to their tender mercies, and this, in my opinion, is responsible for the proviso which proposes to discontinue expenditures, but I do not mean by this to imply that the gentlemen from Oklahoma are intentionally actuated by any such motive or purpose, and the same is true with reference to the elimination of the appropriation that has heretofore been carried to provide for employment of certain district agents, and a part of my amendment is to restore that item and provide an appropriation for the district agents.

Before I discuss that part of the amendment I want to say a word about what was accomplished during 1911 by the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and the Union agent and how much benefit was derived from the money expended. My friend from Oklahoma, Mr. Ferris, has stated that only about $400,000 went to the Indians. At this point I want to say that the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes is the agent of the Government who is discharging the trust of settling the affairs of the several nations and that his office deals only with the tribes and has nothing to do with individual Indians other than to inspect and generally supervise the work of the Union Agency and see that instructions of the department are carried out. The Union agent supervises the affairs of the individual Indians and the district agents work under him. During the fiscal year 1911 there was collected for the tribes from all sources $480,830.74, which went into the Treasury to their credit. There was received from tribal sales of unallotted lands sold during the year $1,572,966.22 in cash.

Since November, 1910, there has been sold 16,425 tracts of land aggregating 949,180 acres, sold for $6,250,831.68, of which there was paid in cash one-fourth. These lands sold at an average price of $6.58 per acre. They were sold at auction, terms one-fourth cash, one-fourth payable in one year, and the balance in two years, with 6 per cent interest. At the solicitation of Oklahoma Members of Congress the department has authorized extensions of payments as investigation warrants and this has required a large amount of correspondence and detail, as can be imagined.

There are yet remaining to be sold 11,115 tracts, aggregating 817,228 acres, and also 1,279,000 acres of timberlands, which timberlands have been appraised at $3,500,000. The unallotted lands are intermingled with allotted lands, scattered throughout the territory comprising the Five Tribes, and the work of separating same, tabulating descriptions, preparing maps showing the location of each tract, printing lists with descriptions for each sale, replying to letters of inquiry, furnishing desired information, selling lands at aucton, recording sales, issuing receipts to purchasers for 25 per cent paid at the time of sale, and thereafter opening ledger accounts for each tract and purchaser, receiving remittances as due, together with computing interest thereon, issuing certificates of purchase after approval of each sale, and finally preparing deeds to purchasers, having same approved by the proper tribal officers and the department, and recording and delivering same is all of an exacting character, and must also be finally noted on all of the various township allotment plats and checked to insure accuracy and prevent confusion thereafter in land titles.

The Union agent has supervision of the affairs of the restricted individual Indians, and they number about 35,000. To give some idea of the amount of business transacted by his office, I will say that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, the agency received $2,698,376 and disbursed $2,273,546. It received 73,433 letters and 49,904 vouchers, circulars, and so forth. It mailed out 151,936 letters and about 47,940 vouchers. There were 1,378 individual Indian leases filed-1,110 oil and gas and 268 agricultural and miscellaneous—during the year, against 1,661 the previous year. There were on June 30, 1911, 8,596 individual Indian accounts on the books of the agency, of which there are at present deposited in 52 national banks 3,637 accounts, aggregating $1,170,259.72. The amount of rent and royalty on oil and gas during the year paid to Union agent for individual Indians and handled through the agency amounted to $1,365,826.52. There were 1,162 separate matters requiring field investigation in connection with oil and gas leases. It is estimated the number of oil wells drilled in the lands of the individual Indians of the Five Tribes during the year aggregated 3,640, and the oil marketed aggregated 41,053,000 barrels, of which about 19,000,000 barrels was from lands of Indians under departmental leases, the royalty on which aggregated about $833,000. The price of oil June 30, 1911, was 48 cents, which has since advanced to 60 cents at the present time. There were 1,393 applications for removal of restrictions on alienation of restricted Indian allotments during the year.

Since May 27, 1908, restrictions have been removed from such class to the extent of 131,937 acres conditionally, the money realized therefrom being handled and disbursed to Indians for improvements under supervision of the agency from time to time; and restrictions from 93,573 acres were unconditionally removed, whereby Indians were permitted to dispose of same without supervision, making a total of 225,510 acres of land allotted to restricted Indians, allenated since May 27, 1908, the date of the restrictions act. Three hundred and sixty-eight petitions for approval of deeds executed by full-blood heirs of deceased allottees who had died prior to May 27 were made during the year, and there was collected as additional consideration to amount approved by probate courts, $66,284.52, making a total of 718 such deeds approved by the department since May 27, 1908, and a total additional amount realized of $94,938.28. In addition thereto 871 tracts of land sold belonging to individual Indians, aggregating 67,790.47 acres, consideration $674,730.71. Land sold for $74,498.79 above the appraised price. During the last four months of the fiscal year 88 houses and 22 barns were built for Indians.

I wish to call particular attention to the large amount of business done by the union agent, and that it involves oil and gas leases and the supervision of the expenditure of a large amount of money belonging to these incompetent Indians, which may suggest that possibly there is some motive in trying to withdraw the protecting hand of the Government from supervising their affairs other than their best interests. 16 district agents who work under the union agent, and each have under their supervision about 6,000 citizens, over 2,000 being within the restricted class.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have very little time.

The gentleman is aware that we appropriate $150,000 for that agency, and that that will employ 60 people at $2,500 a year.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller] has shown to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] that under the law which was passed in 1911 the proceeds from the sale of these tribal unallotted lands may be deposited in the banks of Oklahoma, and that there is to-day deposited in 94 banks $2,500,000, which is drawing from 4 to 6 per cent interest. There is also on deposit something like $1,500,000 belonging to individual Indians in 52 banks, supervised by the union agency and to some extent under the supervision of these district agents.

Now, does the gentleman think they can continue that sort of business and take away these representatives of the Government and leave it to you people in Oklahoma to see that the Indian funds are not dissipated? You might as well take the bars from the Treasury of the United States and withdraw the guards, open the vaults, and say to the people of Washington "Look out for the funds of the United States that are on deposit in the Treasury."

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will allow me to answer the question which he has asked, the district agent has no more to do with the bank deposits than a prairie dog has to do with the solar system. The district agents do not even come within gunshot of it. That is not a part of their duties at all, and never was

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman is mistaken there, as in many other particulars, for the district agents certainly do furnish the union agent with information relative to the banks that may apply for Indian funds and are used from time to time to get information in connection with banks where individual funds are deposited whenever the union agent may desire it.

I find that I have used more time than I intended and I must omit discussing some questions that I had intended to talk about; but I want to summarize what I have stated and will say that as a result of the moneys expended during 1911 there was received for the Indians—the tribes as a whole and individual Indians—the following amounts:

	$480, 830, 74 1, 572, 966, 22 1, 365, 826, 52 674, 730, 71

There has been allotted to the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes 15,945,260.12 acres, at a cost per capita of $27.58 to each of the 101,227 citizens allotted, which is much less than the average cost of making allotments.

The annual tribal income from all sources belonging to the tribes from interest account, rental account, and royalties will now aggregate about $600,000. This has nothing to do with moneys collected and received on account of individual Indians. The gentlemen from Oklahoma object to the United States taking from the moneys received the cost of collection. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I had something to do with the pro-vision referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota that au-thorizes the expense of selling the lands being deducted from the proceeds, and it was my purpose that so long as there was no obligation resting on the United States to perform that service without charge that the cost of the collection and sale should be deducted from the proceeds. I may say that I insisted just as strongly on paying every dollar of the expense of administration when there is an obligation resting upon the United States to do so

Mr. Chairman, I think it will be admitted that the value of the property of the Five Civilized Tribes is not less than $30,000,000. While it has been estimated all the way from $20,000,000 to $4,000,000,000, I do not think any gentleman will question but that $30,000,000 is a conservative and reasonable estimate of the value of this estate. This is a big proposition, but so is the construction of the Panama Canal. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] makes much of the statement that there are 211 employees under one roof. There are more than 211 employees in the Census Office, more than that in the Post Office, more than that in the Treasury Department, more than that in the War Department. The question I want some gentleman to point out to me is, What particular number of that gentleman to point out to me is, What particular number of that number can be discontinued without injury to the service? There is not a suggestion that all of them are not needed, but simply because we have 211 employees it is too many.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My time is very short.

Mr. CARTER. I want to ask the gentleman how he can determine that unless the expenditures are brought before Congress and Congress is given some supervision of the matter?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Before enacting such drastic legislation as you propose, my position is that there ought to be legislation as you propose, my position is that there ought to be an opportunity so that these estimates can be submitted, so that Congress, if it is going to pass upon it, can pass upon it intelligently and not do it arbitrarily and absolutely stop the wheels of administering the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. I had supposed that these gentlemen were anxious to close up the affairs and yet sight on the eye of the time when the belonger of affairs, and yet right on the eve of the time when the balance of the property is to be disposed of and the final distribution made they propose this proposition that will be such a handicap that the final settlement will be deferred for a considerable time, and I want to serve notice upon them that they will be responsible for the delay.

Mr. Chairman, I have talked longer than I ought to have talked, but before concluding I must refer briefly to another subject, and that is in regard to these district agents. These district agents that I propose to reinstate are paid for by the appropriation made by the Government, an appropriation provided for first in 1908, and they have to do with these restricted Indians, about 35,000 in number, the real Indians, that belong to the Five Civilized Tribes. They supervise their affairs. They advise them in relation to the expenditure of their money. gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] made the statement before the subcommittee that he does not propose to have any representative of the Federal Government in his State dictating as to where an Indian shall buy this or buy that.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I said so far as I could prevent it. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I accept the qualification. Mr. Chairman, that condition prevails in every part of the United States where there are Indians. Our white friends in Oklahoma are protesting against the fact that the Federal Government is in some way preventing them from getting what the Indian possesses. That is the proposition. The gentleman said—and I think I asked him the question if he had a ward and the ward wanted to buy a horse and he as his guardian thought he would let him have the horse, or if he wanted to buy a suit of clothes and he thought he ought to have a suit of clothes—that he would give him the money and he would say, "Go and buy where you choose." My position is that these restricted Indians, with these great sums of money, should be guarded, should be protected. Pass the proposition that is pending before this House to-day and it will be followed, my friends, by a chapter of infamy in Indian history that has never yet been approached during the history of this Government, and Congress will be responsible. I want to say that wherever there has been scandal in connection with the administration of Indian affairs, in most instances you will find that the fault primarily lies with the Congress itself. I say let us not make it possible for scandal to happen in Oklahoma in connection with the Five Civilized Tribes. Does any gentleman question any act that has ever been performed by the present administration? Is there any suggestion of mal-fensance? Is there any suggestion of fraud? Is there any sug-gestion that the Indian has not gotten his due? On the con-trary, it is an administration that I think can not be criticized or questioned by any man.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is very much mistaken about that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. . Mr. Chairman, I have not the time to yield.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman is telling the truth it hurts.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The present commissioner of the Five Tribes is a man of the highest character, possessed of great business and executive ability, and has been in charge of the affairs since the Dawes Commission was discontinued; he has been connected with the Indian service in the field and employed in responsible positions for the past 29 years, and since 1898 has represented the Secretary of the Interior in the Five Tribes, and during his whole service not one word or suggestion has ever been uttered against his personal character or against his administration. What I have said of the commissioner I can say of the union agent. He is a most faithful and painstaking official and has also been in the Indian service in different capacities in the field for the past 18 years and in the Five Tribes since 1899, and is devoted to his work and particularly solicitous about the welfare of the restricted and full-blood Indians under his care. I am going to give you something now that will make you think for a moment what is back of this attempt to change conditions in Oklahoma-ostensibly done in the interest of economy, ostensibly to stop extravagance, based upon general charges; but let us see what we find down in Oklahoma. When this item of doing away with the district agents was decided by the subcommittee the friends of our distinguished friends from Oklahoma got busy and sent the news to their State and it got into the papers, and under date of February 24 this dispatch from Washington was published: WASHINGTON, February 25.

Washington, February 23.

When Representative Scott Ferris termed Oklahoma's 16 district Indian agents "political smellers, misfits, without authority, and men who should hunt for another job," he sounded their official death knell, it is believed.

When the Indian appropriation bill goes to Congress from the House Indian Affairs Committee no funds will be provided for the perpetuation of these jobs. Representative Ferris estimates that the elimination of the officials from Uncle Sam's pay roll will help the Treasury Department $100,000 and at the same time greatly please people all over the State, who cordially dislike the activities of these men.

The Indian appropriation bill, on which the members of the subcommittee, including Representative Ferris. have been working for several weeks, has just been completed and it is in the nature of a bombshell for the Indian Office of the Department of Interior and its hangers on who have been holding down soft berths in the service.

Representative Ferris, in urging the discontinuation of the district Indian agents, gave 10 reasons why their offices should be abolished, and his cohorts on the Indian Affairs Committee agreed.

AGENTS NOT NEEDED.

He said: "There no longer exists any necessity for them, since conditions in the new State are thoroughly settled. They have no final or complete jurisdiction or power to do any single act. Our courts are equal in integrity with the courts of any State. The Five Tribe Indians are superior in intelligence to any Indians in the United States, and district agents are not maintained in any other tribe. They merely add one link to the now too long circuit of red tape in the transaction of Indian business. They inflict minute and troublesome supervision over competent Indians who are rendered more dependent than independent as a result thereof.

"District agents were discontinued two years ago on the west side of the State, where the incompetent Indians live. There is no reason for their continuance on the east side.

"Our State resents the reflection on our State of forcing supervision on us that does not prevail in any other State. Oklahoma is no longer an orphan.

on us that does not prevail in any other State. Oklahoma is no longer an orphan.

"These agents are not selected by reason of any knowledge of law or Indians, merely political smelling agents.

"They are misfits without authority or power to do anything, and ought to hunt another job."

CARTER ADDS STINGER.

CARTER ADDS STINGER.

The chief cause of concern to the Indian Office, however, is Representative Carter's accepted amendment, which has the hearty sanction of every member of the Oklahoma delegation, Republicans and Democrats alike, forcing the Indian Office to make specific requests for funds in carrying on its activities each year. This forces publicity as to just what channels the funds of the Indians are directed, something which heretofore has been impossible to get without great difficulty.

This plan also means the abolishment of one of the high-salaried positions of officials for the Five Civilized Tribes. It is declared by friends of economy that the work of J. G. Wright, commisioner of the Five Tribes, and Dana H. Kelsey, superintendent of the Union Agency, overlaps, and that when this is definitely shown one of the positions will be cut off and the work of supervision of the Five Tribes will be placed in fewer hands. A number of lesser employees in the Indian service in Oklahoma also will have to go, it is declared.

It is declared that a great amount of Indian money is spent in unnecessary salaries and positions in the Indian service, and the Republicans are thus able to strengthen their political machine.

Then, I find that that article was reproduced and sent generally throughout the State of Oklahoma in a letter, and I have several of them here, but I am going to read only one of them, because they are all alike. It was a letter sent out in the interest of these dear, poor, suffering Indians upon the station-

And More Commercial Club, and is as follows:

And More Commercial Club,
Ardmore, Okla., February 5, 1912.

Dear Sir: Inclosed find clipping from yesterday's Oklahoman. If you are of the same opinion as our congressional delegation seems to be, write three letters at once—one to Congressmen Charles D. Canter and Scott Ferris, thanking them and telling them the sentiment in this respect in your community, and one to Senator Owen, urging that he sees to it that the action of the House of Representatives be sustained in the Senate. Speak to others and have them to do likewise. No time should be lost.

Yours, truly,

Mr. Chairman, it.

Mr. Chairman, it will be recalled that we had before us not very long ago a bill for the sale of the segregated lands, which bill provided for the sale of the surface. When that bill was brought into the House it contained a provision that the McAlester Country Club have the privilege of purchasing the land that it occupied at the appraised valuation-about 160 acres. These guardians of the people, the gentlemen from Oklahoma, overlooked the fact that nearly $100,000 in rentals were being received annually from people who were occupying the segregated lands, many of them with valuable improvements, and yet there was no suggestion that they have the privilege of buying the land upon which they had lived for many years by paying the appraised price. However, in the case of the McAlester Country Club they were more solicitous. Evidently they are influenced and concerned more by following the suggestions of commercial and country clubs than they are in looking after the interests of the Indians and the common people of Oklahoma.

I want to quote, now, two or three newspaper articles-and I have them here in large numbers-from the papers of both parties, published in Oklahoma. Speaking of the proposed discontinuance of the district agent, the Vinita Weekly Journal, of Vinita, Okla., March 1, 1912—I do not know its politics—

DISTRICT INDIAN AGENTS.

According to press reports sent out from Washington, there seems to be a disposition on the part of Congress to discontinue the district agents of the Five Civilized Tribes. Should this be done, the field will then be open and very inviting for the grafter and those who prey upon the defenseless Indian. They would soon be without allotments, and every vestige of support would be wrested from them.

The full bloods, who have depended upon the protection of the Government and are now well along in years, would become objects of charity, and their last days would be robbed of that quiet, peaceful ending in life, and their children would grow up to be blind and dependent upon, in many instances, a guardian who has assumed to care for them from a charitable standpoint, when back of it all it is for their own benefit.

While the present probate judges of the various counties are doing all in their power to protect these minors, we learn from the judges that the assistance along this line that the district agent and his help gives can not be overestimated.

The district agent and the county judge have acted in absolute harmony, and the best of feeling prevails, and to discontinue this work means for the Government at this time to withdraw its support from those whose unbounded duty it should be to protect. And were Congress as familiar with conditions as the writer of this article, instead of withholding this appropriation they would increase it, that the district agent might more successfully prosecute his work and defend the defenseless and the full blood who so fully confide in the work and protection that the district agent affords them.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there? I want to say to him that the Vinita Weekly Journal is a Republican paper.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman wants it from Democratic papers, I can accommodate him. I refer him to the Vinita Chieftain of February 27, 1912, which I understand is a Democratic paper, and it says:

understand is a Democratic paper, and it says:

The proposition to discontinue the local Indian agencies in eastern Oklahoma is, in the opinion of the Chieftain, premature and ill advised. This view may be at variance with the sentiment of those who are anxious to terminate the rule of the Interior Department over the Indians of Oklahoma, but a close study of the situation and a familiar knowledge of the condition of the full-blood Indians of eastern Oklahoma leads us to believe these agencies should remain for the present. Our full-blood Indians are the most helpless class of citizens in Oklahoma, and the most prone to waste their substance and neglect their opportunities. Maj. Cusey, the local agent at Vinita, is doing a good work among the full-blood Indians of this section. They trust him and their confidence is not misplaced. His advice and supervision is saving them money and putting many of them on the road to self-support. These people are not able to take their place in the rough-and-tumble struggle of the business and industrial world just yet, and would be an easy prey to the grafters and land sharks.

I will also quote from the McAlester News-Capital of Febru-

I will also quote from the McAlester News-Capital of February 28. I presume the gentleman will say it is a Republican paper, although I can hardly see what difference it makes as to the politics of a newspaper in discussing a question of this kind:

[From the McAlester (Okla.) News-Capital.] The News-Capital has been investigating as to who are chiefly inter ested in the abolition of the district Indian agent system, and it hasn't found a grafter yet who was not whooping it for abolition, although many other people have been misled into joining them. If some of the Indian agents have been recreant, those abuses should be corrected; but we insist that the probate machinery of the State courts is not able to handle the amount of minor Indian land now in eastern Oklohome.

The following from the Nowata Daily Advertiser of February 26:

[From the Nowata (Okla.) Daily Advertiser, Monday, Feb. 26, 1912.]

The existence of the Indian agency is purely a business proposition with the Government. It was needed when it was created, and is needed now more than it was needed when created. For now, the whites, aggressive and awake to every opportunity and ready to take every advantage presented them, have full knowledge of the Indian's childlike qualities when it comes to considering the value of a dollar, and it would be but a few months until every Indian would be shorn of his properties.

The Indian agency is of the ounce-of-prevention sort, and were they wiped out of existence, regardless of harping to the contrary, the pound of cure resulting would cost the people a pretty penny.

I have a number of other clippings from newspapers in Oklahoma, both Democratic and Republican. I also have a statement from William H. Murray, a prominent Democratic citizen of Oklahoma, president of the constitutional convention. It seems that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] sent him a telegram, as he did to many others, with reference to discontinuing the district agents, and Mr. Murray answered him as follows

Abolition of district agents would be a fatal mistake so long as department supervises sale of Indian lands. District agents, who can get information first hand, should be continued. They protect both Indian and white purchasers. Moreover, transfers are made quicker and more certain than if directly made through Washington office, which naturally thinks us all grafters. District agents can discern the honest purchaser. Robbing of either Indian or white man is wrong.

I have letters from 40 probate or county judges in Oklahoma, from all of the tribal officers, a number of district judges, a number of district attorneys, and many other State officials, and from the very best people in Oklahoma, all protesting against what they believe to be a mistake, namely, to take from these Indians the protection afforded them by the district agents.

I have been compelled in a hurried way to go over this matter in a somewhat disconnected manner, and I know I have not made myself as clear as I would like to have done, but in the limited time at my disposal it has been impossible. As I have said, these people, if they are to be left a prey to these people whom the gentleman from Minnesota referred to as rapacious, Heaven knows it will not be long until they are without anything. The Supreme Court, in a recent decision, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Hughes, decided that the courts had jurisdiction where the United States had brought 30,000 suits against persons who had acquired lands from Indians fraudulently. In a test suit when a demurrer had been interposed on the ground that the United States did not have authority to bring the suit, in the opinion the court, speaking of one of the Five Civilized Tribes, said:

If these Indians may be divested of their land, they will be thrown back upon the United States, and upon the United States a pauperized, discontented, and possibly belligerent people.

I appeal, Mr. Chairman, to this House that this proposition has had absolutely no consideration, so far as the committee is concerned. There were no hearings except that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who knew nothing whatever about it, appeared before the subcommittee, and I say that before we take this drastic and radical step to stop the wheels of administration of the affairs of the Five Tribes and take away from the helpless and restricted Indians the protection afforded through the district agents, we ought to hesitate and at least wait until the next session of Congress. I thank the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kausas [Mr. Jackson] five minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, how much time have I consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty-five minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How much time have I left? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 27 minutes remaining. Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I hardly know what I can say in five minutes to interest the committee upon so large a question. I find myself a little bit in a mixed situation. If there is any one thing more than another in the House that I have noticed since I have been here, it is the fact that the committees of the House, in my judgment, are inclined to tyrannize over the rest of the House. My brief experience in legislative bodies has been to the effect that this is not a good thing; and so I find myself here to-day confronted with the proposition as to whether I shall agree with the committee, a majority of which belongs to the opposite political party, or whether I shall go with the minority, of my own party; whether I shall be a regular by staying by the minority of the committee or be more regular by staying with the majority of the committee. And I want to say that it is with considerable hesitation that I have come to the conclusion that it is my duty in this matter to stand with the majority of the committee and seemingly to oppose the opinion of the minority of the committee. I have great regard for the minority members of the committee. Especially do I want to say that I have a high regard for our leader, the ranking member on that committee. I think that I violate no confidence and am guilty of no reflection upon the other members of the committee, the distinguished chairman, or the other distinguished gentleman, at present the Vice President of the United States, who was for many years the chairman of this committee, when I say that in my judgment there is no other man in the United States who possesses more knowledge of the needs and necessities of these Indian people of the United States or is more faithful to their interests, who has better judgment, as a rule, in acting for their interests, than the leader of the minority side of our committee, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke]. And so I say I hesitate very much to disagree with him upon this question, but it does seem to me that, taking it from all sides, all the facts that have been produced in the committee, and even the judgment of the gentleman from South Dakota himself, that these two measures, the abolition of the drawing and the using of tribal funds without an appropriation by Congress, and the other one the abolition of these district agents, ought to be carried through at this session of Congress. Now, I have spoken of the gentleman from South Dakota and his opinion. I have the same high regard for the present Secretary of the Interior and of the Commissioner of the Indian Office; but I do not feel upon this measure of the abolition of the expenditures of the tribal funds that we are really acting in opposition to the judgment of those gentlemen.

It is the general opinion of all persons who have anything to do with the management of affairs in Oklahoma that there must be a change of the official organization there and a cutting down of expenditures.

Mr. Valentine, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, discussed the general situation at length at the hearings before the committee. Among other things, he said (p. 293):

Commissioner Valentine. The present system is this: This district agent reports to the Union Agency; the Union agent approves it for the Five Civilized Tribes; then it comes to our office. Another sort of an approval takes place there; then it goes to the office of the Secretary of the Interior for action.

The Chairman. Then, in your view, there is no way to prevent duplication of this work? It goes from the district agent to the Union Agency, from there to your department, and from your department to the Secretary of the Interior.

Commissioner Valentine. I think some of that machinery could be cut out.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, which would you cut out?

Commissioner Valentine, I think you could cut out all of it and confine it to the Union Agency.

The CHAIRMAN, I think so, too.

The gentleman from Oklahoma, BIED S. McGuire, who is also an authority on matters connected with Oklahoma Indian affairs and who is now apparently against these provisions of this bill, in the hearings said (p. 320):

I would cut out the Dawes Commission. I would have one head of that institution, the Five Tribes. It had always been so until the creation of the Dawes Commission, which was created for a special purpose, and that purpose has long since gone by. I would now concentrate all under one head, one agency, making it either a superintendency or an agency. I would put in charge there some good, strong executive man. You can get them for just what you are paying Mr. Wright or Mr. Ryan. You can get good men, good executive, men, who will take that position and run things in a businesslike way for just what either one of them is getting. In the next appropriation bill I would reduce the expenses to at least $150,000.

The committee has not gone as far as Mr. McGuire advised. It has cut the appropriation to $150,000. It has not abolished Mr. Wright's office—and he is the successor of the Dawes Commission—but has allowed about $39,000 for his use.

If the provision preventing the use of tribal funds is adopted, he will be prevented from increasing that sum by $36,580, the amount proposed to be used, based on last year's estimate, from the tribal funds unless Congress shall specifically authorize it,

I can imagine no cruder or more reprehensible manner of administering public funds than that of allowing public officials to collect and disburse the public money without appropriation by legislative action. Think of allowing a guardian to so administer the funds of his ward. It has led to extravagant administration in this matter, and it will always do so.

The Indian funds are public funds. Otherwise what right has the Government to administer them? The makers of the Constitution understood this principle of honest government administration when they wrote into the Constitution:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

Shall the public funds of our white citizens be administered under the Constitution and the funds of our Indian citizens administered outside of its provisions?

Here are some statements of the commissioner from the hearings on this question (pp. 306 and 314):

ings on this question (pp. 306 and 314):

Mr. Carter. Thirty-six thousand, then. At that you are spending a very large per capita for that number and, in addition, you use a large amount from the tribal fonds?

Commissioner Valentine. Yes; and I think that amount should be materially reduced; I would chop it out completely.

Mr. Carter. Eliminating the consideration of the schools, do you not realize that since Congress is responsible for the administration of this money, Congress and this committee should have something to say about how it is to be spent?

Commissioner Valentine. Absolutely; that is why I ask you to let it go one year more, with a provision requiring the strictest kind of accounting for every cent of this money.

Mr. Ferris. Suppose that amendment was so modified by a proviso that it should not apply to schools; what would you then say to it?

Commissioner Valentine. I would want to refresh my mind as to the other items which are separate.

Mr. Ferris. I thought you were just about to say that if the schools can be taken care of it would remove your objections.

Commissioner Valentine. I think it would, largely, but I want to be fair to the other items.

Mr. Ferris. Surely, the other would not be in danger.

Commissioner Valentine. I do not recall what that money is used for. I will look it over and be glad to give you anything on that point.

On the other question, that of the district agents, it appears

On the other question, that of the district agents, it appears that the work done by these agents can be as well attended to by others in the Indian service and at less expense to the Government, and less delay and annoyance to the Indians. As it has been in the past the work of these agents is a duplication of the work of other officers. The restricted Indian and his estate is officered to the point where patience as well as supervision ceases to be a virtue.

It seems to be conceded that the annual expense of the administration of the Five Tribes is about $850,000. The entire annual income of their property does not exceed $1,500,000.

It is urged that the district agents are necessary to attend to probate matters. Whatever may have been the condition in the past, it is evident from the report of the Indian officers themselves that in the future the interests of minor and dependent Indian heirs must depend on the courts of Oklahoma and the laws of that State. The Government, after it intrusts the State to look after these matters can not continue to give the State government the same minute supervision it has given to the tribal government of the Indians.

I read into the record abstracts from the report of officials of the Indian Office, showing the condition in Oklahoma is satisfactory to the Indians' interests. Commissioner J. George Wright, in his report of June 30, 1911, says, on page 42:

Owing to the large number of restricted Indians and the extent of territory, together with the fact that the probate conditions were not satisfactory, a separate district agency was created of McCurtain County, and every effort made to relieve the situation. The State commission of charities and corrections likewise had employees upon this work and with the perfect accord in which the two offices worked made the result inevitable, namely, a revolution in probate matters. The county judge resigned and his successor was immediately appointed.

On page 49 of the same report Supt. Dana H. Kelsey, in referring to the improved conditions, says:

referring to the improved conditions, says:

This has been made possible by the fact that the county courts with few exceptions have heartily cooperated with the district agents in their efforts to protect the Indian minor. In fairness to the courts, it should be stated that the volume of probate business of this character pending in each court is so great that it is a physical impossibility for them to give it the attention it should have. Considering these conditions, great credit is due the county judges for the manner in which they have handled this business. While it is true that in some counties there has been a disposition to take advantage of the crowded condition of the docket, yet, viewed as a whole, the condition of the probate business in eastern Oklahoma is much improved.

While it has not been possible to do with the limited force and the large volume of work required of the district agents as much as desired during the past year, plans are under way, with the detail of a number of special probate assistants in the different counties, to make a systematic checking and investigation of all Indian probate cases in those counties, and as rapidly as possible extend the work. With the hearty cooperation and the excellent efforts of the county judges in a number of counties where the special probate checking is now under way and the assistance of the tribal attorneys a much greater amount of probate work and the incident good results that follow will be done during the coming year.

And, again on page 78, Mr. Kelsey says:

And, again on page 78, Mr. Kelsey says:

In this connection it should again be mentioned that, in addition to the assistance of nearly all of the county judges, with whom the district agents are most closely in contact, the cooperation of many other county and State officials is a matter which deserves especial mention, as results have been accomplished in many cases by reason thereof which would not otherwise have been possible. Invaluable assistance has been rendered in the matter of the estates of minor Indians by Miss Kate Barnard, commissioner of charities and corrections of the State of Oklahoma, and her general attorney, Dr. J. H. Stolper.

I shall therefore support the recommendations of the com-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from South Dakota go ahead?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have used 45 minutes, and I think the gentleman ought to consume more than 5 minutes. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] five minutes.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose at this time to speak of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma and to review their history to some extent, beginning with their early life and their relation to the Government of the United States.

The tribes now known as the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians are the Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks (or Muskogee), and Seminoles, located in the eastern part of the State of Oklahoma, which was formerly known as the Indian Territory. The term "civilized" has been applied to these five tribes for almost a century, and when the word "civilized" is applied to Indian tribes it always relates to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians which I have just mentioned. been applied to an Indian reservation, and never will be.

We are dealing to-day with a civilized people and not a savage race. We shall see before I conclude the true meaning of the word "civilized."

I first want to speak of the Indian as being the first human settler found upon the North American Continent. He is the pioneer settler of this country, and when the white man, in his great desire to explore new fields and discover new continents, landed on the shores of the North American Continent, afterwards to become this splendid land of ours, it was the Indian whom he first met. At that time not in a civilized state, but the Indian in his primitive and savage state. The explorers were received by the Indian in a friendly way and assisted them in landing and welcomed them. It was the North American Indian who was then occupying the wilderness, soon to become the greatest country in the world, which afterwards became the home of the most powerful nation on earth, and has been peopled by the most hospitable, energetic, and homogeneous nation ever known to mankind.

Soon after the landing on the North American Continent by the pioneer Pilgrims they began to try to teach the Indian the white man's language and customs and to ingratiate themselves into the confidence of the red man, in whose midst they had settled. Shortly thereafter another band of emigrants came to the New World, and after forming settlement it soon had settled. became apparent to the Indian that his neighbor was seeking to encroach upon his untrammeled and unlimited hunting grounds. This bold encroachment of the unknown white man upon the Indian was more than the Indian would bear, and soon trouble arose, and, as is always the case of the strong against the weak, after many hard-fought battles and untold and unbearable hardships the Indian was forced to abandon his location and seek new hunting grounds in the wilderness farther back from the shores, thereby leaving the home of his original settlement and the home dear to his savage breast and go to unknown and unsettled lands and again establish his cabin and home, where he could again live in peace and pursue his native sports unmolested by the white man.

We find that this condition did not remain long, for hardly had the Indian settled in his new location when new emigrants from the Old World would land and push forward into the interior of the country, and would soon be encroaching upon the settlements of the Indian, and again trouble arose. The Indian objected to the white settlers coming into his settlements, which would bring about nothing but disputes and trouble between the two races, but, as before, the white settler being the dominant race, would force the Indian farther back into the interior and would by force and acquisition assume ownership of the lands which had been occupied by the Indian. Again the Indian was driven from his settlement by the white race and pushed farther back into the interior, and where he had to build new settlements, undergoing hardships and sufferings incident to the pioneer life and the establishment of new homes.

Thus you will find that the North American Continent was settled by the pioneer, and the Indian was driven from place to place, always protesting against the invasion of his white brother and demanding his rights as a native; but the Great White Father had not yet thrown his protecting wings over poor Lo, the weak and defenseless Indian, nor had it been discovered by the early settlers the great importance of a Government that was to be established becoming the guardian of the Indian. I ask why? Was it because no definite property rights had been established that needed the guardianship of those of to-day who are or would be protectors of the Indian ward as long as his money and property last, or was it because no occa-sion had yet arisen to justify the act? Be that as it may, the Indian did not receive any protection from the colonist settlers nor did the Government then established try to give aid or exercise guardianship over the Indian or his property. However, time went on until the colonist became involved in a controversy, which afterwards grew into a conflict with the mother country, growing out of the passage of a stamp act and a tea party held by the colonists, which is commonly known in American history as the Boston tea party, the result of which was a war between the colonies and the mother country.

After war was declared and during the war for the first time do we find the colonies recognizing the property rights of the Indians and soliciting their aid in the war, and we find on September 17, 1778, the United States of North America entering into a confederation or treaty with the Delaware Tribe of Indians, and your attention is invited to the first article of that treaty, which is as follows:

That all offenses or acts of hostilities by one or either of the contracting parties against the other be mutually forgiven and buried into the depths of oblivion, never more to be had in remembrance.

From this article we find the United States of North America willing, if the Indian was willing, to bury all past differences and to assume not only a friendly relation to the Delaware Tribe of Indians but to recognize them as a power or government sufficiently strong to treat with as an independent power. In the making of treaties with independent powers by a government it is perhaps always well that we look at the motive prompting that action, and when we examine further into the treaty mentioned we find that in the third article the motive prompting this agreement, upon the part of the United States of North America, was to secure the aid of the Delaware Indians in helping them fight the War of the Revolution, and to secure passage over the Delaware Indians' lands to certain forts which the King of England and certain adherents had on the Lakes. Certainly a laudable undertaking by the United States, and one that should honestly and sincerely be carried out. It was a question of self-preservation and triumph of independence and liberty to the United States.

The Delaware Indians, as history shows us, entered into this agreement, and to the best of their ability carried out the provisions, by not only giving to the United States passage over their territory to the forts of the King of England which were located on the Lakes, but many brave and gallant warriors assisted in fighting that war, which gave to the United States liberty and independence.

We also find further in that treaty, as we find in many subsequent treaties, that the Delaware Indians should have the right to form a State and have representation in Congress, providing that the provision with reference to having the Delegate in Congress met with the approval of Congress. This provision was never carried out, as it seems that it never met with the approval of Congress.

A further investigation shows that the United States of America recognized a treaty-making power with the Cherokee Tribe of Indians, who are one of the members of the Five Civilized Tribes with which we are dealing; and on November 28, 1785, the United States entered into an agreement with the Cherokees, which agreement settled the boundary of the territory that was owned by the Cherokee Tribe, and the Cherokees agreed to restore to the United States all prisoners that had been taken by them, and the United States agreed to restore all prisoners of the Cherokee Tribe taken by them. Article 3 of that treaty bound the Cherokees to acknowledge protection of the United States, and article 5 specifically provided that no citizen of the United States should settle on the Indians' lands owned by the Cherokees and which was described within the boundaries of the territory belonging to the said Indians. This is the first treaty that we find where the Government of the United States recognizes the Cherokees, which is one of the members of the Flye Civilized Tribes of Indians, as having treaty-making power.

On January 3, 1786, we also find that the United States entered into a treaty with the Choctaw Tribe of Indians, which is also one of the Five Civilized Tribes with which we are dealing, and also in the same year we find them treating with the Chickasaws. In 1790 we find them treating with the Creeks as an individual tribe having treaty-making power. In all of those treatles you will find that the territory belonging to the Indian tribes is specifically laid out by metes and bounds, so that they had separate and distinct landed territories where no other tribe could encroach upon their lands within the described bounds without the consent of the tribe. Each of the tribes which are now known as the Five Civilized Tribes exercised their own local self-government, and each were separate and distinct in their government.

Treaty after treaty was made with these tribes relating to their governmental affairs and to their property interests in the various parts of the United States, in each of which treaties the rights of the Five Civilized Tribes were recognized not only as to property rights, but as to possessing treaty-making power, and the guaranty of the United States protecting them against foreign powers was extended.

The Five Civilized Tribes under those conditions built up a stable government, establishing an executive, a legislative, and a judicial division of their government. They also established a system of free schools, in order to educate the younger generation, to fit and prepare them for the duties of citizens in their government.

At various times after November 28, 1785, treaties were made between the Government of the United States and the members of the Five Civilized Tribes, relating to the property and rights of said tribes, all of which tribes were then living east of the Mississippi River. On December 29, 1835, at New Echota, in the State of Georgia, a treaty was entered into by and between the representatives of the United States, on behalf of the United States, and the representatives of the Cherokee Tribe of Indians, on behalf of the Cherokee Tribe, in which treaty the said Cherokee Tribe of Indians sold and relinquished its title to all lands owned and controlled by the said tribe east of the Mississippi River, the consideration for said sale by the said Cherokee Tribe of Indians to the United States Government being $5,000,000 in money and 7,000,000 acres of land, the 7,000,000 acres of land being a portion of what is now occupied by the Cherokee Tribe of Indians in the State of Oklahoma, which was prior to statehood known as the Cherokee Nation.

by the Cherokee Tribe of Indians in the State of Oklahoma, which was prior to statehood known as the Cherokee Nation.

After the treaty of 1835 at New Echota the said Cherokee Tribe of Indians moved to their new location west of the Mississippi River. Similar treaties to the one made with the Cherokee Tribe were made between the Government of the United States and the four other tribes included in the Five Civilized Tribes, namely, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, and Seminoles.

After the making of these treaties all the tribes moved to their new location west of the Mississippi River and established their own governments, and continued under their own tribal governments for many years.

On August 7, 1856, the Creek and Seminole Indians entered into an agreement with the United States whereby the boundaries of the Seminole and Creek lands west of the Mississippi River were defined.

Each of the tribes in their new location established a government, republican in form, having their own code of laws, their own courts, their own legislature, and their own executive department, constituting a complete form of government. They also established a system of free schools and academies for the purpose of educating their people and teaching them to become useful men and women. Their governments prospered, were stable in form, and their laws were rigidly enforced. When the tribes were moved west of the Mississippi River there were and are now many of their members who were men highly educated and of means, having been prosperous in their professional and business life in the old nation east of the Mississippi River. After coming to their new location other treaties of minor importance were made with the individual tribes, embracing the Five Civilized Tribes, for a release or sale of a portion of their lands, but there was still retained a large portion by each tribe, which was valuable land, and many of them engaged in farming and stock raising, as well as other pursuits usually followed by a civilized people.

As many of the members of the Cherokee Tribe and of the other tribes embracing the Five Civilized Tribes were slave owners before they moved west of the Mississippi River, when they emigrated many of these slave owners moved their slaves with them to their new home and new location, and continued to own their slaves up to the time of the beginning of the Civil War, when a great portion of the slaves were released and emancipated by their owners, and in February, 1863, the legislators of the Cherokee Nation passed an act abolishing slavery forever within the Cherokee Nation.

When the lands west of the Mississippi River were patented to the members of the Five Civilized Tribes it was provided the lands of each of these tribes should be held in common by the individual tribe, each tribe holding the land separate and apart from the other tribe; and it was further provided that they should not have any right to sell the lands to any individual or to anyone save and except the Government of the United States, without the consent of the Government of the United States, and when an individual member of the said tribes died all his right in the common property died with him. You may examine all the treaties made prior to the breaking out of the Civil War, and in all of them you will find that the Government of the United States had recognized the Five Civilized Tribes as governments competent to make treatles, and the United States also pledged the tribe the protection of the United States Government, but at no time will you find in any treaty where it is provided or required that there should be any guardianship exercised over the Indians other than that his property should be retained in common and that their tribal relations should continue. You will also find in all of these treaties prior to the Civil War a disposition on the part of the representatives of the Government of the United States to be fair with the Indian and to protect his property as against the interest of the other nations of the world, and you will find that in none of the treaties up to the time of the Civil War had the representatives of the Government of the United States ever attempted to prohibit or prevent the members of either of the Five Civilized Tribes from owning slaves, buying, or selling them. They were treated on an equal footing with other slave owners throughout the United States, and when the War of the Rebellion broke out, so far as the right of a member of either of the Five Civilized Tribes was concerned, they stood on the same level with all other citizens of the United States who dealt in slaves.

This fact is mentioned, Mr. Chairman, in order to call your attention to what I believe to be the greatest injustice and grossest outrage ever perpetrated upon the tribes by the Government of the United States.

By the treaty-making power of the United States Government, and shortly after the close of the Civil War, treaties were forced upon these poor, weak, and defenseless Indians. Under the provisions of the said treaties the tribes were required to give their slaves an interest in the common property of the said tribes and, in some instances, both money as well as land. I feel that all who thoroughly understand the situation will blush with shame when they refer to these treaties. Before calling your attention to the provisions of the treaty, I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that when the war broke out it is true that the Indians living in the section of the country they did, the members of the different tribes divided, some joining the Union Army and some joining the Confederate Army, and served with distinction throughout the entire war. A distinguished member of the Indian tribe who joined the Confederate forces was Gen. Stan Watie, a full-blood Cherokee Indian, and may it be said to his credit that there was never a braver or more gallant commander in the army. His name will ever live in the memory of his people and in the history of his country as a gallant soldier.

After the close of the unfortunate war and during the reconstruction period conditions in the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory were such that it became necessary, or at least seemingly so, that the Government of the United States enter into a further treaty with the individual tribes in their tribal capacity as to the further management of their property and the maintaining of their respective governments in the Indian Territory. The slaves who had been owned by the members of the Five Civilized Tribes had been emancinated and given their citizenship, the same as the other slaves who had been owned throughout the slave States. Some of these slaves belonging to the members of the Five Civilized Tribes had remained in the Cherokee and other nations of the Five Civilized Tribes, and some had enlisted in the Union Army and were scattered throughout the different States of the Union at the close of the war.

I now want to call your attention to the provisions in the treaty between the United States and the Cherokee Tribe of Indians, as well as the treaties between the United States and the other tribes embracing the Five Civilized Tribes, wherein it was provided to give to their ex-slaves, in order to be permitted to reorganize their former governments, holding the same together, and maintain their property rights, an interest in their lands and moneys. In calling your attention to this treaty, I do so in order that the facts may be submitted to a candid and thinking people, and let them see whether or not an injustice, if not a crime, was or was not done these tribes.

Article 9 of the treaty between the United States and the Cherokee Tribe of Indians made July 19, 1866, among other things, provides as follows:

* * They further agree that all freedmen who have been liberated by voluntary act of their former owners or by law, as well as all free colored persons who were in the country at the commencement of the rebellion and are now residents therein or who may return within six months, and their descendants, shall have all the rights of native Cherokees. Provided, That owners of slaves so emancipated in the claves so emancipated.

April 28, 1866, a treaty was made between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians and the Government of the United States, and in article 4 of said treaty the following provision is made:

* * * That while the said freedmen now in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations remain in said nations, respectively, they shall be entitled to as much land as they may cultivate for the support of themselves and families. In cases where they do not support themselves and families by hiring, not interfering with existing improvements without the consent of the occupant, it being understood that in the event of the making of the laws, rules, and regulations aforesaid, the 40 acres aforesaid shall stand in place of the land cultivated as last aforesaid.

June 14, 1866, a treaty was made between the Government of the United States and the Creek (Muskogee) Tribe of Indians, and in article 2 of said treaty, among other things, the following is provided:

* * * And inasmuch as there are among the Creeks many persons of African descent, who have no interest in the soil, it is stipulated that hereafter these persons lawfully residing in said Creek country under their laws and usages, or who have been thus residing in said country and may return within one year from the ratification of this trenty, and their descendants, and such other of the same race as may be permitted by the laws of the said nation to settle within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Creek Nation as citizens (thereof), shall have and enjoy all the rights and privileges of native citizens, including an equal interest in the soil and national funds. * * *

May 21, 1866, a treaty was made between the Government of the United States and the Seminole Tribe of Indians, and article 2 of said treaty, among other things, provided as follows:

* * And inasmuch as there are among the Seminoles many persons of African descent and blood who have no interest or property in the soil and no recognized civil rights, it is stipulated that hereafter these persons and their descendants, and such other of the same race as shall be permitted by said nation to settle there, shall have and enjoy all the rights of native citizens, and the laws of said nation shall be equally binding upon all persons of whatever race or color who may be adopted as citizens or members of said tribe.

I have set out the provisions of the treaties between the United States Government and each of the Five Civilized Tribes, which requires each of these tribes to give to their emancipated slaves in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations a portion of their property; in the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Nations they require them to give their ex-slaves an equal interest in their lands as well as their money. These treaties were forced upon the respective tribes in order that they might reestablish themselves in an organized government of their own, and were forced upon these tribes by a Republican administration.

Shortly after the close of the Civil War, and in these treaties, we find for the first time an effort on behalf of that Republican administration to force the emancipated slaves upon the tribes and give to their ex-slaves an interest in their property. I know not under what theory the administration of 1866 undertook to justify this kind of bold, high-handed tyranny, if not to say robbery. Why it was that they desired to heap this outrage upon the members of the Five Civilized Tribes and force them to take the negroes in their tribes and give them an equal interest in their lands and moneys because some few members of the tribes were slave owners is beyond my comprehension.

capacity as to the further management of their property and the maintaining of their respective governments in the Indian Territory. The slaves who had been owned by the members of the Five Civilized Tribes had been emancipated and given their mated. No one then could realize the value of the property of the Five Civilized Tribes nor tell what the forced division would amount to in dollars and cents. The properties of each of the Five Tribes were held in common by the individual tribe and, as stated herein, could not be disposed of without the consent of the Government of the United States, nor could any individual member sell his interest in the common property. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, when the treaties were made the only thing that we can do is to reach a conclusion by the circumstances and conditions that existed at that time, and, judging by those circumstances and conditions, we are led to believe that this injustice was forced upon these tribes because some few of their members had taken part in that unfortunate war and enlisted on the side of the Confederacy, but I take the position that the gravity of the offense is not justified, if it be true that these negroes were forced upon the members of the Five Civilized Tribes because some few of the tribal members had joined the Confederacy, and that the entire tribe should not be held responsible for the acts of some few of its members.

Passing from the question for the present, Mr. Chairman, of the provisions in the treaties with reference to making the exslaves in the different nations heirs to a portion of the estates of the Indians, I will show you later the value of the property in the said nations and the number of negroes who were enrolled in each of the Five Civilized Tribes, and to whom land and money have been and will be distributed.

The Government of the United States was not satisfied with the provisions in the treatles forcing the negroes on the Indian, but in the latter part of the sixties they passed an act through Congress, without the consent of the Five Civilized Tribes, giving to the railroad company 100 feet of land on either side of its right of way through the entire Indian Territory and 200 additional feet at water stations and towns along the road. This quantity of land was taken from the tribal property for the benefit of the railroad company without any consent whatever on the part of the tribes.

There was also another provision in that act of Congress passed in the latter part of the sixties which provided in substance that the railroad company first to construct its road through the Indian Territory shall have, in addition to the 100 feet on either side of its right of way and additional 200 feet at water stations and towns, each alternate section for 10 miles on either side of its track through the said Indian provided the land should cease to be Indian land and the tribal governments become extinct. Under this provision what is now known as the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Co. has been suing in the different courts of the United States trying to recover many thousands of dollars secure the land. This act of Congress was passed and the right of way granted, and the provision made for the alternate sections, without the consent or knowledge of either of the members of the Five Civilized Tribes, thus making another chapter in the history of the protecting Government, shameful to look upon and unjust to the Indian. This provision was also passed by a Republican Congress under the guise of protection, which was willing to cede to the railway corporation a very great portion of the Indian lands and moneys.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, the importance and magnitude of this grant to the railroad company was not and could not at that time be realized, for the reason that the lands through which the track run were sparsely settled and 100 feet on either side did not appear to be a very large quantity of land; but in after years, when the tribe increased in population and the white settlers began to come in, by permission of the tribal governments and the United States the railroad company which had constructed its track through the Indian Territory began to take possession of its 100 feet and 200 feet additional at water stations and towns, and the land became very valuable for town-site purposes; and it was then the magnitude of the attempted grant by Congress to the railroad company without the consent of the Indian was realized.

This condition existed for many years, and in the early part of the seventies the tribal population had begun to rapidly increase and emigration of the white people, or United States citizens, also begun to rapidly increase, and as the tribal governments had no jurisdiction to regulate the behavior or settle property disputes between the Indians and United States citizens, it became necessary to have some forum in which to adjust their differences, and by different acts of Congress the United States courts at Fort Smith, Ark., Paris, Tex., and Fort Scott, Kans., were given jurisdiction over capital offenses and other felonies committed in the Indian Territory as well as jurisdiction over controversies between United States citizens and the members of respective tribes. As the courts were located a great distance from the Indian Territory, and as the population continued to increase, it soon became necessary that a different form of government should be instituted nearer the people, and in March, 1889, by an act of Congress a United States court was established at Muskogee, Ind. T.—now Oklahoma—having limited jurisdiction. An amended act was passed by Congress May 2, 1890, increasing the jurisdiction of the United States in the Indian Territory and establishing the Territory of Oklahoma, and providing that the United States courts in the Indian Territory should be held in Muskogee, McAlester, and Ardmore, Ind. T. These courts were established and still the population continued to increase, and in March, 1895, by an act of Congress jurisdiction of all offenses in the Indian Territory was taken away from the courts at Fort Smith, Ark., Fort Scott, Kans., and Paris, Tex., and given to the United States courts then established in the Indian Territory.

In the meantime the Indian population had been steadily increasing, and conditions had arisen by which it seemed apparent that a change of government was necessary whereby all citizens should be subject to the same government and the same courts, and that the respective tribes should take their lands in severalty; and in 1893 Congress provided for a commission, which afterwards became commonly known as the Dawes Commission, to proceed to the Indian Territory and try to negotiate a treaty with the respective tribes.

This commission continued to work in the Indian Territory until each of the Five Tribes had entered into an agreement with the Government of the United States, agreeing to allot their lands among the members of their tribe and to abandon their tribal relations and become subject to the laws of the United States. The treaties with each of the respective tribes was different in form to meet the conditions that existed in each of the separate tribes, but all aiming at the same object, viz, to allot their lands and abandon the tribal relations. The Government of the United States, through its representatives, agreed with these tribes to make a correct roll of the citizens of each of the Five Civilized Tribes entitled to receive an allotment of land and participate in the funds. Rolls were made under the provisions of the various acts of Congress relating thereto.

The rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes were finally closed on March 4, 1907, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior on that date—that is, the Secretary of the Interior was restricted by legislation and prohibited from placing the name of anyone on either of the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes after March 4, 1907.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, for fear the matter may slip my mind, I want to say that on the closing days of the making of the roll which closed on March 4, 1907, the Government of the United States, through its representatives, again was not unmindful of the interest of the freedmen or the negroes who had been slaves in the Cherokee Nation, and in considering the names sent in from the Dawes Commission to the Secretary for enrollment, there appeared as applicants for enrollment, as freedmen, on the Cherokee tribal rolls a certain negro family, known as the Riley family. This Riley family of negroes had been living in the Cherokee Nation for a number of years, claiming rights under article 9 of the treaty of 1866, made between the Cherokee Tribe of Indians and the Government of the United States, to be freedmen citizens of the Cherokee Nation—that is, negroes who had been slaves of the Cherokees, but who had been liberated by the voluntary act of their owners or by law, and had either remained in the Cherokee Nation during the war or had returned to the nation within six months after the ratification of the treaty of 1866.

The Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes had taken testimony of witnesses in the Cherokee Nation, and also the testi-mony of witnesses who had resided in Kansas near Girard, and who had known the Riley negroes in Kansas for some time after the ratification of the treaty of 1866. The testimony was voluminous, and had been such that the commission had found on two different occasions that the Riley negroes were not entitled to enrollment as freedmen citizens of the Cherokee Na-This case reached the Department of the Interior some time during the day of the 3d of March, 1907, which fell on Sunday, and the day preceding the day under the law the rolls had to close, the closing day being March 4, 1907. It was my misfortune, as it would seem, Mr. Chairman, to be representing the Cherokee Tribe of Indians as one of its attorneys of record in the city of Washington, D. C., on that date. knew that the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes had decided adversely to this Riley family of negroes, but I further knew that the Riley negroes had filed on certain lands in the Cherokee Nation, a great portion of which was in the new oil field, known as the Alluwe oil field, located in the Cherokee Nation, Ind. T., but now what is a part of Nowata and Rogers Counties, Okla. I further knew, Mr. Chairman, that a great effort was being made to secure the enrollment of these Riley negroes, but knowing, as I did, that the preceding week of March 4, 1907, the Interior Department had affirmed the decision of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes denying the enrollment of a number of freedmen, or negroes, claiming to be entitled to enrollment who had made as strong a case as the Riley negroes, I felt, judging the future by the past, that we had a right to believe these Riley negroes would not be enrolled, but to my surprise when the department passed upon these cases, 20 minutes after 10 o'clock on the evening of March 4, 1907, just 1 hour and 40 minutes before the rolls must close, the decision of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes had been reversed and the Riley negroes had been placed upon the rolls of the Cherokee Tribe of Indians, to the number of 93, in keeping with the provisions of article 9 of the treaty of 1866, thus adding 93 more names that would share in the lands and moneys of the Cherokee Tribe of Indians.

This, too, was done during a Republican administration, and the Cherokee Tribe of Indians, of whom you hear so much talk about being incompetent to manage their own affairs, had to bear the burden imposed upon the tribe by his would-be guardian, and give up to these negroes this great quantity of valuable oil land and money.

These incidents are cited for the purpose of reviewing the history and policy of the Government of the United States toward the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, and for the further purpose of showing that while a great desire is manifested by the representatives of the Government to protect the Indians as against speculators and men who would deprive the Indian of his property, and for the purpose of showing that in past treaties and legislation, if viewed from an unbiased standpoint, every time the question came up for either treaty or legislation or interpretation of a treaty or a law the negro freedman, the ex-slave of the Indian, received the benefit of the doubt and the question was decided against the Indian.

I now want to call the attention of the House to the number of acres of lands that were to be allotted that each of the Five Civilized Tribes owned, the number of allottees to participate in the allotments, giving them by blood, and the number of freedmen and number of intermarried white citizens who were, under the law, entitled to enrollment:

The Cherokee Tribe of Indians at the time they began to take their allotments owned 4,420,067.73 acres of land, and from this amount of land there were reserved from allotments by reason of certain legislation enacted by Congress, heretofore mentioned, with reference to giving right of ways to railroads through the Indian Territory, town-site purposes, and cemeteries, schools, and churches, 22,880 acres of land, leaving subject to allotment 4,397,187.73 acres of land.

This amount of land left for allotment purposes in the Cherokee Nation was to be allotted to the citizens who had been enrolled on the Cherokee rolls and comprised the following: Cherokees by blood, 36,304; adopted Delawares, 197; intermarried white citizens, 286; Cherokee freedmen or negroes, of which I have heretofore spoken, 4,911, making a total entitled to participate in the allotment of 41,698. It is estimated that an allotment of land at the time the allotment was made was reasonably worth the sum of $1,500. The number of freedmen or negroes mentioned above each received an allotment of land in the Cherokee Nation worth $1,500, making a total valuation of land received by the freedmen, or negroes, who were forced upon the Cherokees by reason of the unjust provision of the treaty of 1866, of $7,336,500. Mr. Chairman, what would any gentleman upon the floor of this House say if our Government should to-day say that any class of people in the United States should be required to divide their property in the same way as the representatives of the Government of the United States required the Cherokee Indians to divide with their ex-slaves or negro freedmen? Not only did these negroes or ex-slaves receive this amount of land, but they also received at different times per capita payments of money the tribe had deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and will also, when the tribal affairs are finally wound up, receive their pro rata share of the funds undisturbed.

The Creek Tribe of Indians, at the time they began making their allotments, owned 3,079,094.61 acres of land, from which was reserved from allotment for railroad rights of way, townsite, church, school, and cemetery purposes 16,018.53 acres, leaving subject to allotment 3,063,076.08 acres of land. The number of citizens upon the Creek rolls entitled to receive allotments were: Creeks by blood, 11,909; freedmen or negroes, 6,807; making a total of 18,716 citizens regularly enrolled entitled to participate in the allotments. A reasonable estimate of the value of each allotment at that time was $2,000. Each of these value of each allotment at that time was $2,000. Each of these freedmen or negroes received an allotment valued at $2,000, or of the Union have made cession after cession of land to the a total of $13,614,000, to say nothing of the money they have received from different sources or per capita payments.

The Choctaw Tribe of Indians, at the time they take their allotments, owned 6,953,048.12 acres of land, from which was reserved for railroad rights of way, segregated land, and other purposes 46,253.06 acres of land, leaving to be allotted 6,490,515.06 acres. The number of citizens who were entitled to receive allotment were: Choctaws by blood, 19,189; negroes or freedmen, 5,994. The treaty of 1866 only required them to give their freedmen, or ex-slaves, 40 acres of land. The reasonable valuation at the time the alloting began of 40 acres of land in the Choctaw Nation was $1,000, which makes a total value of $5,994,000 given to these ex-slaves or freedmen.

The Chickasaw Tribe of Indians owned the following number of acres of land at the time they began making their allotments, 4,707,904.28, from which was reserved for various purposes 45,074.89 acres, leaving subject to allotment 4,662,829.39 acres to be allotted to the citizens of the Chickasaw Nation. There were 6,337 Chickasaws by blood, and 4,607 freedmen or negroes, making a total of 10,944 citizens entitled to participate in the lands. The Chickasaws, like the Choctaws, were only required to give to the freedmen, or ex-slaves, 40 acres of land. This 40 acres of land at the time of the beginning of allotment was reasonably worth $1,000, making a total of $4,607,000.

The Seminole Tribe of Indians owned, at the time they began making their allotments, 365,851.67 acres of land; from this amount there was reserved for town sites, watersheds, railroad rights of way, schools, churches, and cemeteries 2,500.88 acres, leaving a balance to be allotted of 363,263.67 acres. The number of citizens entitled to receive allotments were: Seminoles by blood, 2,138; freedmen or negroes, 986. The Seminoles, like the Cherokees and Creeks, by reason of their treaty of 1866, which was forced upon them by the Government of the United States, were compelled to give to their ex-slaves equal rights, and each allotment in the Seminole Nation, at the time the selections were made, was reasonably worth $1,500, making a total of $1,479,000 these freedmen or negroes received from the distribution made of land in the Seminole Nation, and no mention is made of the amount of money they have received from the invested funds of the Seminoles, of which there were several million dollars distributed and several million yet to be distributed.

Mr. Chairman, the attention of the House is carefully invited to the figures given with reference to the Five Civilized Tribes, for the reason they will show that by reason of the terms of the treaties of 1866 made with these weak and defenseless tribes of Indians, the wards of the Government were required to take into their estates their ex-slaves, who had been emancipated, and to give each of these freedmen or ex-slaves in the choctaw and Chickasaw Nation 40 acres of land and in the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes an equal right to share in the lands and moneys. It will show that by the unjust provisions of the treaties of 1866 the land value alone amounts to over $33,000,000, and for what? No consideration whatever. The negroes never paid anything for the land and the tribes were required to part with this enormous amount of property and money without any just compensation, and under such conditions and circumstances that no intelligent man can justify the acts of the representatives of the Government of the United States at that time.

In my opinion, the Government of the United States should repay to the respective tribes the value of the lands that were given to these negroes, who were ex-slaves, and that the funds should be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the respective tribes, and when final disposition of the affairs of the respective tribes are made the money paid per capita to the members of the said tribes. If we want to be generous and to deal with the Five Civilized Tribes fairly, as the representatives of the Government of the United States, I say why do not the representatives of this Government try to correct this grave wrong which has been perpetrated upon these tribes of Indians, wards of the Government? Has anyone ever heard of a recommendation being made by the Department of the Interior or any other branch of the Government desiring to control the property and money of these respective tribes to compensate them for this gross outrage? If the representatives of the Government want to deal fairly with these tribes, I suggest that they commence to correct the great wrongs that have been perpetrated and not continue to try to hold these Indians in their clutches until their landed interest and funds have been exhausted.

I want to speak generally for a minute regarding the bill under consideration, and in a general way with reference to the treaties of the different tribes throughout the United States.

United States by solemn treaties and agreements, which ces-sions aggregate hundreds of millions of acres.

In consideration of these cessions of land, as provided in the several treaties and agreements, the United States has solemuly obligated itself to make certain payments of money to the tribes, to carry out certain other obligations, and to perform certain duties of administration; and, with perhaps only two exceptions, these treaties and agreements do not provide that either the tribes of Indians or the individual citizens thereof shall pay the Government of the United States for the performance of these duties which were undertaken as a consideration for the only thing which the Indians had-landor that the money to be expended in the administration of Indian affairs generally shall be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sale of their lands or from their moneys held in trust by the Government.

Notwithstanding these incontrovertible facts, in the bill now under consideration, H. R. 20728, a bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, there is found, on page 2, lines 15 to 19, inclusive, an appropriation of $215,000 for the survey, resurvey, classification, and appraisement of lands to be allotted in severalty under the provisions of the Dawes Act, which is to be-repaid proportionately out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purposes and to remain available until expended.

This same provision of law is found in every Indian appropriation act passed by the Congress since the act of February 8, 1891 (24 Stat., 388), and, being generally applicable to all Indian tribes and reservations, is, so far as is known or can be ascertained, without justification, without foundation in law or equity, and without the consent of the Indians.

On page 12 of this bill, lines 10 to 16, inclusive, is found an appropriation of $18,000 for the reclamation or maintenance charged on Yuma allotmentsto be reimbursed from the sale of surplus lands or from other funds that may be available, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911.

The act of March 3, 1911, referred to in the bill under consideration, is also an Indian appropriation act, and this act contains a similar provision for the reimbursement of $18,000.

There does not appear to be any agreement with the Yuma Indians with respect to the reimbursement of moneys expended by the Government in behalf of the administration of their affairs.

On page 16 of this bill, lines 21 to 25, inclusive, is found an appropriation of $15,000 for extending the construction and maintaining the Milk River irrigation system on the Fort Belknap Reservation, in Montana, "reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of act of April 4, 1910."

The act of April 4, 1910, referred to is an Indian appropriation act made in the same manner, and there does not appear to be any agreement with the Fort Belknap Indians to reimburse the Government for the expenditure of this money.

On page 17 of this bill, lines 1 to 7, inclusive, is found an appropriation of $200,000 for continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Reservation, in Montana, and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of "under authority of law," "reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910," which provision does not appear to be based on any agreement or treaty with these Indians.

There is also found on page 17 of this bill, lines 12 to 17, inclusive, an appropriation of $100,000 for irrigation on the lands of the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, "reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907," which contains a similar provision. So far as known or can be ascertained there is no warrant or authority of law for charging either the Flathead or the Blackfeet Indians with the cost of this administration of their affairs by

On page 28 of this bill, lines 8 to 26, inclusive, there is found an appropriation of not to exceed $155,000 for continuing the construction of an irrigation system within the Klamath Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, and it is provided "that the entire cost of the project shall be repaid into the Treasury of the United States from the proceeds for the sale of timber or lands on the Klamath Indian Reservation."

So far as can be ascertained, there is no agreement or treaty with these Indians providing that the proceeds of the sale of timber or the proceeds of the sale of their lands shall be used for any such purpose.

On page 33 of this bill, lines 1 to 5, inclusive, is found an appropriation of $75,000 for an irrigation system for the Utes, in Utah, reimbursable under the provisions of the act of June 21, 1906.

So far as can be ascertained, they did not agree or stipulate that their moneys should be expended for this purpose.

On page 34 of this bill, lines 4 to 7, inclusive, there is found an appropriation of $15,000 for an irrigation system on land allotted to Yakima Indians in the State of Washington "reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March, 1, 1907."

On page 35 of this bill, lines 10 to 15, inclusive, is found an appropriation of $50,000 for an irrigation system within the diminished Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, "reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905."

So far as is known or can be ascertained, there is no agreement or provision for the use of the moneys of these Indians for any such purpose without their consent.

The aggregate amount of these so-called reimbursable appropriations in this bill is the sum of $843,000, all of which is without authority and without consent of the Indians and in many instances, it is believed, without even their knowledge. I am against such action and will oppose the use of the Indians' money to provide a position for some political hanger-on who has no interest in the Indians' welfare except as far as his salary goes.

Reference is also made to House Document No. 208, Sixtysecond Congress, which is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, setting forth the fiscal affairs of Indian tribes for the fiscal year of 1911.

This report shows that during that year there was disbursed for salaries of employees $1,799,022.23; for support and civilization, $3,402,660.49; and that the receipts during that year were $10,384,131.18. In some instances the report shows that the expenses were much greater than the receipts and that the balance of the expenses were withdrawn from the general funds of the Indians.

I tried to get a complete report, but failed. Why, I do not know. And because I could not get a detailed statement I want to insert in the RECORD the figures taken from the report of the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911, known as House Document No. 208, as to the Five Civilized Tribes. Speaking of the disbursements with reference to the individual tribes, under the title "Salary of employees," he says of the Choctaws there was expended $70,577.07; Chickne says of the Choctaws there was expended $(0,677.07; Chick-asaws, $29,254.33; Creeks, $39,329.47; Cherokees, $25,206.35; Seminoles, $10,525.33.

Under the caption "Compensation of counsel and attorneys' fees": Chectaws, $25,132.09; Chickasaws, $6,382.62; Creeks, $19,523.80; Cherokees, $6,789.76. There was nothing in the Seminole Netton Seminole Nation.

Now, we come to the next most important item, namely, For support and civilization"—the supporting and civilizing of a civilized people:

Choctaws, $260,805.39; Chickasaws, $106,762.20; Creeks, $58,148.84; Cherokees, $106,132.79; Seminoles, $17,645.53.

I can not give any further explanation with reference to details, nor have I been able to get any further information. I asked for it the latter part of last month from the department, and up to this day I have not had any information as to what portion of that money was spent from the Government fund and what portion was spent from the tribal fund. Therefore the report must stand as it is, unexplained, and the layman must draw his own conclusions as to the funds used to pay the amount.

No one can examine the report of the Secretary of the Interior, contained in House Document No. 208, without blushing with shame or being overcome with laughter. You can read this report over and over, but no living man can tell from the report what employees are paid or for what purpose in either of the Five Civilized Tribes, nor can you tell from the report from what funds they were paid. It does not state whether it is money used belonging to the Government or to the respective tribes. Neither can you tell whether it is money appropriated by Congress or whether it was paid out by the Secretary of the Interior under that same discretion we hear so much about in all Indian legislation. Evidently it was paid under the Secretary's discretion.

I want to call the attention of the House to the amount expended, as shown by the Secretary's report, in the Five Civilized Tribes for support and civilization. The total amount claimed to have been paid was $549,494.75. Quite a handsome sum, and if properly expended would go a long way toward educating, supporting, and civilizing a civilized people, the class of people we are dealing with home are dealing with here.

It is indeed quite a handsome sum for a guardian to expend upon his uncivilized ward, and especially in view of the fact that the guardian has for more than a century recognized his ward as competent to make treaties and to contract with him, by which the ward parted with valuable property, landed interests, and exchanged with the guardian other lands and moneys. Chairman, it is absurd to entertain such a proposition. Why is it that the facts were not stated? The people should know, and can only know by the facts being stated. Every honest, fairminded, intelligent, thinking man who knows anything about the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians knows that not a dollar was expended last year in civilizing these Indians, and it is an insult to the intelligence of the Indian to send such statements to the public. It may sound well for the yellow journals or dime novels, but the statement is untrue, and I take this opportunity to say so. These Indians have been civilized for many years, are highly educated, law-abiding, God loving, God serving, and are as capable of managing their own affairs as many of the representatives of the Government who are sent down there to manage their affairs for them. Money may have been spent by the honorable Secretary of the Interior, but not for support and civilization. Why this term was used he alone can tell, and he alone will have to explain. For more than 100 years the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians have maintained themselves, not receiving a dollar from the Government of the United States except from their own funds and property. They have been self-supporting, and the history of our Government will show this statement to be correct. Yet we are confronted with the report showing large sums of money for civilization of a civilized peoplc. If I may venture a prediction, you will find that the representatives of this great Government of ours will continue to try to civilize these Indians just as long as they have any land and money, and as soon as both are-exhausted their great anxiety to civilize the Indian will cease.

The Indians in the Five Civilized Tribes are anxious to be placed upon the plane of the citizens of any other State, and are anxious to be recognized as having sufficient intelligence to manage their own affairs, just the same as any other United Stafes citizen. All of these Indians are United States citizens, and citizens of the State of Oklahoma, with full power of citi-zenship save and except to handle their own money and landed They are elected and fill some of the highest offices interests. of the State. They are legal voters, members of our juries, and in every way exercise the full functions of the American citizen except as herein stated-when it comes to handling their money and lands. Many of these Indians who are officeholders, lawyers, business men, and professional men in the State of Oklahoma can not sell an acre of their land unless the restrictions are removed by the honorable Secretary of the Interior under existing laws. I insist that the time has come when this condition should cease and American manhood should govern the representatives of the American Government, and these United States citizens, though Indian by blood, should be given all the rights of the true meaning of American citizenship.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota to strike out the paragraph in the pending bill. This motion should not be granted, and I am confident that the gentleman from South Dakota will not seriously urge that this motion be sustained, but will strongly urge the amendment following this paragraph if his motion to strike out the paragraph is not sustained. Instead of striking out this paragraph, if it were permissible at this time, I would amend the same by inserting, in line 23, on page 25, after the comma, following the word "schools," the

The equalization of allotments, per capita payments, and the salaries and accessary expenses of the chiefs, governors, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the gaid tribes of Indians, and the attorneys of said tribes employed under contracts approved by the President of the United States under existing laws. The necessary expenses of the tribal officers herein named to be paid upon itemized youthers presented to the proper disbursing officer of the Government.

So that the paragraph would provide for the paying of tribal officers from the funds of the respective tribes without specific appropriation for the length of time mentioned in this bill. It is necessary that these tribal officers be retained for a time, at least until the tribal affairs have been closed, as there must be some officers to execute the deeds of conveyance and other deeds necessary to be executed in order to properly convey the title in the respective tribes to the property remaining unsold or unallotted.

As to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota, providing for the appropriation of $100,000 to pay a class of employees in Oklahoma, I want to register my protest against the amendment.

I have no fight to make on any individual Indian agent in that country, or upon any district agents, but I do say that there has come a time when there ought to be some reduction of force in that country, and I believe the $150,000 carried in that bill any great quota of officers, and my contention is that the is sufficient to maintain that force and efficiently manage the $150,000 for the work of the Union Agency at Muskogee is business of the Five Civilized Tribes. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] has spoken of a number of accounts necessary to keep the funds in the banks down there. deposits are negotiated from the head office in Muskogee. show me a banking institution anywhere in the world that handles the same amount of money that has as many employees as that institution at the Union Agency, at Muskogee, Okla. You can take any corporation in the world, any banking institution in the United States, and you can manage it, with more accounts, and they will be efficiently managed, and it will not require one-fourth of the help that is being used in the agency at Muskogee. I say to you, it is not necessary to keep all those officers in that country.
